Town-wide septic plan floated at forum

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Alix White, the chairwoman of the health board, took the podium Tuesday night before an auditorium packed with mostly angry people. They were angry not with White but with authorities who put their names in a new high priority septic district.

As White urged the gathering to move past the crisis over the new district and deal with the problems of polluting Cohasset, it initially appeared there could be no meeting of the minds in such a passionate forum.

"We're getting scared right now," said homeowner Allen St. Peter of King Street. "We're scared. I don't have the money."

St. Peter and about 115 others were at the Cohasset High auditorium for a three-hour marathon public hearing called by the health board. The hope was to hash over the rules and regulations people inside the new districts will have to abide by, but that agenda proved somewhat ambitious as the public stayed focus on the injustice of being

Lennon civil case settled

By Sarah R. Coffey
STAFF WRITER

While an out-of-court settlement has brought the wrongful death suit of Marshfield teen Gregory Smith to a close, the pain the Smith family feels on a daily basis has in no way diminished.

"As far as I'm concerned, my son is still lying upside down in the cemetery, wondering how the hell he got there and why this could have happened to him," Donald Smith, Gregory's father, said this week.

Gregory, 18, was killed after his truck hit a utility pole on Summer Street in Marshfield after leaving a graduation party at Cohasset businessman's John Lennon's house on June 22, 1996. He was

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The corporation that owns the Chart House pulled the plug on the restaurant last week leaving a void in the harbor.

The loss of the Chart House hurts as the town embarks on a plan to revitalize Cohasset's "downtown." A grant application for $5K to help plan for better access from the village to the harbor is one of the latest town efforts toward the revitalization project.

"It's a big blow to the whole harbor and village area," said Dean Rizzo, vice president of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce. "The Chart House was great

COHASSET'S WEEK

Town counsel forum tonight

Town Manager Mark Haddad said anyone wishing to submit a citizens' petition article for the March 28 annual town meeting can meet with town counsel to go over the wording.

Town Counsel Paul DeRensis will be available from 4:30 to 7 p.m. tonight (Jan. 8) at the selectmen's office.

Haddad said although DeRensis can determine if the wording is legal or not without meeting with the proponents, he wants to talk with them to make sure "what they're saying is what they're writing."

The deadline to submit citizen petition articles which require 10 signatures is Jan. 12.

The warrant closes Jan. 15.

Those who cannot meet with DeRensis Jan. 8 should submit their articles anyway. Arrangements can be made for DeRensis to conduct another forum if needed, Haddad said.

No victualer's license needed

Town Manager Mark Haddad said a Common Victualer (food) license is not needed at the Dunkin' Donuts at the Exxon Station or Quikava at the Mobil Station. Selectmen asked Haddad to investigate the issue when they were renewing food licenses for 1998 last month.

Haddad said licenses are required only for those establishments that allow for food consumption on site.

Title V, loans and credits

Selectmen want townspeople to know there are low-interest loans and state income tax credits available to residents who have upgraded a septic system that was in failure.

Selectman Diane Sullivan raised the issue this week and said the information about the programs is available at the selectmen's office or health board and will be posted on the bulletin board downstairs at town hall.

The loans — which can range from $1,000 to $25,000, at an interest rate of zero, three or five percent depending on the homeowner's income and market area — are available at various banks throughout the state. The maximum tax credit is $6,000 and is limited to $1,500 in any tax [illegible].

Homeowners with questions should call the Massachusetts Housing Finance Agency (MHFA) at (617) 854-1020 or 854-1333.

Friends warmly remember Michael Kennedy

STAFF WRITER

It reads like fiction but it is all too true.

No one in this small town which has been the centerpiece for two major Hollywood films could have predicted the unspeakable tragedy that ended Michael Kennedy's life last week.

The 39-year-old Atlantic Avenue resident was killed in an accident while playing football on skis Dec. 31 in Aspen, Colorado. Once again, the event propelled the Kennedy family into the headlines and sent TV camera crews back into Cohasset village searching for an angle to a very sad story. However, most found the townspeople close mouthed.

It was the second time in the last year the press descended onto quiet Cohasset. Kennedy was at the center of a firestorm of controversy last summer amid allegations that he has an affair with his children's underage baby-sitter. The baby-sitter refused to testify and the investigation was dropped.

All those contacted this week by the Mariner who were close to the son of the late Senator Robert F. Kennedy were reticent to speak about a man they respected.

What you say often comes out differently in print, they said.

But some spoke hoping the legacy left by a private person who inherited a very public life would reflect his good deeds, love of family and care about a place he called home.

When Mary Larson of North Main Street heads to Columbia next week with the non-profit Gems of Hope dedicated to helping the world's poor, she will be thinking of Kennedy.

"Michael knew of my work with Gems of Hope and talked with (co-founder) Mrs. (Leigh Taylor) Roy and myself about a project he was working on in Columbia. We're flying to Bogota Monday because Michael asked us to get involved," she said.

Polly Logan, 121 Nichols Road, felt strongly enough about Kennedy's generosity to local causes such as the Lightkeepers' Residence project, that she wrote a letter to the editor.

"He was so much a part of Cohasset," said Logan whose daughter went to Milton Academy with Kennedy's sister Courtney, . "He contributed to our causes and when asked to help he'd come or lend his name to the project."

Logan, vice chairman of the state Republican Party, remembered fondly her efforts campaigning for the millionaire businessman Mitt Romney who was trying to unseat Kennedy's uncle, Sen. Edward Kennedy. Michael, who served as his uncle's campaign manager, was considered the brains and energy behind his uncles hard-fought victory over Romney.

"It was such a challenge," Logan recalled about the 1994 campaign against the long-time popular senator.

"He just out did us. Cohasset houses that never had political signs had Kennedy signs. I attribute that to Michael's personality," she said.

Logan also said she respected the Kennedys for admitting their problems and then dealing with them. (Michael Kennedy sought treatment for alcoholism last year and various other Kennedys have had battles with alcohol and drugs.).

Fred Koed of Pleasant Street, Democratic state committeeman, remembered being introduced to Kennedy at a cookout at the Kennedy compound in Hyannisport. At the time, Koed was chairman of the water commission which was embroiled in a water distribution crisis along the "Gold Coast" where blue pipes were installed above ground along part of Atlantic Avenue to improve water flow.

The satellite TV trucks in Hyannisport for Kennedy's funeral were reminiscent of those that descended on Cohasset last summer.

"Michael joked 'when are you going to get those pipes out of my front yard?'" Koed said. "He was such a friendly man. My heart goes out to his family."

Joseph L. Rosano of Howe Road spoke of Kennedy as a family man. Rosano's daughter and Kennedy's daughter were best friends.

"We saw him on a daily basis," Rosano said. "I found him to be profoundly brilliant and compassionate. He loved his children and adored the ground they walked on. They are terrific kids."

Jim Sandell of Stevens Road, knew Kennedy as a neighbor and friend. Michael and his wife Victoria and children moved to Stevens Road in 1986. They bought the Victorian home on Atlantic Avenue in 1991. Sandell served as architect for the Kennedys who renovated the 1890 ocean-front house now assessed at $1 million.

"I remember the really fun times redoing the house with Vicki and Michael," Sandell said. He said Kennedy wanted a really active place so the family room included a basketball hoop but that was interfaced with a painting by Jack Kennedy given to Michael's mother, Ethel, and other family artifacts and heirlooms.

It's not known if Kennedy chose Cohasset because his grandfather used to summer here. It is said that his uncle JFK learned to swim at Sandy Beach.

But Sandell said Kennedy liked Cohasset for the same reasons most of its residents do.

"It's on the seaside and it's a small town," he said.

Kennedy who graduated from Harvard College and the University of Virginia Law School, had been director of the non-profit Citizens Energy Corporation since 1988. He leaves his wife, Victoria and three children, Michael Jr., 14; Kyle, 13, and Rory, 10.

The Kennedy family asked anyone who wants to make a donation to please send it to Angola Education Assistance Fund or Stop Handgun Violence, in care of Citizens Energy Corp., 530 Atlantic Avenue, Boston 02210.

Lennon civil case settled out of court less than a mile from his Emery Road home.

Donald and Donna Smith agreed to an out-of-court settlement Dec. 17 in the wrongful death suit they brought against Lennon. The settlement ends the civil case the couple filed in Plymouth superior court, claiming Lennon was responsible for Smith's death. The Lennon party was a graduation celebration for Lennon's son from Thayer Academy and daughter from college. Smith was a recent Thayer graduate at the time of his death.

Lennon was acquitted July 14 of misdemeanor criminal charges that he provided nine teenagers with beer at the party and contributed to the delinquency of a 16-year-old at the party.

Smith's parents filed the civil lawsuit shortly after Lennon's acquittal.

Smith says the settlement is an admission of guilt.

"If someone was innocent you wouldn't allow an insurance company to settle. I say this is an admission of guilt," he said.

Lennon's lawyer, Ralph Sullivan, said the settlement was between Lennon's insurance company and the Smith's, not between the Lennons and the Smiths, and in no way means Lennon acknowledges responsibility for Gregory Smith's death.

"This wasn't meant to be a settlement for the loss of their son," Sullivan said.

Sullivan said the case was mediated by a judge hired by both families to settle the case out of court. The insurance company decided to settle since the civil case could drag on for five years and be extremely costly for both parties, he said. The Lennons did not attend the settlement mediation session, he said, and the judge advised the Smiths to settle the case.

"He thought it was a 50/50 proposition" on who would win, Sullivan said.

Lennon could not be reached for comment.

Allan Tufankjian, the Smith's lawyer, disagreed with Sullivan.

"The whole case is just a sense of responsibility, standing up and saying 'I was wrong.' That's basically what this case was all about — taking the consequences of what (Lennon) did and admitting to them," Tufankjian said.

Don Smith blasted other attendees of the Lennon's party, especially Marc Rando, a Thayer Academy teacher who testified at the criminal trial that he saw students drinking from a bar in the Lennon's basement.

"He could have stopped the whole God-damned thing," Smith said.

Bernard Hammill, who defended Lennon in the criminal trial, said the agreement is a complete and final settlement between the Smiths, Lennons, and any insurance carrier.

"From my perspective, this is the end of a very unfortunate case for everyone involved. With the end of the litigation phase, maybe it will be possible for the people affected by this case to begin closure and healing," Hammill said.

The Smiths are working with the state legislature to clarify party host's responsibilities, and recently testified before a senate committee trying to change the law. It is because the law is too vague, Smith feels, that Lennon was found innocent at the criminal trial.

"The law has to be more construed," he said. "It has to be clear, precise and to the point — we have to make the judicial system and people and social hosts understand that this is unacceptable."

At the party, a bartender hired by the Lennon's refused to serve the teenagers, but they were allowed to drink of a keg next to the bar, witnesses testified during Lennon's criminal trial in Quincy district court.

When it began to rain, the bar was moved inside, but the keg was left outside and the teenagers continued to drink. Several teenagers also brought their own alcohol to the party, witnesses testified. Adults at the party, including Celtics team doctor Arthur Scheller, testified they played drinking games with several of the teenagers.

Don Smith said the pain would never end for him and his family, and that no amount of money can bring back his son.

"We have trouble living day to day," he said. "We have trouble getting up in the morning and facing the day."

in bringing in a lot of people from out of town. I knew it has not been easy business-wise but I thought their weddings and functions kept them going.

"But I guess that was just not good enough," he said. The chamber had slated its January meeting for the Chart House but subsequently moved it to Kimball's.

The facility which also served as a popular spot for wedding receptions and parties was one of the largest owned by the California-based company, Chart House Restaurants Inc.

So despite its attractive, picturesque location, the restaurant couldn't attract the numbers corporate headquarters wanted.

"It is sad and unfortunate that we have to pull out of Cohasset but the restaurant was not quite popular enough," said Randy McNamara, vice president of operations. "We had to do a heck of a lot of business to generate a respectable return."

The company is selling the business and building and will re-deploy the assets to generate a higher return, said McNamara, who would not disclose the asking price. According to town records, the company bought the restaurant formerly known as Hugo's for $2.75 million in March of 1990. The Border Street property is currently assessed at $2.08 million.

Local restaurateur Ed Kane whose properties include Tosca, Stars and FireKing in Hingham, said increasing competition coupled with the size of the Chart House undoubtedly were factors in the decision to close the facility.

Kane, who hosts an annual Christmas party at the Chart House with 700-800 guests, said parking at the site is also limited. For large parties, the restaurant runs a shuttle service from area parking lots.

Kane said it's healthy for a restaurant to always look busy and thinks 150 to 175 seats is about right. The Chart House could seat upwards of 350.

Steve Cardarelli, New England director of operations for the Chart House, said when it closed, the restaurant employed about 40 people, most of whom were part-time. Some will transfer to the Chart House in Boston.

"This has been an emotional one for us because we've put so much effort into making a go at this location," Cardarelli said. "But it gets to the point when you count your marbles, there aren't enough in the bag."

The Chart House owns 60 restaurants nationwide including ones in places such as Aspen, Colorado; Newport, Rhode Island and the Hawaiian Islands.

"We have many beautiful locations but none as quaint New England as this," Cardarelli said.

He said functions that have been booked will be relocated to other facilities in the area such as local country clubs, the Ramada Inn and Barker Tavern.

On another front, selectmen got some good news this week. The Red Lion Inn whose restaurant has been closed for months could soon undergo planned renovations.

Manager Joe Dooley said he, the architect and engineer had positive meetings with the planning board and the village revitalization committee recently.

"Sounds like things there are going in the right direction," Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan said.

SAFE assails building inspector on CHL

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

It is the duty of the building inspector to enforce the town's zoning bylaws. When someone dumps refuse unlawfully, or stores a car illegally, it is up to Building Inspector Bob Egan to enforce zoning bylaws.

Members of the anti-landfill group Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE) are outraged that Egan has taken no action against Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill for landfilling in an unpermitted area.

SAFE has filed an appeal with the zoning board of appeals (ZBA) asking it to overturn Egan's Dec. 15 decision to take no immediate enforcement action against CHL.

The ZBA was scheduled to discuss the appeal last night (Wednesday, Jan. 7) after the Mariner went to press.

"We are outraged that the building inspector has not yet taken any action even though he heard CHL owner Paul Barry admit on Nov. 18 to the illegal dumping," said SAFE member John K. McNabb Jr.

In a telephone interview, Egan said the building department, the health board and the Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) have done much work behind the scenes over the last two months.

"I think everything will come out in (Wednesday's) hearing," Egan said. "Something will be done at the hearing."

Zoning board Chairman Mark DeGiacomo said the ZBA would hear SAFE's appeal and decide whether Egan took appropriate action.

"He is the zoning enforcement officer, and it's up to him to take action," DeGiacomo said. "The question we have to ask is: ÒShould the building inspector have taken some action and, if so, what action should he have taken?'."

DeGiacomo said Egan has been investigating the violation, and the ZBA could consider that an appropriate response.

If the ZBA determines that Egan should have taken further action, it can remand the decision to him and outline additional actions.

McNabb said Egan should order CHL to cease and desist the illegal activity in question. He is also asking the ZBA to order CHL to immediately remove the material from the unpermitted area.

According to McNabb, a cease and desist order from Egan would effectively require CHL to remove the illegal material.

In the Dec. 15 letter, Egan states he is following legal advice from town counsel to coordinate any enforcement action with the board of health and DEP.

McNabb said he is angry that the health board has refused to release a copy of town counsel's opinion.

"This mysterious town counsel opinion is sabotaging effective enforcement by the town," McNabb said. "Neither Egan nor the board of health have taken any action at all."

McNabb also attacked DEP for failing to take strong action against CHL for previous violations.

"Many times in the past, DEP has protected CHL from enforcement action and have facilitated the growth of CHL," McNabb said. "DEP has been the best friend CHL could ever have."

Last November, McNabb discovered that CHL had filled in an unpermitted area of land. He found a section of material about 200-feet long and up to 50-feet wide in an unpermitted area (Area IV-B) adjacent to a permitted area (Area IV-A).

Paul Barry admitted at a November health board meeting to placing refuse in an unpermitted area of the property.

CHL installed a liner beyond the legal boundary of the landfill and filled to the edge of the liner.

Barry said he was working from a map that showed the boundary consistent with where he filled.

But the map lacked a state authorization stamp, according to McNabb, and was not a valid document.

SITEC Environmental Consultants of Hingham, CHL's engineering consultant, estimates the amount of illegal material at about 1,070 tons on 7,800 square feet of land.

The illegal land-filling violates town bylaws and state solid waste laws, McNabb said.

In a letter to DEP, CHL attorney Anton Moehrke admitted that CHL "inadvertently" placed material in Area IV-B. He also said CHL would remove the material if ordered to do so by DEP.

"Although CHL continues to believe that this minor deviation from the assignment has no adverse effect on the public health, safety of the environment and that removal of the fill actually creates the risk of short term impact from odors during removal," Moehrke said. "It (CHL) is ready and willing nonetheless to remove the overfill and place it in previously approved portions of Area IV-A."

State Senator Robert Hedlund has also entered the debate, asking DEP to conduct public hearings on CHL's proposed 16-foot vertical expansion.

Support increases for local bed and breakfasts

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Visitors to Cohasset looking for lodging could have more options next year thanks to two separate proposals aimed at making it easier for residents to open bed and breakfasts.

Building Inspector Bob Egan has submitted a proposal that would allow bed and breakfast establishments in residential zones by special permit. And a group of citizens is sponsoring an article for the spring town meeting that would allow residents to open small bed and breakfasts in their homes without any permits.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris has been advocating for bed and breakfasts as a positive factor for the community.

Last month McMorris again raised the issue of bed and breakfasts, looking for support from selectmen. Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan opposed the idea, saying that he wouldn't want a bed and breakfast near his home.

At the same meeting, Tanna Kasperowicz presented a citizen's article for review by Town Manager Mark Haddad. Town counsel is checking over the wording of the article so proponents can gather signatures.

Egan has drafted a proposal that would allow bed and breakfasts in any residential zone with a special permit. This would allow a bed and breakfast within a single-family home as long as there are no more than two guest rooms and four guests.

The proposal would require bed and breakfasts to conform to all other zoning bylaws and parking regulations.

The zoning board has rejected previous requests for a variance to allow bed and breakfasts in residential zones because of inadequate parking.

The citizen's article separates the term "bed and breakfast" into two distinct entities. A bed and breakfast home is defined as a single-family, owner-occupied house where three or less rooms are rented for less than 14 consecutive days to the same person.

A bed and breakfast establishment contains more than three rooms.

Under the proposed bylaw, bed and breakfast homes would be allowed by right in residential zones, while bed and breakfast establishments would require a special permit.

Both types of bed and breakfasts would have a maximum 14-day rental period. In both cases, the house must be at least 10-years-old, serve only one meal a day, prohibit parties, accept only advance reservations, prohibit cooking facilities in guest rooms, serve meals to only guests, and keep a daily guest register.

Bed and breakfast homes would not be subject to additional parking requirements. Bed and breakfast establishments would require one parking space for every bedroom.

John K. McNabb wrote the article. McNabb said the parking in bed and breakfast homes was left unchanged (at least two spaces) because there would be little or no actual change in capacity. A person with two guests would have no more parking than a person with two additional adults or grown children living in the home.

McNabb said the zoning board rejected one bed and breakfast request because it would require guests to back out of the parking area. But as McNabb pointed out, the owner currently is backing out of the parking area and the arrangement appears weak.

"It didn't make sense to me," McNabb said. "If you've got two or three people living there and already backing out, and then have two or three bedrooms rented out to guests ó well, what's the difference?"

McNabb said he agreed larger establishments should have more stringent parking requirements.

McNabb based his draft on comparisons to typical bed and breakfasts in other communities throughout the country.

St. Anthony's seeking parish center building

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

St. Anthony's Parish is a crowded place these days. More than 650 children are enrolled in religious classes. And the church needs to hold functions, gatherings, special events and lectures from guest speakers. The trouble is, St. Anthony's doesn't have a parish center and all religious classes and events are held in the church or one small spare room.

But St. Anthony's is hoping to change all that. The Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Boston is proposing a large, self-standing parish center that would house classrooms, speaking rooms and areas for functions and special events.

The zoning board of appeals was scheduled to discuss the proposal last night (Wednesday, Jan. 7) after the Mariner went to press.

The proposed building would sit on church-owned property adjacent to the parish at 6 Summer St.

The land for the proposed building sits in a coastal flood plain and would require a variance from the ZBA.

Pastor John Mulvehill said the proposed building is needed to serve rapid membership growth at the parish.

"The parish is growing and large numbers of families with small children are joining," Mulvehill said. "We're baptizing around 100 families a year."

Mulvehill estimated that 75 percent of students at Cohasset public schools are Catholic. He pointed out that St. Anthony's may be the only parish in town without a parish center.

Mulvehill would not discuss the specific size or layout of the proposed building. He said he would wait to see what town boards had to say.

"If we can't go ahead with the plan as it is proposed, we will have to redesign the building according to the specifications of the town's boards," Mulvehill said.

Zoning board Chairman Mark DeGiacomo said Building Inspector Bob Egan inspected the plans and maps and determined that the proposed building would be in the flood plain.

DeGiacomo said he has heard that the applicant may try to argue that the site is only technically in the flood plain.

Mulvehill said he has talked to residents who have confirmed that they have never heard of any flooding on the site in the last 80 to 90 years.

DeGiacomo said St. Anthony's will still need to meet the criteria set forth in the town's bylaws to obtain a variance.

AROUND TOWN

SALLYANN CHATTERTON 383-0560

ABOVE—Dick and Ginny Abbadessa visit with former Cohasset residents, Don and Becky Richards, in Naples, Florida.

HELLO TO RICHARDSONS

Let's begin by saying hello to a dear couple living in Florida, one that many will remember! Hi, Don and Becky Richardson! During a recent trip to Florida, Dick and Ginny Abbadessa visited with the former Cohasset residents at their lovely home in Naples. They still receive the Mariner each week to keep up with all of the happenings in Cohasset! By the way, doesn't Dick look great? Retirement really must agree with him!

SCHOOL CHIEF IN MAINE

Anyone associated with Cohasset schools in the '50s and '60s (maybe even into the '70s) will be pleased but not surprised to hear that Tom Perry has just been named superintendent of the "Union 87," Maine, schools that include the towns of Orono and Veazie. Orono, of course, is the University of Maine community. Tom is the son of Marian and the late Henry B. "Hank" Perry and grew up, along with brother Charles, in Cohasset. Hank was the teacher placement officer at Boston University in those days and saw to it that Cohasset had "the pick of the crop." He was an early sponsor of the Regional Vocational School and Cohasset's representative on the board. There is a long history of schools in the family. Hank's father (Tom's grandfather) was superintendent in Leominster. Hank later was assistant superintendent of Winchester schools before retirement to Orono. Marian was a school secretary in Cohasset for a number of years and was well known as the popular hostess at the old Hugo's, now the Chart House. Tom has been with the Orono school system since 1971, and from 1980 through last year was the middle and high school principal. Since June he has been serving as interim superintendent.

NEW GRANDPARENTS

Phil and Joan Shockman have ut, a new "long distance love," it's ut their granddaughter, Sofia Carolyn Shockman! Sofia is the daughter of Carl and Mari Carmen Shockman. She was born Dec. 14 in Mexico City where Carl and Mari Carmen live. You had better believe that there will be frequent trips to Mexico City to see that little treasure! And, hopefully Carl and Mari Carmen will bring little Sofia Carolyn to Cohasset before long, so that we can all take a peek at her!

HONOR ROLL AT NEWMAN PREP

Two Cohasset students have been named to the honor roll at Newman Preparatory School in Boston. In order to receive this honor, a student must maintain an average of 856 or higher in each major subject for the first half of an academic semester. Hats off to Natalia P. Perova, daughter of Dr. Poi Perova; and Caitlin M. Welby, daughter of Thomas and Elaine Welby. If this excellence in achievement continues for the entire fall semester ('til Jan. 16) these two scholars will be appointed to the dean's list, so watch for their names again very soon!

BRAND NEW BABY BOY

Congratulations go to Andrew and Bettina Koropey; and we will be happy to tell you why — they have a brand new baby boy in their lives, Adam Jaroslaw Koropey, born Dec. 2! Adam's maternal grandparents are Tom and Donna Bianco from Providence, R.I.; his paternal grandparent is Nina Koropey of Johnston, R.I.

HIGH HONORS AT HOLDERNESS

Alexander Gaston, a junior at the Holderness School, has been named to that school's fall semester high honor roll, posting an academic average of better than 90. This fall Gaston also served as a crew leader in Holderness' on-campus student jobs program, sang in the school chorus, and carried out a program of specialized study in music. Alexander is the son of Mr. and Mrs. John M. Gaston III of Cohasset.

MAY I PRESENT

Sallyann Chatterton

Now that the hustle bustle of shopping is over, and the cold weather is really settling in, the first thing that comes to mind is making soup! Nothing tastes better on a frigid day, and the aroma filling the home is a welcoming one! Everyone has their favorite recipes, two that I often use are "Cream of Squash Supreme" (an easy recipe, and a delightful prelude to a winter dinner); the other is "Chicken and Avocado Soup," a recipe that I got from Sue Megathlin (Sue says this soup is to Mexico City what onion soup is to Paris.). Try them!

CREAM OF SQUASH SUPREME

1 package frozen cooked squash
1 can condensed chicken broth
1 cup heavy cream
1 can whipped topping
salt
nutmeg

Defrost squash in saucepan, slowly mixing with wooden spoon. Stir in chicken broth. Gently blend. Over low heat gradually stir in heavy cream and cook slowly until heated through. Season to taste with salt and white pepper. Serve very hot; garnish each serving with a spoonful of whipped cream sprinkled with nutmeg. Serves 4-6

CHICKEN AND AVOCADO SOUP

6 cups chicken stock
1 whole chicken breast
2 onions sliced
1/2 teaspoon ground coriander
1/2 teaspoon oregano
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/2 teaspoon freshly ground pepper
1 ripe avocado
lemon wedges (optional)

Pour chicken broth into pot. Add chicken breast , onions and seasonings. Bring to boil, reduce heat and cover — poach in simmering stock for 20 minutes. Remove chicken breast and let it cool. Strain stock into a saucepan and set aside. Discard cooked onions. When chicken is cool and firm to the touch, peel off the skin and cut into small julienne strips. Just before serving, stir the strips into the soup and heat. Check seasonings. Peel the avocado, cut into thin strips and add to soup. The slices will float on top. Serve with lemon wedges. Serves 6.

Evan Cutler, a ninth-grade student at the Fessenden School in West Newton and son of The Rev. E. Cohasset's loss was surely Fesssenden's gain in the world of soccer. Congratulations, Evan!

COHASSETOPOLY IS GREAT

Before we go any further, did you receive the game for Christmas? Of course it is Cohassetopoly we are referring to — it is wonderful! Even our 8-year-old granddaughter loved recognizing all of the "spots around town!" If you don't have it yet, you can purchase it at the South Shore Community Center or at Pastimes (on Chief Justice Cushing Highway)! Have fun!

EDITORIALS & OPINIONS

Thanks for speaking up

Before 1998 gets too far along, we still have some important 1997 business to attend to.

Some of the following names may be familiar to you, others may not be. But the people attached to these names all have one thing in common: they wrote at least one letter to the Cohasset Mariner in 1997.

A few wrote thank you's to the people of Cohasset or organizations for their help or support; others complained about a decision or lobbied to have their views considered; while still others educated us about programs, problems or activities.

But no matter what the subject — putting pen to paper to share your views with your fellow citizens is important. The First Amendment is close to our hearts here in the newspaper business and at no time do we appreciate it more than when ordinary citizens, like those listed here, take advantage of their Freedom of Speech. And what better vehicle is there than your local paper?

So here at the Mariner, we salute the following local citizens:

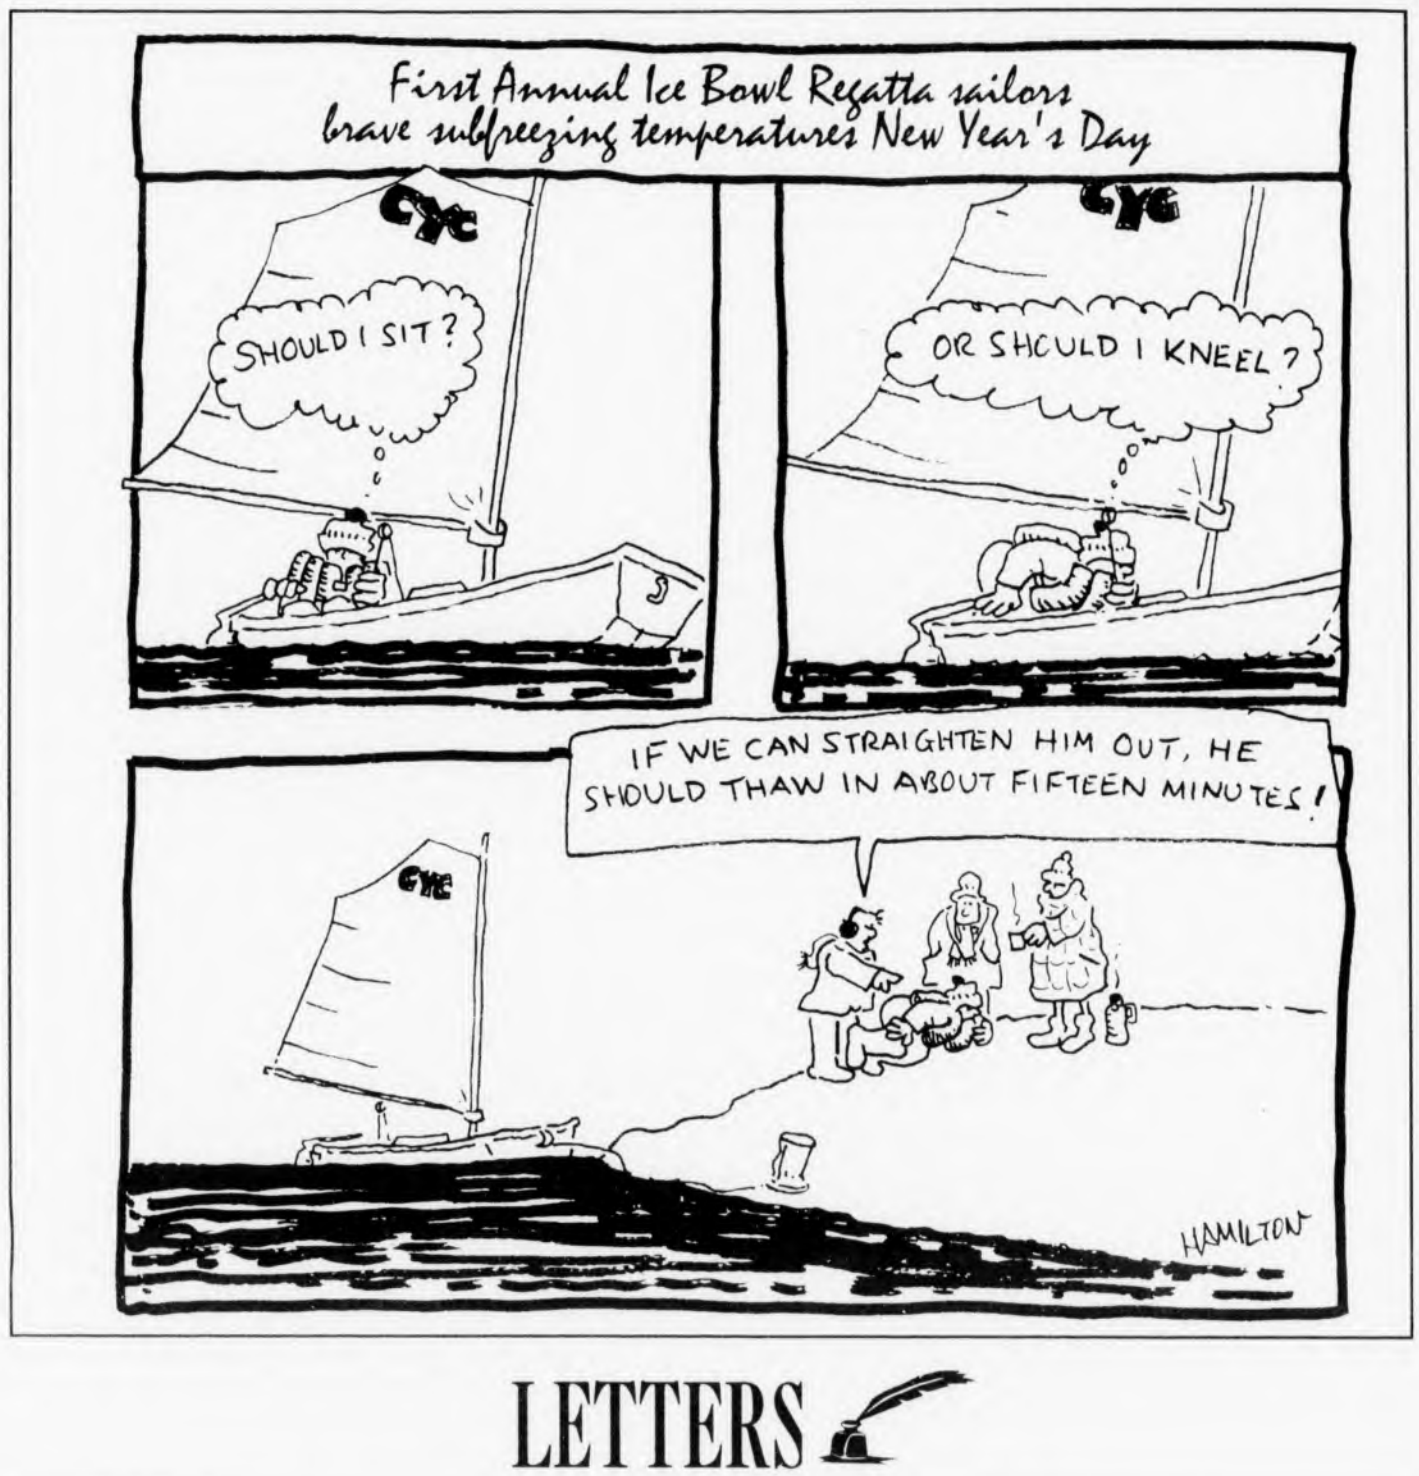
Sometimes it takes a good dose of courage to let your voice be heard, but we think it's worth it. Often one voice is all the inspiration needed to propel others to action.

This year, the Mariner received 136 letters to the editor from 99 different people, groups or organizations.



To those of you that have thought about writing and haven't, please reconsider. To those whom we hear from on a regular basis, keep writing!

There are lots of weeks to go in the New Year — which will be filled with events, decisions, happenings and controversy.

Kennedy's compassion appreciated

To the Editor:

As one who has raised money in Cohasset for a myriad of causes, I wish to commend Michael Kennedy for lending his name, contributing and appearing at many fund-raising events in Cohasset.

Just as Princess Diana worked for worthy causes so did Michael Kennedy, and Cohasset will miss his compassion for helping people and charitable organizations.

We hope all Cohasset and South Shore residents will be as giving and generous.

Historical record set straight

To the Editor:

To keep the historical record accurate about the first Minot's Ledge Lighthouse that collapsed in 1851, it should be pointed out that, geographically, Minot's Ledge and its lighthouse are within the boundaries of Scituate rather than Cohasset. The town and county line run some distance to the northwest of the ledge, as shown on U.S. Coast and Geodetic Survey charts over the years. Thus the National Register of Historic Places assigns the lighthouse to Scituate, Plymouth County, and the Massachusetts Historical Commission places it in the Scituate section of its statewide Survey of the Historical Assets of the Commonwealth. The former U.S. Lighthouse Shore Station for Minot's Ledge Lighthouse at Government Island is, of course, assigned to Cohasset in both the National Register and in the State Survey. However, contrary to sentiment, the lighthouse "belongs to" neither town, being property of the U.S. government.

Thus when the first lighthouse collapsed in April 1851, the two assistant keepers, Wilson and Antoine, fell into the sea in Scituate. Keeper Antoine's body was recovered at Nantasket, and Keeper Wilson's at Gull Rock, off the Glades in Scituate, where he evidently had expired during the night. Regarding the two assistant keepers; no entry of their identity is made in Davenport's voluminous "Genealogies of the Families of Cohasset." Their origins are not shown, and it is not certain they actually were "Cohasset Boys." Neither is there any record of their deaths in official town vital record books at town hall, either for 1851 or as late reported deaths in subsequent years.

Without demeaning the quality of bravery of the two assistant lighthouse keepers, it should be pointed out

'Pay as you throw' goes too far

To the Editor:

Selectman Merle Brown's published response to the resident concerned about the impact of the proposed "pay-as-you-throw" trash program prompts this reply. It is not just our senior citizens who have cause for concern over this proposal. Indeed, the adverse impact of the "buck-a-bag" system on most residents far outweighs the potential benefit.

The stated justification for the program is to increase the town's recycling rate. However, Cohasset has already received an "A" grade from the state in this regard. Mr. Brown concedes that we already have recycling programs for all marketable materials. Although similar programs in other communities are said to have dramatically increased recycling rates, given our good track record, it is not clear that Cohasset has the same margin for improvement.

The program's flaws are many. When the "buck-a-bag" proposal was originally floated, Mr. Brown suggested that the program would be revenue-neutral based on a supposed "average" Cohasset family throwing away one (!) bag of trash per week. Clearly this assumption was incorrect, and for a large majority of Cohasset families, the proposed plan would double or triple the cost of trash disposal. The plan is a tax hike, plain and simple.

Mr. Brown describes the proposed plan as "fair" and "equitable;" however, as in most political debates in this town, those words are most often used by those getting the better end of the deal. The program would charge residents by the volume of trash they generate, when the cost to the town of disposing of that trash is based on weight. Mr. Brown admits that his trash compactor would enable him to "cheat" the program by disposing of more trash weight per dollar bag than could other residents without such means. Mr. Brown does not recommend that we all go out and buy trash compactors, but many residents would save much more by such a purchase than they would by increased recycling. Yet by buying and installing trash compactors, we do nothing to reduce the weight of our trash, and therefore save the town no money. And imagine the mess from all those overfilled bags breaking!

The special bags required under the proposed program would be available from only a limited number of sources. As much as we all want the village merchants to prosper, it is not always convenient for residents to stop and purchase trash bags in the village. What are we supposed to do with our trash on Sunday morning when the store's not open? Drive to the transfer center to buy a bag, then back home to pack up the trash? The extra driving involved in obtaining the bags is inconvenient and certainly not environmentally friendly.

For those residents who generate less than one bag of trash per week, the proposal represents a public health risk. We should not encourage residents to store garbage in their homes for weeks at a time. The proposed plan also provides a tangible incentive to dump trash illegally.

Mr. Brown is a hard-working and dedicated public servant. When it comes to garbage however, he seems to be a bit obsessed. Remember, Mr. Brown was the champion of the proposal to build a penthouse with a balcony overlooking the town dumpster to increase compliance with the recycling rules. That idea was just silly. This one's going to cost us real money, without a clearly defined benefit.

There's a limit to how far the town should go to encourage noble goals like recycling. For example, no one is proposing a town-wide ban on meat tray liners or plastic wrap, or a deposit on all newspapers. The "pay-as-you-throw" plan goes too far in micromanaging a town expense. What's next, tuition bills for the public schools? Toll booths on Main Street?

Pay as Throw, a fair system

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Chisholm:

It is unfortunate that you feel you will be "bagging more bucks" by going to the Pay-As-You-Throw trash disposal system. Please bear with me as I try to explain why I feel that this is a fair and equitable environmentally aware system.

Many local towns, such as Scituate and Hingham, will be closing their landfills in the near future as required by state law. These towns are now finding out what we learned back in 1988, that it is very expensive to get rid of trash. The town of Cohasset (you, the taxpayer) pays $85 a ton to have our trash hauled to Semass. Towns that are closing their dumps/landfills now, will be paying more than $100 a ton to dispose of their trash.

In response to your statement on "Other towns have rubbish pick-up included in their lower-than-our taxes:"

One town next to us, Norwell, has trash pick-up. Their tax rate is set at $15.87/$1,000. The town of Cohasset's new tax rate is set at $15.05/$1,000. Some towns that have curbside trash pick-up have gone to the Pay-As-You-Throw system to help stem the rising cost of trash pick-up. There have been years of complaints and concern regarding the trash barrels on the side of the road, the mess that is left behind by the trash truck and drivers dodging the barrels that roll onto the streets. This situation usually remains all day as most households put their trash out at curbside very early in the morning and do not collect their trash receptacles until late in the day or early evening.

You mention that you "Recycle in a reasonable way. Most People do. I agree with you, most people do a good job at recycling. I know we can do better and so does the state. The state of Massachusetts has set a 47-percent recycling rate by the year 2000. If you look in the trash trailer any time of the day you will see many items that should have been recycled. I know it is very easy to say, the little bit I did not recycle will not make a difference, but when all 2,600 households say the same thing, you can see it does make a difference.

Due to the hard work of the recycling committee, we have been able to get a high rating from the state on our recycling but we are not doing enough. In fact we have gone down from 37 percent last year to 31 percent this year. Although we have been getting an "A" for our recycling effort, we are still a long way from the 47 percent the state is looking for by the year 2000. We as a town, probably have one of the highest available amount of items that people can recycle. We recycle everything there is to recycle at this time. When other things become recyclable in the future, we will be sure to put them on the list.

As to your comment "We don't have to be Number One!" We on the recycling committee don't feel we have to be Number One, but we do strongly feel that we are responsible to the town and the taxpayers, to do our best to keep the cost down. Our goal is to reduce the trash going to Semass and to make the cost fair for everyone. Is it fair for an elderly family of two who bring one small bag of trash a week to the Recycling Transfer Facility (RTF), to pay the same as a family of four who create more trash? Your last comment, "After paying all these taxes, do they have to "bag" us with this cheap type of program?" The recycling committee doesn't consider this a "cheap type of program." We, as volunteers, have attended many seminars (at no cost to the town) on the Pay-As-You-Throw program and have seen first hand that the system does work. There are more than 75 cities and towns in the Commonwealth that have the Pay-As-You-Throw system and every one of them has reduced the cost of trash significantly.

Last year we sent more than 2,800 tons of trash to Semass, at $85 a ton, that is $238,000 to dispose of our trash. That amount plus the paid help at the RTF gives us a budget of more than $300,000 a year. If we could reduce our tonnage to Semass by just 15 percent, that would be a cost saving to the town of $35,700. Most of the people we have talked to in other towns feel this is a very conservative figure even with all the recycling we do.

Lack of meeting attendance explained

To Alix P. White, Chairwoman, Board of Health:

This is in reply to your letter (health board) dated Dec. 24, 1997 in which you requested Sewer Commission's participation in the public meeting.

The Sewer Commissioners will not attend the public meetings for two reasons:

- On Dec. 9, 1997, the Sewer Commission held a three-hour public meeting in the town hall auditorium, virtually all of which was devoted to the expression of various concerns by residents of the priority of site districts which were created by Article 13 of the STM on March 29, 1997. The Sewer Commission is currently evaluating residents' comments to see what aspects fall under the jurisdiction of this Board. In view of the fact that Article 13 was adopted by the STM (by a unanimous vote) to address and minimize the town's legally binding requirements under the Second Amended Final Judgment and has been entered at Suffolk Superior Court as a part of the Town's Second Amended Final Judgment with the Commonwealth, no further purpose can be served by a second rehash of these concerns.
- Second, and most important, the implementation of the provisions of Article 13 is the responsibility of the Board of Health. As stated in your letter of Dec. 24, 1997 the purpose of the public meeting is "to finalize the rules and regulations of the on-site wastewater management plan's two priority areas." We expect that the BOH will proceed with this stated purpose which does not require input from the Sewer Commissioners as it lies outside the area of our professional responsibility and jurisdiction.

The sewer commissioners do have the following comments which we hope will be helpful:

Further to the BOH's proposed town wide plan presented by them and then withdrawn by them at the March 29, 1997 STM, a year has elapsed over which time the BOH may have fine tuned its plan. It is entirely within the BOH's domain to reintroduce their plan for approval at this year's town meeting in March, 1998, with the objective of pursuing the stated "economic and environmental parity." In the interim, the current Priority Area Plan and previously established funding avenues (i.e., $3 million) should prove to be an important first step and testing ground for any future town-wide plan.

We have also just now received a copy of your November 18, 1997 Rules and Regulations. We shall study this document over the next few weeks. Upon a cursory review, the Financial Assistance section items No. 7 and No. 8, relative to funding in excess of $20,000 do appear to address one of the primary concerns recently expressed by residents which the Sewer Commissioners were evaluating. Although this is desirable, it is contrary to the original authorization under Article 13. In discussions with Town Counsel, a warrant article would have to be prepared to authorize the increased level of funding and to amend the Home Rule Petition currently before the legislature enabling the town to establish a supplementary loan program. Such a warrant article, if offered by the BOH, would in all probability have the full support of the Sewer Commissioners.

Attendance at meeting urged

To: Ted Guild, Sewer Commissioner:

Knowing of your interest in the town's wastewater management plan as dictated by the state and negotiated by the Cohasset Sewer Commission, the Cohasset Board of Health urges you to attend the public hearing Tuesday, Jan. 6, to be held in the Cohasset High School auditorium.

The purpose of this hearing is to finalize the rules and regulations of the on-site wastewater management plan's two priority areas: Lily Pond and Little Harbor. The Sewer Commission as part of its Final Amended Agreement negotiated these areas, comprised of 136 homes, for Judgment. In the Judgment, they expanded the sewer district to include North Cohasset and a larger portion of the Central Cohasset Sewer District. In return, they were required to create an on-site wastewater management plan, which would then be implemented by the Board of Health.

In the winter and spring of 1997, the Board of Health held a series of public hearings to identify priority areas for on-site septic systems and to create an on-site wastewater management plan. This plan was completed for the March 1997 Annual Town Meeting. The premise of the Board's plan was economic and environmental parity between all on-site septic systems and the sewer districts. This was largely ignored in the negotiations between the Sewer Commission and the State. In its place, two priority areas were created. Twenty-three homes in the Lily Pond area were chosen due to their proximity to the water supply. One hundred thirteen homes around Little Harbor were chosen due to their proximity to a recreational body of water and the demonstrated high failure rate in the area.

On November 18, 1997, the Board of Health held a public hearing on the final Wastewater Management Plan. The Board's consultants, SEA Consultants, presented draft regulations to approximately 50 homeowners from the mandated priority areas. It should be noted here that the homeowners were not happy. They expressed concern that they were "singled out" for mandatory inspections and septic system up-grades within two years if they failed. The Board of Health found itself responding to policies for which it had had very little input. Again, this plan was dictated by the state and negotiated by the Sewer Commission. The Board of Health must now implement it. This cannot be done without your help and support.

Historical record set straight that in fact they were trapped on the doomed lighthouse with no means of escape, since the station boat had been wrecked by a previous storm some time before. Head Lighthouse Keeper Bennett was ashore in Cohasset at the time of the great storm, having gone to Boston to arrange for a replacement boat for the lighthouse. Brave men they were, but there was no safe way the two assistants could have abandoned the doomed lighthouse, had they felt desire to do so.

As to a recent statement that Capt. Swift, architect of the first lighthouse, "didn't care," that simply is not true. In letters to Cohasset Captain John Wilson as early as 1849, Swift expresses concern about the structure, asking "how has it weathered the winter storms?" In January 1851, barely three months before collapse of the tower, he asks Capt. Wilson, "Now please tell me the real condition of the light, is it up or is it down?" Capt. Swift, who in later years was awarded an honorary doctorate by Harvard College for his outstanding career as a military and civilian engineer, is known to have felt that the 30'-diameter of Outer Minot's Ledge was not adequate to support an iron pile lighthouse. Those who "didn't care" appear to have been the bureaucrats of the old U.S. Lighthouse Establishment, who failed to heed the warnings sent to them by Head Keeper Bennett and by his predecessor Head Keeper Isaac Dunham, himself a lighthouse keeper of long experience.

The history of the early U.S. Lighthouse Establishment clearly shows the service had more than its share of brave men who kept good lights in the face of mortal peril. Assistant Keepers Wilson and Antoine were among those who lost their lives in performance of their assigned duties, and there were others elsewhere. Let us make certain that the historical record is kept as accurately as documented facts allow, and that commemoration conforms to those facts.

Reversal of monument decision sought

Board of Selectmen
Dear Mike, Merle, Ronnie, Nan, Dianne:

David vs. Goliath on Dec. 8 and Goliath won this time — but at the same time I feel that the town lost. How did the town lose? They lost in the following ways:

Government Island is a special place in Cohasset. It's interesting — it's beautiful in different ways during different seasons. It's not large in area relative to strolling, walking, sitting, enjoying, resting, eating, studying, talking, hearing, discussing, listening and relaxing. Like any park area it's meant to be used for all of the above. It's not meant to be filled with memorials. If this were the intent, we'd have a cemetery and we will if we keep approving memorials to people, happenings etc. We could propose rnemorials which would be historically justified and of the size to engulf Government Island. You don't want this — we don't want this — no one wants this. We want — people want space to think and enjoy.

If I were to ask all of you five members of the board where this memorial is to be located you'd give me five different locations — no one knows for sure and no one realizes the space that this will take up. I'm making a pattern 12 feet (12') in diameter to take down to Government Island and place on the ground — any one of you is welcome to come down and see what space it takes and the space it takes is too much — much too much for Government Island.

Bob Davenport at the Dec. 8 meeting mentioned the word symmetry. You know what it means — "balanced proportions." This monument will, no matter where it is placed, spoil the symmetry — the beauty of Government Island. Add to this the fact that according to the proposal the monument will be of polished black granite. Mike asked about this. He was concerned and rightly so — this will be so out of place with the tone of the island. It'll be like a sore thumb. I don't dispute the fact that black granite is beautiful but in the right setting.

Why am I writing? What am I asking you to do?

First, I'm writing because I'm concerned about this proposed monument which I think is unnecessary. True, these two men Joseph Antoine and Joseph Wilson, assistant lightkeepers, should be remembered but not in this way. The Government Island Study Committee and the Cohasset Historic Commission have a proposal which has not been completely explored.

Second, we think you should temporarily reverse your decision. Put a hold on any action and let these two boards meet with you to give you their thoughts, ideas and suggestions in their entirety.

COHASSET MARINER

Skippers search for that winning feeling

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

A couple of back-to-back wins is all the Cohasset High girls basketball team needs to get this season on the winning road says coach Cori Hughes.

"All this team lacks is confidence," stated Hughes. "It's a very young team and a couple of wins would go a long way towards building the kids confidence."

Going into this week, the Cohasset team was carrying a 1-4 record. The lone win was against Scituate High, 67-41. At that point Hughes thought the youngsters might be on their way. All they had to do was topple their next opponent, Hingham High.

Needless to say that did not happen. In fact, Hingham ended up trouncing Cohasset, and at the same time set the confidence scale back several notches.

"I really like this team. I feel the kids and I are on the same page. For many of the kids we have been together since they were in the seventh grade. They know my style and they know what I am out to accomplish."

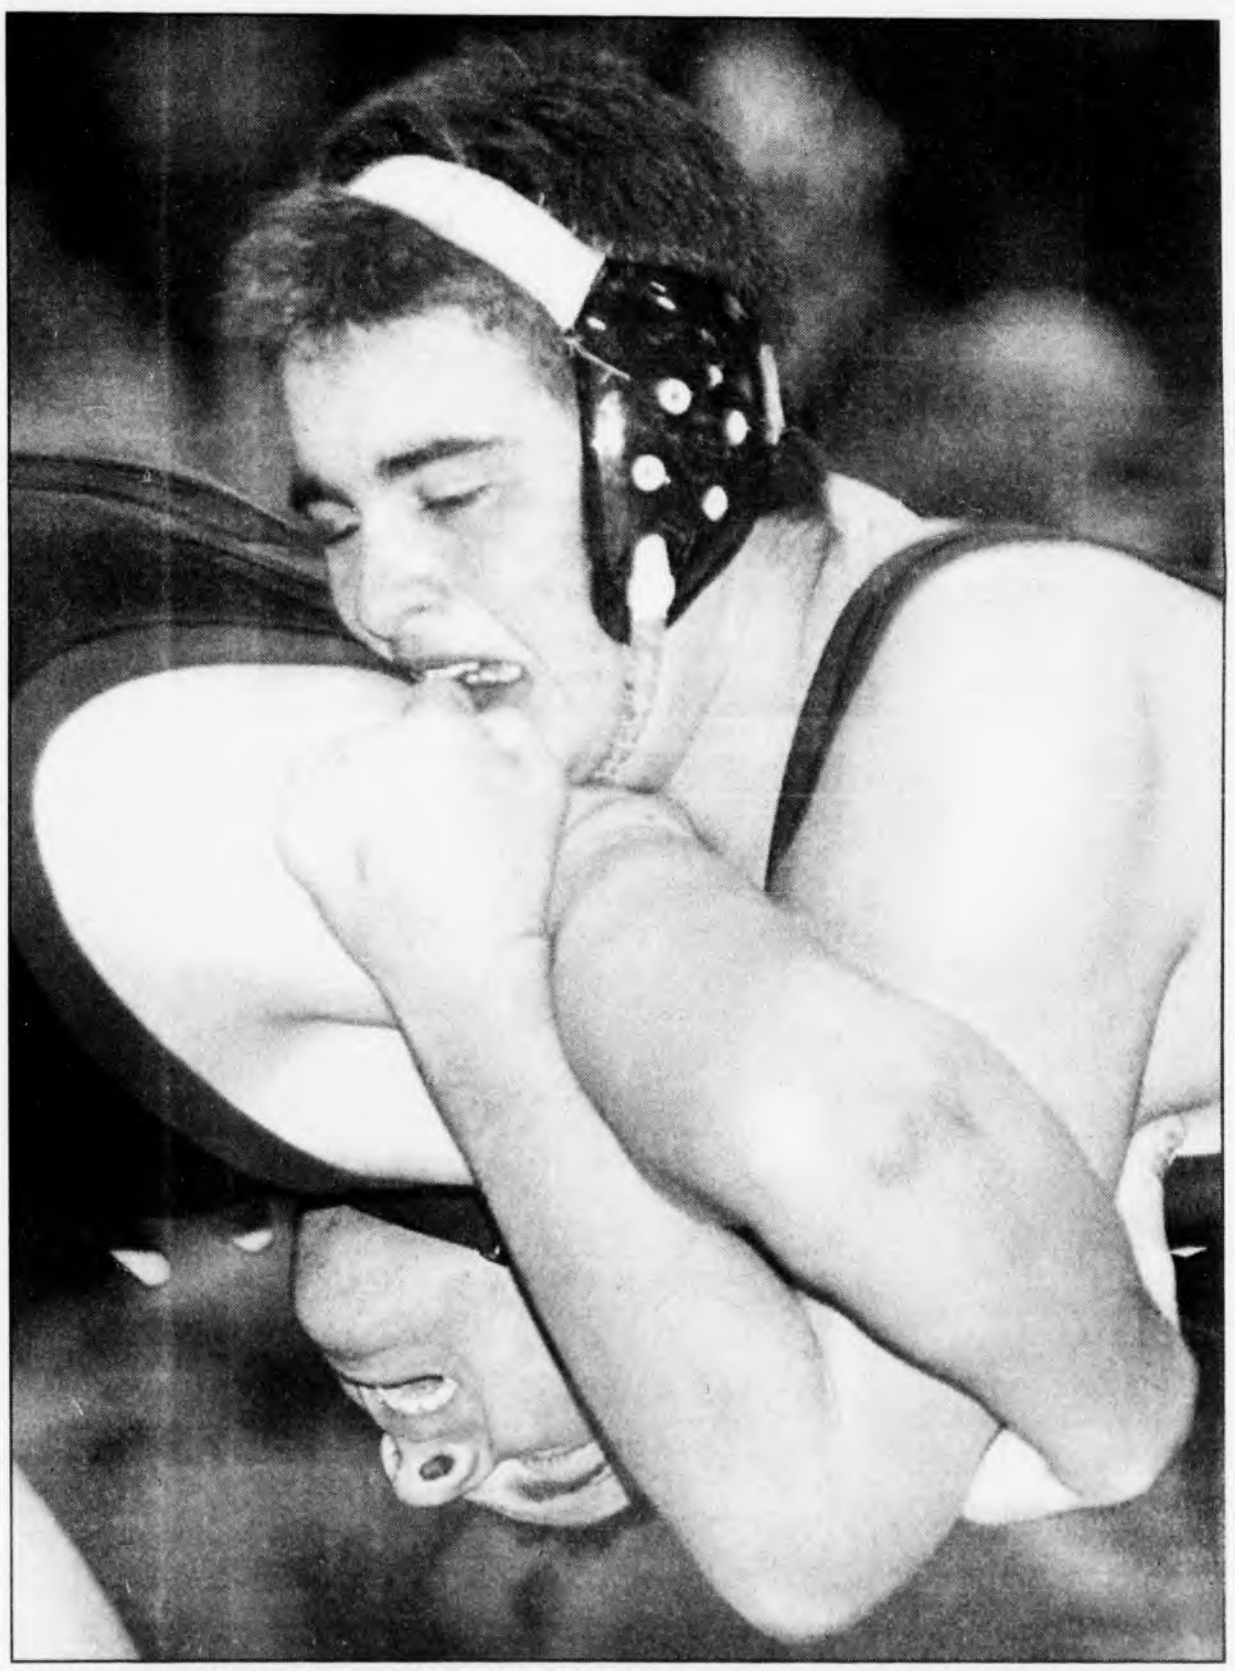
CHS COACH CORI HUGHES

As Coach Hughes sees it, the toughest week on the schedule is the one the team started Monday. This is the week the Skippers have to gain some confidence.

The first team up for Cohasset was a surprisingly strong Abington club, which Cohasset was scheduled to face on Monday.

Next up was the year-in and year-out powerhouse Norwell High team on Wednesday evening (tonight). However, some of the Norwell power may have been short circuited due to the loss of two stars from last year's team.

The third encounter was Rockland High, new to the South Shore League, but a bigger and stronger team none the less. The Rockland five will be visiting Cohasset on Friday night.



Coach Hughes finds herself with just two seniors on the team, one of them joining the team for the first time.

To date, the best all-around player on the club has been sophomore Alex DeRosa. The guard has been averaging 17 points per game and has also been a force on the defensive end.

"I'm really excited about DeRosa's defensive play," said coach Hughes. She has improved that end of her game almost to perfection. She played a lot of basketball this summer and she also plays AAU ball."

The fifth year coach sees her best defender on the club as Alyssa McNamara, a point guard. "She was a big factor in our Scituate win," says coach Hughes. "With two minutes remaining in the game Alex fouled out and Alyssa played great ball

Stepping directly into the land of the giants, CHS wrestling coach Torin Sweeney said his team has nothing to hang their heads down about their seventh place finish against almost 20 Division I and II schools in the annual Marshfield Holiday Wrestling tourney.

In fact, Sweeney was quite encouraged by what he saw from his 5-1 squad.

Gymnasts flip about victory over Scituate

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Don,t start raising another Pilgrim Conference championship banner quite yet for the Cohasset High girls gymnastics team.

Okay, maybe a few inches.

Yes, the Lady Skippers did pull off a 115.7 to 112.1 over a surging Scituate High squad Monday night in the Lady Sailors' home gym. And yes, Cohasset got the job done despite an abysmal night on the balance beam where the Lady Skippers had a highly uncharacteristic eight falls. Throw in the fact that Cohasset raised its record to 2-0 without the services of Co-Captain Carolyn Pratt, who was away on a school field trip, and there are reasons to be optimistic.

But with only seven gymnasts on the squad, head coach Ruthann Ardizzoni doesn't have the depth she has had in past seasons. An injury here or a bout of the flu there and Cohasset could be in big trouble if the numbers game becomes a factor.

If the Lady Skippers doe stay healthy, however, a fourth league title in five years is well within Cohasset's reach.

"If they want it (championship) it's theirs," said Ardizzoni on Tuesday evening after a practice where work on the balance beam was strongly emphasized. "You can never get enough practice on the balance beam. Next Wednesday against Hanover could be the determining factor."

Cohasset leads the league in overall team score, but Scituate improved from a start-of-the-season score of 104 to an impressive 112.1 on Monday.

The Lady Skippers still proved to be too much. Cohasset swept the top-three slots on the bars and the floor routine, and locked down two of the top three on the vault and the beam.

Co-Captain Tara Hettstrom led the bars sweep with a score of 7.7. Carlie Carter was second (7.4) and Kristin Sheerin took third (7.1). Cohasset finished first and third on the vault with Sheerin (8.1) and Hettstrom (7.8) gaining the points.

On the beam, which Ardizzoni called a Ódisaster,Ó Sheerin was the exception. The youngster didn't record a single fall, nailed her routine, and locked up the top spot with an impressive score of 8.1. Hettstrom also performed well to finish third.

The Lady Skippers went on to dominate the floor routine as Hettstrom registered her second win of the evening with a spunky number. Sheerin and Flint rounded out Cohasset's second sweep of the night.

Cohasset will be looking to score a 119 on Thursday against volved in the tourney and they were just simply enormous," said Sweeney about some squads such as overall winner Hingham, Marshfield, Braintree, Weymouth and Bridgewater-Raynham that took part in the tourney.

"We are the second smallest school in the state that has a wrestling program, but we continue to fight our way up the standings and make a great showing the these tournaments," said Sweeney. "We are even really small compared to the other Division III schools such as Rockland and Carver."

Cohasset produced no winners in the tourney, but had a number of grapplers who placed in the running.

- Craig Sheerin took fourth in the 103 lb, class
- Mike Baird came in second in the 125 lb. class
- Mike Rossi took second in the 152 lb. class
- Justin Golden came in sixth place in the 160 lb. class
- Luke Caldwell came in fifth in the 171 lb. class

"You can't be disappointed with our showing," said Sweeney. "The team did a great job all around."

What Sweeney is disappointed with are the roadblocks that fate has thrown before his squad this season..

Already a small squad anyway, the team was missing two wrestlers during the tourney and a third, Jordan Fiore, is most likely out for the year with separated shoulder he suffered just days before the start of the season.

"We are the second smallest school in the state that has a wrestling program, but we continue to fight our way up the standings and make a great showing the these tournaments. We are even really small compared to the other Division III schools like Rockland and Carver."

TORIN SWEENEY

With his loss, the team has nobody to wrestle in the 140 lb. division as well as at heavyweight, meaning that no matter how good they may be the they start every match down by 12 points due to forfeits.

"I wouldn't have thought that we would be standing here at 5-1 with all the injuries and the open slots that we've had to go with," said Sweeney.

"I can't give these kids enough credit for the effort that they have put forth this season."

Sweeney said Liam O'Donnell and Kevin DeVito have stepped out as some of the top performers so far, but that "all of the kids up and down the line have been doing an unbelievable job."

They continued their winning ways at a quad-meet over the weekend, taking the measure of Quaban and Lynnfield but falling to Tyngsboro.

Triple winners for the Skippers were Chris Pratt in the 112 lb. weight class and Caldwell. There were also a number of double winners for Cohasset.

Last call for youth lacrosse players

The Cohasset Youth Lacrosse programs — for children in grades five through eight — is completing its spring registration by mail.

For the first time this year, Cohasset is adding a team for seventh and eighth graders to the junior program, which has featured a fifth and sixth grade team for the last two years.

The youth program is in addition to the middle school program; it starts before the school squad practices.

"For the seventh and eighth graders, there has been some confusion, because this is the first year kids have had to sign-up outside of school," said Terry Kahn who will coach the seventh and eighth grade team. "The middle school's practices and season start late, and the season is short, so playing on this team will give kids a better amount of practice time and games, and will make them more competitive when the middle school team starts its season."

At a sign-up session on Dec. 20, 30 players registered for the fifth and sixth grade program, fewer than expected.

"Between the kids we had returning from last year and the kids who played at our summer camp, we expected at least 36 kids, which is the number we feel is necessary to field two teams this year," says Chuck Jaffee, who heads the youth program.

"Between the holidays and short notice, I suspect some kids or parents didn't hear about our sign-up, but it's important to get everyone registered so that we can make the decision on how many teams we will have. We must notify the league by the end of January."

as the rest of the team closed in behind her to hold off Scituate."

Coach Hughes continued, "I really like this team. I feel the kids and I are on the same page. For many of the kids we have been together since they were in the seventh grade. They know my style and they know what I am out to accomplish.

"I know what the kids can do. All they need is some confidence to get them going."

While this may not be the big year Cohasset has been looking for, next year could be a definite possibility. That's when the realignment of leagues goes into effect, and Rockland and East Bridgewater will move out of the league, which will make the SSL a lot smaller.

It also means Cohasset will have to play eight non-league games where surely, some confidence builders can be found.

Next year also means Cohasset will have a veteran club with a lot of seniors running the court.

However, next year is next year and this year is now.

Cohasset has been getting plenty of good minutes from junior Caitlin O'Neil, who has become her best post player. Kathy Devine has also moved into a good position on the team averaging 14 points per game.

Stepping up and playing a lot of minutes at the forward positions have been juniors Kathy Brister and Megan Wall.

"Kathy and Megan have been seeing a lot of action," said coach Hughes, "and they certainly are going to see a lot more based on the way they have been playing."

Another player who has been doing a fine job for the Cohasset team is Megan Connolly, who along with McNamara and Devine serve as tri-captains of the team.

The Cohasset team plays an 18 game schedule, so there's still plenty of time for the kids to gain some confidence.

a solid Duxbury squad that has been putting up team scores in the 111 to 112 range.

Pratt, who was sorely missed against the Lady Sailors, will be in the lineup against Duxbury.

"We really missed Carolyn," Ardizzoni said. "Not only as a gymnast, but with the leadership she provides. Tara is an excellent co-captain, but it's always tough for any one person."

Ardizzoni was pleased that Cohasset won the meet, but knows the Lady Skippers' best performances are still in front of them.

"They're capable of so much more," she said. "We easily could have gotten a 118."

Following the Duxbury meet, Cohasset takes on non-league opponent Notre Dame Academy on Saturday before the showdown against Kim Richardson and Hanover next Wednesday.

"I think we're going to see a really good meet," Ardizzoni said.

Cohasset may be able to raise that banner a little higher.

Yacht club celebrates New Year with "Ice Bowl" regatta

Those sails flitting around Cohasset Harbor on New Year's day were no mirage, even to those who had rung in 1998 late the night before. Nor were the small ice floes a figment of the imagination of the hardy sailors racing in the first annual Cohasset Yacht Club Ice Bowl Regatta for the sound of ice meeting a thin fiberglass hull is unmistakable.

Nine sailors, two support boat personnel and numerous skeptical family and friends greeted the coldest day of the winter (14 degrees at launch time, before uncalculated wind chill) by racing three races in 8-foot Optimist dinghies.

John Bryant of Forest Ave., a past (1956) Olympic sailor, organized the highly cooperative event, convincing Charlie Ford to put his 19-foot outboard back in the water, recruiting Steve Bobo (Sr.) and Larry Mitchell to run the safety boat and start the races, borrowing Optimist from CYC families (including the Ulmers who weren't even in town) and selling the idea to a few crazies.

The Optimist is a training boat for young sailors, suited for those well less than 5 feet in height and under 140 pounds; needless to say, the adult CYC Ice Bowl sailors challenged the buoyancy of these little boats.

The sailors were well bundled — three pairs of gloves for Steve Bobo (Jr.) — over boots and under life jackets, so moving about in the little dinghies was quite a challenge. The major casualty of the day (other than a brief rigging breakdown in John Bertolami's boat) was the loss of Jim Hamilton's hat during a tack, but Jim was overheard saying his wife wanted him to get a new one anyway.

Sarah Leggat was living in mortal dread of losing the cozy hat she had borrowed from her mom.

Betts Murray's dog was distressed shoreside because he usually gets to sail too.

One of Ed Putnam's eyeglass lenses fell out, but he hadn't noticed until he was handed a funny shaped piece of ice (the lens).

Kate Brady had never raced before...what an introduction.

John Bryant gave out specially painted shot glasses for participant prizes, and Dan and Grace Evans hosted the group for thawing out and food. Each sailor raced two of the three races and swapped boats around. The results:

1. Betts Murray (1-2), 2 3/4 points.
2. (tie) Steve Bobo (1-3) and Sarah Leggat (3-1) 3 3/4 points
4. (tie) Dan Evans (4-2) and Ed Putnam (2-4) 6 points
6. Jim Hamilton (5-3) 8 points
7. John Bryant (4-5) 9 points
8. Kate Brady (5-6) 11 points
9. John Bertolami (6-6) 12 points

Sewer chairman opts out of septic hearing

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Since the deal the sewer board struck with the state over Cohasset wastewater woes riled homeowners, sewer commissioner Edward "Ted" Guild has been a frequent target of the protests. Tuesday, amid renewed speculation about a rift between the health board and the sewer board, Guild stayed away from a public hearing on two new septic districts that were part of the settlement (see related letters, page 11).

Further discussion, Guild said, would be fruitless since town meeting already voted to OK the settlement. Moreover, the sewer board previously faced homeowners Dec. 9 and took the heat for striking an unpopular deal with the state that led to the establishment of the two managed septic districts to be inspected and policed by the board of health.

But the decision to stay away drew fire from selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan. The selectman was among those who pointedly questioned the sewer board chairman's decision not to attend the meeting and also not to send their consultant Daniel Coughlin of Tutela Engineering.

"I do not believe Ted Guild should have the right not to come to a meeting," Sullivan said particularly since Guild's board had negotiated the settlement with the state that ushered in the district solution. "People here should be able to get some answers. The answers exist."

Nonetheless, in an earlier telephone interview, also Tuesday, Guild said he sent a Jan. 2 memorandum to health board Chairwoman Alix White to explain why his board and their consultant opted to decline the invitation to "a second rehash of these concerns." He also said there was really no inside story of why the sewer board stayed away, but only the reasons stated in the memo.

Moreover, Guild said his board would support a town-wide district but not one that would expose Cohasset to be obligated to the state under the second amended final judgment. He also said it would probably make sense for the citizens group to lobby for a one-year moratorium on the septic districts. Though the health board had, in effect, lost a year getting started on the districts, Guild said another lost year probably would not have a bad impact on the outcome.

"I don't want to be adversarial," Guild said. "But the communication" (from the health board) "has been poor. Nothing's black and white, but I have done my level best to keep them informed an cooperate with them."

Guild said earlier he worked with the health board on their initial meetings to establish a town-wide septic district.

"I was working with them on those meetings," he said. "I was there at those meetings. Then they decided if there was no representative from the sewer commission, they might do better. I don't know."

put in such a septic district to begin with, and only to solve a dispute between the town and the state. (Under pressure to limit the town's legal obligations, the sewer commission bargained for an expansion of the sewer system and creation of the smallest septic districts which the state would allow. While smaller seemed better for the town, the few homeowners forced into the special districts saw a future of big expenses for themselves, due to septic inspections and repairs.)

The meeting went on before two officials from the state department of environmental protection, Alan Slater and David Ferris, who at times both appeared to be baffled by the turn of events that saw the public rise up against the apparently favorable settlement the town's sewer commission had managed to wring from the state, after years of negotiations.

But facing expensive periodic inspections and mandated repairs (possibly as soon as March 1 for some) residents like St. Peter appeared to be focused on overturning the official decisions that got them into the septic district to begin with and to do so at almost any price.

"I'm not convinced it's a permanent solution to this public health emergency," he said, sounding a theme that claimed numerous other skeptics.

Yet, despite the unpromising start to the evening, by the eleventh hour the board came close to an agreement with the homeowners, who have banded together in a citizens group dubbed the Citizens for Equitable Environmental Solutions.

More surprising, the tentative deal was brokered by selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan who won support when he suggested the group present a town-wide septic plan to the fall town meeting, not the spring meeting as they originally planned. Both the group's lawyer and the health board agreed the delay would mean more time to address the reasons why a similar proposal for a town-wide system, which the health board had backed, previously was withdrawn without a town meeting vote.

"This board would like to see a town-wide system," said health board member Kevin Ulmer, but the fine points of funding such a system had proved to be a pitfall. According to Ulmer, the idea was dropped when legal questions surfaced over issues about using public funds to improve private properties. Moreover, the plan, which had been presented before public hearings last year, was soundly condemned by many of the same homeowners who now say they favor it.

"Among the most vocal opponents of our attempt to develop a town-wide plan were some of the people sitting in this room," Ulmer said.

Nonetheless, the town-wide route apparently seemed a fairer and better deal to homeowners who now face a future inside the special septic districts.

Finally, while the health board stopped short of declaring a moratorium on its plan to go forward with the two new high priority districts, they did agree to hold a work session with Marcus and engineer for the citizen's group Peter Dillon.

Charter school students 'face injustice'

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Ashley Kalus, 15 and Leslie Thornton, 14 of Cohasset are students at the South Shore Charter School, and they are on the brink of a great adventure to the heart of South America. The adventure is part of a Latin American service project through the school called 'Face Injustice,' but their journey will take them over mountains and rain forests to an orphanage in Bolivia, one of the poorest nations in the Western Hemisphere.

Once inside Montero, the girls and the rest of their group plan to work. They intend to roll up their sleeves and fix up the orphanage building as well as teach the orphans first-aid and some ways to prevent diseases, such as yellow fever and malaria.

Montero is about a 40-minute drive from Santa Cruz, Bolivia, according to their teacher Lara Antkowiak. East of the Andes and some of the tallest mountains in the world, Montero is nonetheless a flat landscape, and the orphanage is in a not very nice part of town, she said, not far from a farmer's market notorious for the smells of rotting vegetables, rancid meat racked in the open air, and pigs. Health is a concern here, the teacher said.

Antkowiak spent the year after college at the Girls' Orphanage, which is operated by the Salesian nuns, an order which has a special ministry to the youth of developing countries. She was a tutor, and she knows first-hand the world Ashley and Leslie are about to step inside could be somewhat overwhelming.

Though one of the poorest nations in the Western Hemisphere, Bolivia presents a rich landscape of bold colors. "The sky is bright blue, and the grass is a deep green," the teacher said, set off by strong yellows of crops such as sugar cane.

Leslie Thornton and Ashley Kalus of Cohasset are part of a special program at the South Shore Charter School in Hull. The students will go to Bolivia where they will help fix up an orphanage building.

"It can be very powerful," Antkowiak said. "Yet everything is just poverty, and it can be a real disillusionment."

Nonetheless, the teacher expects the exchange will ultimately prove uplifting, due to the bond that will be forged between the students and the girls in the orphanage. The friendships, not the good deeds, matter most, she said.

"These girls never forget anybody who makes the decision to be with them and go down there," Antkowiak said. "The goal is to set up a relationship with the orphanage that will continue. That is far more important than any (volunteer) work the students can do" (to repair the building or run a crash course on first-aid.)

The two Cohasset girls will travel with a group of students from the South Shore Charter School in Hull to Bolivia April 15 to April 26. They have backing from their parents and a small grant from Youth Ventures but also hope to tap the community for some contributions.

Moreover, the students are committed to the project, despite the obstacles on the way to Montero.

"This means a lot to us," Leslie said. "This is something we have worked very hard for."

Leslie also dismissed speculation the trip could prove controversial.

"I don't think there's much controversy at all," she said. "Some people might ask, "Why don't you help at home?" We are. We are helping our country develop relations with another country."

Both Leslie and Ashley said the children in Bolivia have fewer of the necessities that American children sometimes take for granted.

"It's an injustice any kid would be suffering,"Ashley said. "They need food, shelter, clothing and someone to take care of them. We want people to have a chance to succeed. It's a great thing to be able to teach your own kids about human rights.

Though the students continue to write letters on behalf of political prisoners in other South American nations, they have stopped writing to the Bolivian government on the advice of Amnesty International.

"That's just practical," the teacher said, noting a representative from the human rights advocacy group suggested they not focus on human rights violations in Bolivia.

"Any trip involves risk," Antkowiak acknowledged. "But Bolivia is a stable country, and we are taking all the precautions." The charter school has worked with the United Nations, Amnesty International and Rotary International to prepare for the undertaking. The students have boned up on the health issues to protect themselves from diseases such as malaria and yellow fever, and they must also understand and speak Spanish.

Antkowiak also said the trip would stir no controversy at all in Montero. Since her post-college trip, there has been a steady flow of volunteers to the orphanage, though she was the first American who was not connected to a religious order to arrive.

"It was a little wacky," she said about her first trip. "But the understanding has been accomplished.

'Face Injustice' is one of a number of school projects that are designed, the teacher said, to make learning part of real life.

"The students have a goal,"according to Antkowiak. "The goal is not getting a score on a test."

Free inmate labor gets high marks

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The Norfolk County Sheriff's office is expanding its community service program for inmates.

Sheriff Jack Flood came to town Monday to tout the program in which supervised work crews provide free labor for jobs such as painting and landscaping to non-profit organizations and county towns, like Cohasset.

"You call us with the type of work and we'll give you an estimate of the number of hours needed," Flood told an enthusiastic board of selectmen.

Selectmen Chairman Michael H. Sullivan said the town could use the help.

"I can think of ten projects," Sullivan said. "How many man hours on a monthly basis are you looking to absorb?"

The work crews are inmates from the Braintree Alternative Center which houses non-violent men, who would have otherwise been responsible if they had not developed a problem with drugs or alcohol, Flood said.

"We don't send out people who put the community ill at ease," he said.

The towns or organizations provide the supplies and the inmates who are accompanied by a supervisor provide the labor.

Earlier this year, work crews in the program painted the interior of town hall and the fire station.

Flood said work crews recently reconstructed a Little League field in Holbrook and painted the fences.

He was careful to point out that the intent of the program is to tackle jobs that otherwise are so low on the priority list that they might not get done at all.

> "This is a new correctional philosophy. We don't just sit them in a cell."
> – NORFOLK COUNTY SHERIFF JACK FLOOD.

"We are not looking to take work away from law-abiding, gainfully employed people," he said.

Selectmen mentioned painting the interior of Deer Hill and the middle/high school and doing brook clean-up as possible projects.

Selectman Diane Sullivan was concerned about having the inmates working while school was in session.

Flood said the crews could work over school vacation.

"We can accommodate the community," he said, noting that the sheriff's office has the men incarcerated 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

"This is a new correctional philosophy," Flood said. "We don't just sit them in a cell."

Town Manager Mark Haddad will compile a list of projects and contact the sheriff's office, selectmen said.

Teens arrested with beer

Police arrested seven local teenagers Dec. 29 for minor transporting an alcoholic beverage. Officer Jeffrey Treanor said he observed two vehicles parked behind the Osgood School near the playground. There were two 12 packs of Coors Light beer outside and another beer can was thrown out the door of one of the cars. Further investigation revealed a knapsack full of beer.

Treanor and Officer Greg Lennon took the seven youths into custody.

"The Osgood PlayPark is notorious," Treanor said. "It's usually the meeting spot where the teens split up what they have and go someplace else."

The following teenagers were charged with minor transporting/carrying alcoholic beverage: Michael A. Rossi, 17, 48 Oak St.; Adam Sasso, 17, 35 Sohier St.; Jessica E. Stevens, 17, 86 Beach St.; and Tiffany M. Bolster, 17, 15 Stockbridge St. Police also arrested three juveniles (two 16-year-olds and a 15-year old).

Seventh-grader takes geography bee win in stride

By Jennifer R. Horan
STAFF WRITER

An early interest in geography and world events helped propel 12-year-old Mark Chapman to victory last month, when he clinched the top award in the middle school's tenth annual geography bee.

Mark competed against 96 students in the seventh grade, answering questions about world geography and events in an elimination-style testing forum.

"It was hard, but it wasn't extremely difficult," said Mark, who had to take a 70-question written test after the contest to qualify for one of 100 slots in the state geography bee scheduled for April 3. He took the test just before Christmas and is awaiting the results.

"I would like it if I made it to the state finals," he said.

Mark, who won first place in the sixth grade math competition last year, is humble about his most recent accomplishment.

"Any multiple choice can be pure dumb luck," he said. "It was the luck of the draw that I got the questions I got. I could have got the other kids' questions."

Six of his seventh-grade classmates qualified for the school finals with Mark. Each student received a series of questions and advanced based on their knowledge of geography.

Some of Mark's questions included: "In May 1997, what country changed its name to the Republic of Congo?" (Answer: Zaire) and "Name the Spanish-speaking descendants of Native Americans living in Central America" (Answer: The Mestizo).

State champions — who have advanced from thousands of schools in the United States and five U.S. territories — will be flown to Washington DC for the national championship on May 19 and 20, which will be televised and hosted by "Jeopardy!" host Alex Trebek.

Mark remembers watching the finals on TV when he was nine.

"It's impossible," he recalled.

> "It was the luck of the draw that I got the questions I got. I could have got the other kids' questions."

"You're thinking, how do these 12-year-olds know this stuff? I don't think I'll get there, but I'll try."

If Mark makes it to the world finals, he has a shot at winning money toward his college tuition. The first place national winner bee, sponsored by the National Geographic Society and Sylvan Learning Centers (the nation's leading provider of supplemental education services to students at all skill levels), will receive a $25,000 college scholarship.

Although he did not study for the school's geography bee, Mark said he would need to study for the advanced rounds of the competition.

"My mom would make me study for it," he said.

"If you are representing all of Cohasset in a national geography bee, you would want to," said his mother, Peggy.

At age 4, Mark's uncle gave him a globe of the world for Christmas. Throughout childhood, he read atlases and expressed an interest in world events and politics as well as the history of the Civil War and World War II. Mark has kept up with current events by reading world news in the Boston Globe, he said.

"We're proud that he's interested in geography. We are, too," Peggy said.

Two years ago, Mark's family took a car trip from Cohasset to Seattle and back, via the Northern route.

"He got great exposure to the contiguous United States and a lot of interesting places," she said. "I like kids being interested in more than their own back yard. He's interested in other places and other things."

Mark also plays basketball and baseball, sings in the chorus and plays clarinet in the band.

Selectmen's race sparks early interest

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Though 14 seats are to be decided in the annual town election Apr. 4, the selectmen's race has grabbed the spotlight early. With a three-way contest is shaping up for two seats on the board, the public can be virtually assured there will be a debate.

Moreover, even if no other contenders emerge, the three declared candidates are likely to provide voters with a choice. While one is an incumbent, another is a familiar face on the local political scene, and the third hopeful is something of a surprise.

As expected, selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan has decided not to run. But the other incumbent Merle Brown confirmed Monday he will seek a third term on the board. Also in the hunt so far are two challengers, Thomas J. Callahan of 35 Hillside Drive, a nine-year veteran of the Conservation Commission, and William G. Ross of 16 Church St.

Town paramedic service proposed

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

If Town Manager Mark Haddad has his way, the town will eliminate the call fire department and use those funds to start up a new paramedic service. He also suggests creating the position of deputy fire chief to oversee fire safety and the paramedics, to be paid for by moneys now used for fire hydrant rental.

While selectmen like the idea of paramedics, they are cool to creating the deputy fire chief position and split on how necessary the call fire department is.

The discussion was part of a marathon fiscal year 1998 budget powwow Monday during which selectmen and the town manager tried to reach a consensus on the town's proposed $19.5 million budget. The fiscal year begins July 1.

Under the Cohasset Town Manager Act of 1997, the town manager presents the budget to town meeting with the selectmen's recommendations. This week, selectmen and Haddad agreed that they are both in the learning stages under the new act which was voted by town meeting last spring and subsequently approved by the state legislature.

Under the town manager form of government control over the budget and hiring and firing rests

Osgood reuse is up in the air

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Selectwoman Diane Sullivan took on a familiar role Tuesday as she tried to steer the Osgood School Reuse Committee back towards its mission — presenting the town with some alternative future uses for the building and making a recommendation. The selectmen, and Sullivan in particular, have previously made a success of rescuing other foundering committees, such as last year's beleaguered Greenbush Mitigation board.

But the Osgood School Reuse Committee presents a somewhat different situation. And though the liaison's role was familiar for Sullivan, the outcome of the story was not — not so far at least.

Simply put, the sticking point is money — primarily money to hire a consultant. Sullivan said the selectmen not likely vote for such an expenditure, especially not when the Osgood group had thus far held off on communicating with other town boards such as zoning and planning.

The Osgood Reuse committee was formed to develop a vision for the school building which is to be vacated this June. Now with the end of the school year coming, the committee is taking heat for its decision to continue gathering information when action seems to be called for.

But after more than two hours of sometimes circular discussions, on the consultant and a number of other issues, the group and chairwoman Joanne Adkins refused to budge on their demand for an outside analyst to help them visualize the options for the building. Moreover, while Adkins was not sure how much the consultant would cost, she said she was positive the job could be done for $10,000.

"You don't think our town boards can answer the questions?" the selectwoman said.

Adkins allowed the group should start a dialogue with the other boards, but later she said she and the committee decided to meet only with the selectmen at their Jan. 26 session for now.

The committee was somewhat bogged down Tuesday by a tantalizing new proposal to turn the Schools lobby for more money

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The school committee made it clear Monday the budgetary bottom line will spell a sizable shortfall for the town's schools.

During budget discussions with the town manager and selectmen, school committee Chairman Maureen Jerz said the schools need an additional $180,000 next year to maintain level services. That amount is on top of the 5-1/2 percent or $419,557 school budget hike recommended by the town manager for fiscal year 1999, which gets underway July 1.

Jerz explained more money is needed due to a combination of factors including rising enrollment, growing special education costs, and contracted salary increases.

Town Manager Mark Haddad, who prepared the budget, proposes an FY'99 school budget of $8.11 million including the cost of a new school bus promised at last fall's town meeting. The town appropriated $7.64 million for the schools this fiscal year.

Haddad presented a balanced budget to selectmen this week. If all or part of the school request is granted, it is not clear where the additional funds will come from. In a memo to selectmen, Haddad suggested putting off some capital requests from other departments — including the purchase of a

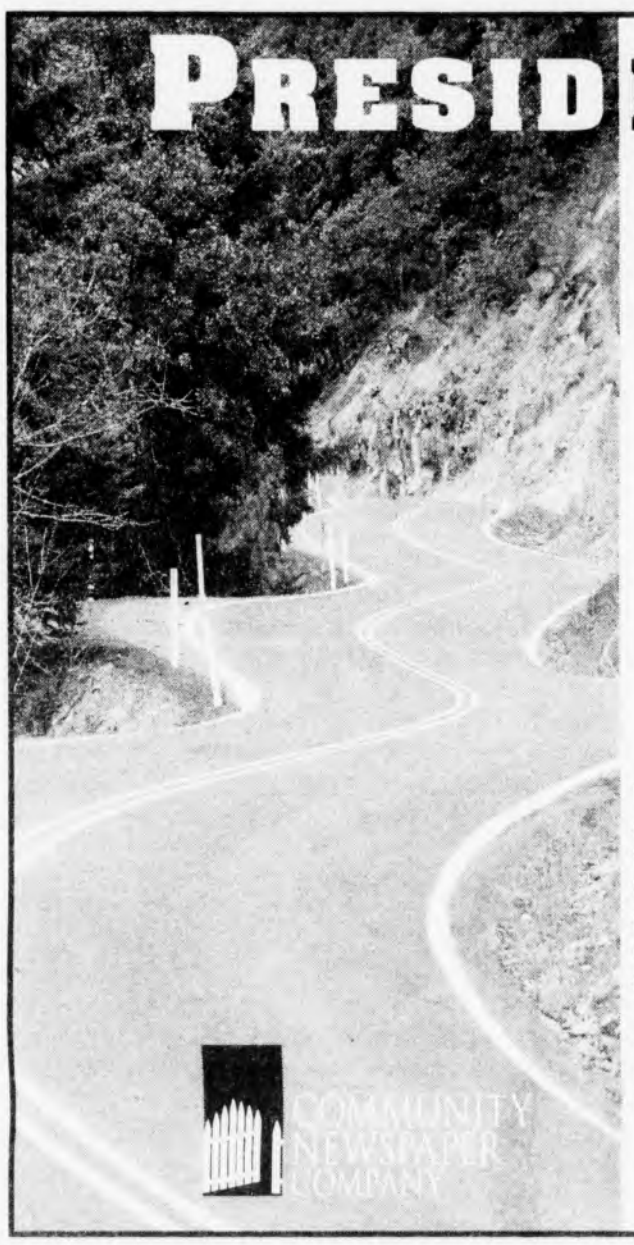
Super search forum tonight

The Cohasset School Committee will sponsor the second of two community forums to gather information, ideas and comments from parents and other citizens interested in the search for a new superintendent for Cohasset schools in the A.V. Studio at Cohasset High School at 7:30 p.m. Thursday, Jan. 15.

Those who attend the forum will be asked to discuss two topics. The first, what are the challenges facing the Cohasset schools over the next three to five years? Second, what do these challenges say about the characteristics of the iideali superintendent for Cohasset? There is no need to register for the forum, they are open to any Cohasset resident.

Random selection of articles

Town Manager Mark Haddad will ask Town Moderator George Marlette if he would be amenable to selecting the articles at random at town meeting. Selectmen think random selection will create more interest because citizens won't know when a major article will come up for discussion. William Weeks, the prior town moderator, used to select the articles at random from a basket but Marlette stopped that practice and takes the items of business in the order in which they appear in the warrant. Selectmen may also seek a by-law change to give citizens the option of random selection at town meeting.



Ambulance billing for December

The fire department billed for 32 ambulance transports last month for a total of $11,417.96. The town received $11,066.46 in payments. So far this fiscal year, ambulance bills have totaled $67,119.40 with payments amounting to $55,572.12. Some of the payments are applied to prior year ambulance bills.

Ruling boon to wireless communications industry

By Alice C. Coyle
STAFF WRITER

In a landmark decision last week the state Department of Telecommunications and Energy (formerly the DPU) found in favor of Nextel Communications, ruling that wireless communication companies now be considered public service corporations. The ruling, which reverses a February 1996 decision, allows wireless communications companies, like electric, gas and other public utilities, to by-pass local zoning when siting telecommunications towers.

DTE spokesman Timothy Shevlin said the ruling is a major windfall for wireless telecommunications companies, many of which have faced great opposition from local towns when trying to construct towers to service their subscribers.

"This is a major victory for Nextel and other wireless companies," he said.

The decision has far-reaching implications for communities throughout the Commonwealth and especially on the South Shore, where a flurry of recent tower applications have been causing static in local towns.

Shevlin said like gas and electric utilities, the DTE found that wireless communication carriers can override local zoning laws for the public good. Under the new ruling the companies now have three alternatives to gain approval for tower applications. In addition to appealing local zoning board denials in superior court, or seeking to enforce the Federal Telecommunications Act of 1996, which prevents towns from prohibiting towers, wireless carriers can opt to go directly to the DTE with their applications.

Shevlin said the ruling gives telecommunications companies facing zoning roadblocks some relief. And while the DTE is generally less opposed to tower applications than local towns, Shevlin said the ruling does not give wireless carriers carte blanche to erect towers any where they want to. Like local planning and zoning boards, Shevlin said the DTE will have to be convinced that the project is needed and that alternatives to tower construction including using existing structures (other towers, church steeples, water towers) have been looked into.

The decision is of great concern to the Massachusetts Municipal Association (MMA) which argued strongly against the reversal during the hearing. The non-profit association of Massachusetts cities and towns is an advocate for local government.

"This is a serious infringement on home-rule," said MMA director of communications Patricia Mikes. "We're very concerned about this decision. This has serious implications for all local towns."

Like the federal telecommunications act, Mikes said the MMA has concerns about the state taking over the decision-making process for its cities and towns. "Any local government official knows best what will work in their city or town," she said. While a 150-foot tower may work in one community, Mikes said it may not work in another.

"It stands to reason that what works in Pittsfield, doesn't necessarily work in Plymouth."

Whether an appeal will be launched by the MMA is yet to be decided, Mikes said.

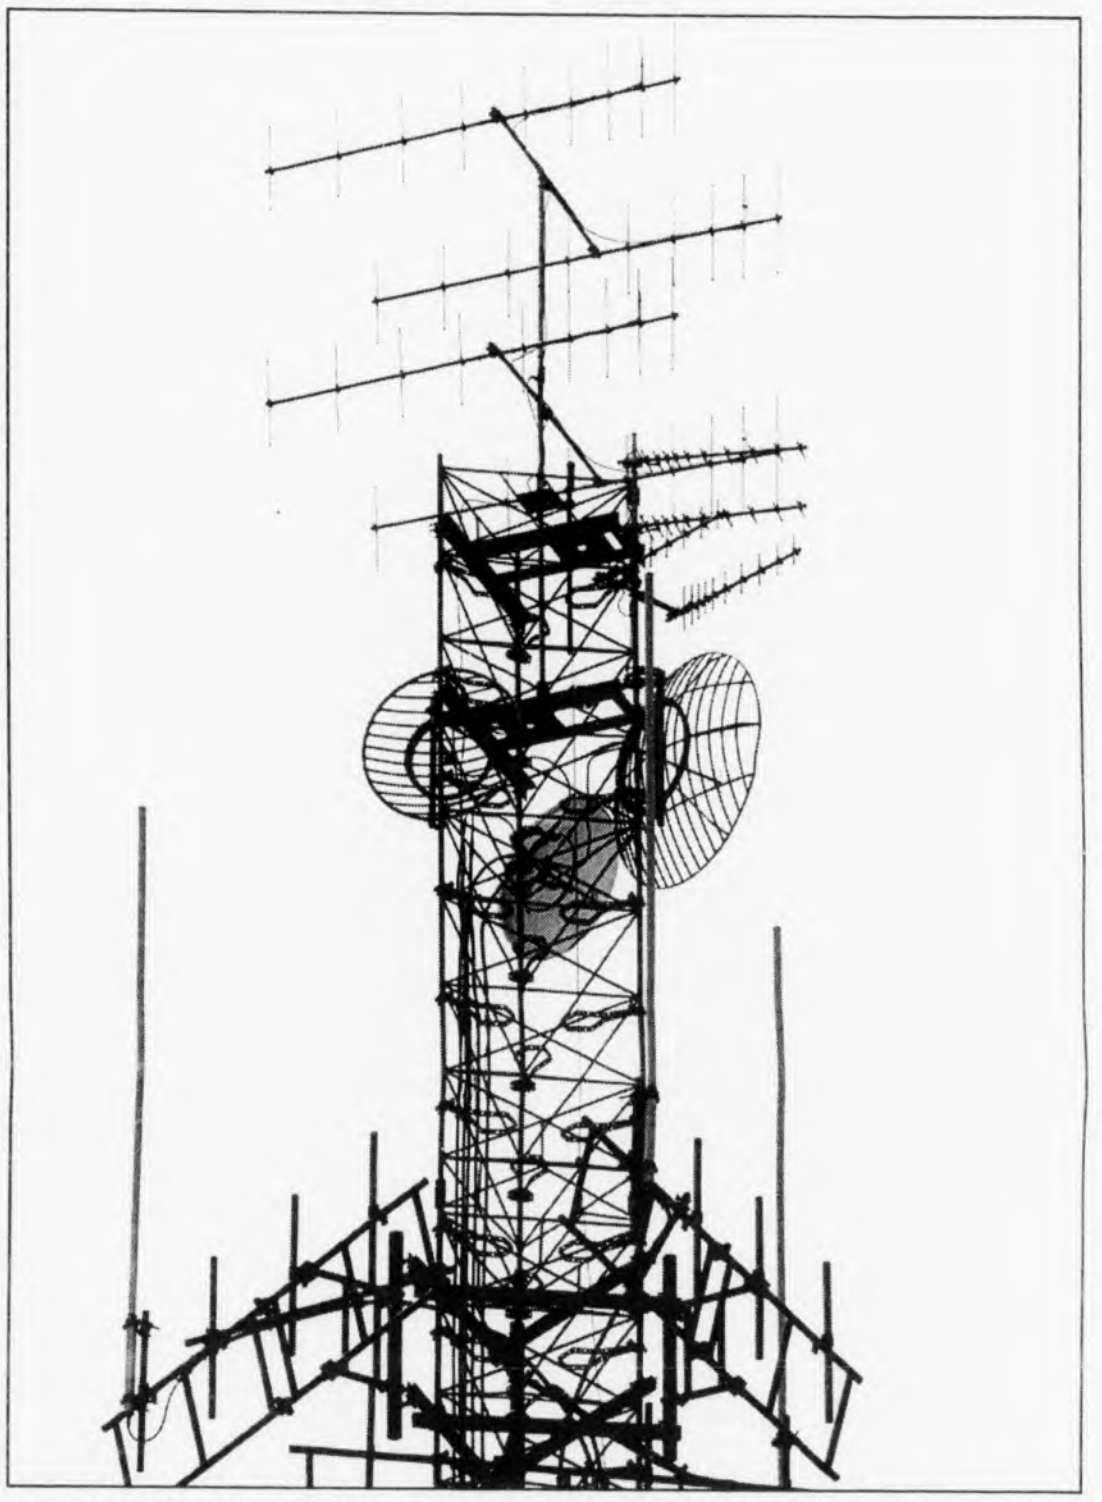
"We're in the talking stages at this point."

Mikes said any appeal will go through the board of directors which is slated to meet in two weeks. The MMA's public works and utility committee is expected to discuss it at its meeting next week, she said. If time becomes a factor, Mikes said a recommendation from the executive director through MMA's excutive committee could expedite any appeal.

Mark DeGiacomo, chairman of the Cohasset zoning board, said the ruling could pose a serious problem for Cohasset, which already has four towers.

"It sounds like towers can be placed anywhere without restriction," he said. "The ability to deny placement is already severely limited by the telecommunications act which put a limit on the ability of local boards to halt construction.

"Now, it appears that companies can buy land where ever they like to put up a tower without regard to how it affects the town or neighbors. That could have a severe impact on property values," he said.



But Hingham's zoning administrator M.J. Shultz doesn't think the ruling will change things.

She explained that Hingham's regulations have taken into account that providers have had the ability to go to the DPU.

"Going to the DPU (now DTE) has been a more cumbersome process than the local regulatory process," she said. "While this ruling may mark a change in that the state process might not be as onerous, I think providers will still find it speedier to work with the towns."

"Now, it appears that companies can buy land where ever they like to put up a tower without regard to how it affects the town or neighbors. That could have a severe impact on property values.'

A recent state ruling could mean more towers like this in area towns.

Some are skeptical about village sidewalk plan

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

St. Stephen's Church is one of Cohasset's cherished landmarks, built on a massive rock that is nearly an emblem of the town. But while the church has remained a jewel for the community, its surroundings are a little tarnished, according to some members of the new downtown revitalization board.

"Under the patina there are some really deplorable conditions," said architect James Sandell.

The architect is one of eight members of the new task force ready to look past the rock, the stone stairs and the church and deal with a sidewalk underfoot that needs some work. Moreover, Sandell launched the new task force off to a fast start Thursday, announcing high-profile plans — still in the study stage — to build a brick walkway by St. Stephen's. Ultimately, the job is to be tied in with an overall plan to improve the village and link it to Cohasset Harbor.

"It's a one of a kind place," said Sandell who acknowledged some of the rock by St. Stephen's would probably fall under blasting before the project was complete.

Yet everybody on the committee is not yet convinced the showcase project, admittedly undertaken to bring attention to the task force, will prove to be a good idea.

"People will have a lot of questions about changing the area around St. Stephen's, especially if you are eliminating part of the rock" said longtime Cohasset resident Jacqueline Dormitzer of 334 So. Main St.

Dormitzer said she was concerned the change might look artificial.

"That is a natural outcropping," she said.

Nonetheless, Sandell, who kicked off a design workshop charrette on the downtown over a year ago, was confident the outcome would be good and defended the overall revitalization concept, summing up his vision of a thriving downtown Cohasset with a comparison to Disneyland.

"I don't want to make it Disneyland," he said. "It's got to be a real town. It is a real town now. It's just frayed on the edges."

Selectwoman Nan Roth, also a task force member, acknowledged there are some people, including her nine year old son, who like downtown just the way it is.

The Village Revitalization Task Force Committee held its first meeting Jan. 8, amid high hopes for a new downtown that has the old downtown's character.

In spite of the problems with curbs, sidewalks and lights, downtown "works," Sandell acknowledged.

"You can jump the curb and park," he agreed, since the curbs are in such poor condition.

But Sandell maintained that the status quo will not continue to work indefinitely and said Cohasset was on the brink of a vast change, due to the Old Colony restoration. Moreover, both the architect and task force Chairman Dean Rizzo said efforts should be made to help businessmen, since they cannot survive simply on the local trade without bringing some outsider money into the village.

"There's a comet coming," Sandell said in a colorful reference to the Greenbush train. "As Old Colony gets closer and closer to being reconstructed, it's going to have a major impact on the town."

Sandell and Chairman Dean Rizzo said the group was set to go ahead with an preliminary study on the sidewalk, pending the OK from selectmen. Though the contract was not yet officially awarded, the engineer was ready to start the study the third week of January, Rizzo said. With an eye towards meeting a March deadline for a state grant application, the task force is expected to take the question about the sidewalk and the rest of the village revitalization plans to town meeting in the fall.

"It's a public process," Sandell affirmed, and nothing would happen downtown without community support.

Selectmen's race sparks early interest

Both Brown and Callahan said the biggest issue in the campaign was finances.

"I think the budget is the main issue," Brown said. "The schools are always a big thing. They're looking for a lot of money for their budget."

Callahan, who lost a bid for a seat on the board in last year's race, also had an eye on town finances and said he would work to keep the tax burden in check.

"The major issue is still the budget," he said, due to the pressure the town will be under to pay for sewers and the new elementary school.

Callahan also said he was impressed by the job Town Manager Mark Haddad had started on this year's spending package.

"I want to work to insure the process succeeds," he said.

Ross took out nomination papers this week and was not reached for comment. Though a newcomer to politics, he made some news last fall when he took his campaign against a silver maple tree to the floor of the special town meeting. Before he prevailed, he delivered a colorful speech about the run around he got from town boards when he tried to get someone to cut down a town-owned tree at the end of his driveway.

After the vote, selectmen Chairman Sullivan agreed the matter should have been resolved short of the public forum but dismissed views the voters harbored a general disenchantment with town government.

Sullivan, who served for six years on the board of selectmen and four years on the health board, said it was time to move on. He decided not to run because he wanted to spend time with his children, he said.

Though he would not take credit for any single accomplishment, he said the board made progress on a number of fronts during the past six years. Sullivan said the town manager, which he initially opposed, proved to be a good change for town government. He also cited the improvement in the quality of the town's financial management.

"The town is in really good shape," Sullivan said.

Nonetheless, the chairman also said finances would be the main issue in the upcoming campaign, with the impact of the Old Colony train restoration running a close second.

"Managing finances is always probably the primary issue," he said due to the need to maintain a balance between education spending and spending on the municipal government side of the budget. "We don't want to shortchange the municipal side of government, but education is of the utmost importance."

School Committee Race Still Cloudy

No one has yet taken out nomination papers for the two school committee seats, and incumbents Maureen Jerz and Ralph Kidder have yet to announce if they will seek new terms. Jerz, the current Chairwoman, could not be reached by press time, and Kidder said he would make an announcement before the next school board meeting Jan. 22.

Nonetheless, Kidder acknowledged he was leaning against another run for school committee after logging nine years on the board.

"I am leaning in that direction, but anything can happen. There are all kinds of rumors. I'm not saying anything until Jan. 22."

Health Board seat to be vacated

Meantime, Thomas Cook has announced he will not look for another term on the health board. Cook said he felt it was time someone else took a turn in office and said the primary issue facing the committee would probably be the coming septic district.

Other races

Planning board incumbent Robert Sturdy has not yet taken out nomination papers. Sturdy was not reached for comment before the Mariner's deadline.

In other races, the incumbents appear to have no opponents. Only the library trustees have a seat in contention, and the seat is for an unexpired term. Both Jamie G. Williams of 60 Surrey Drive and Carol P. Riley of 453 Jerusalem Road will vie for one unexpired two-year term on the library board. As for the three incumbents, Barbara Power, June Hubbard and Sarah Pease, all have taken out nomination papers for three year terms, but so far, none faces an opponent.

On the recreation commission, incumbent Richard Barrow is running for re-election. Henry Rattenbury is also looking for a new term on the sewer commission, and John Fortin has taken out papers to run for the water board. As of Monday, water commission incumbent Robert Kasameyer had not taken out nomination papers to seek a second term.

TREATING ADDICTION

Chiropractic may be of help to those trying to free themselves of chemical dependencies because it does not involve the use of drugs of any type. In fact, there is evidence to suggest that patients who receive chiropractic care are much more likely to complete their drug programs. Retention rate, or how long a person stays in a treatment program, is very important because the longer a drug addict remains in a treatment center, the more likely he or she is to remain drug-free. By returning the nervous system to as normal functioning as possible, chiropractic treatment allows patients to free themselves of physical complaints that otherwise stand in the way of adhering to other modalities offered as addiction treatments.

Instead of covering up your symptoms with drugs, at SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, we will help determine if your health problems can be helped through gentle chiropractic care - without drugs or surgery. Chiropractic is a safe, conservative method of health care that gets results. Your complete care is our number one concern. We're located at 80 Front Street, Scituate Harbor, where you will be fully educated as to what is happening to you and how we can help. Call us at 545-7388 to schedule an appointment. We have the services you require.

P.S. Chiropractic makes sense for people who are inclined to be chemically dependent because they must stay away from mood-altering substances for their entire lives.

Zoning board considers action against private landfill

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The zoning board of appeals (ZBA) is considering what action to take against Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) for admittedly placing refuse in an area not approved for dumping.

CHL placed landfill in the unpermitted area, Area IV-B, which is adjacent to an approved area, Area IV-A. Previously, the ZBA has turned down requests from CHL to landfill in Area IV-B.

The ZBA discussed the violation on Jan. 7, and closed the public hearing. ZBA Chairman Mark DeGiacomo said the zoning board would meet on Thursday, Jan. 22 to render a decision.

Meanwhile, the anti-landfill group Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE) has announced that it filed a complaint for a different CHL violation with the building inspector on Jan.13 ordering closure of the landfill because former owner James Tyeryar failed to file a special permit in 1976.

According to SAFE vice-president John K. McNabb Jr., the landfill has been operating illegally because it failed to file the permit with the Norfolk County Registry of Deeds as required by local bylaws.

"Unless CHL can go back in time and file the permit at least one day before the effective date of the Water Resource District Bylaw of 1986, then it is operating illegally and must close down," McNabb said. "Since CHL did not have a lawful special permit when the water resource district took effect in 1986, CHL was not a lawful, non-conforming use that is grandfathered under the zoning bylaw."

Members of SAFE requested the Jan. 7 ZBA hearing to appeal Building Inspector Bob Egan's decision on Dec. 15 to take no enforcement action against CHL.

In a Dec. 15 letter to McNabb Jr., Egan said he was following legal advice from town counsel to coordinate any enforcement action with the board of health and DEP.

Egan said the building department, the health board and the Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) have been working behind the scenes to address environmental issues related to the illegal refuse.

McNabb also demanded that the zoning board fine CHL approximately $300,000 for the illegal landfilling.

The building inspector can assess a $100 a day fine for every day a zoning violation exists. McNabb wants CHL to pay the $100 fine retroactive to the day it received permission to dump in Area IV-A in November, 1989.

McNabb has expressed outrage that Egan took no action against CHL for the illegal landfilling.

CHL is allowed to place landfill in areas approved by local zoning ordinances and approved by the zoning board. The area in which CHL placed the illegal landfill, Area IV-B, is not approved for landfilling.

CHL owner Paul Barry told the health board last November that he had inadvertently placed the refuse in Area IV-B. Barry said the landfill liner was inadvertently placed in part of Area IV-B and he filled to the edge of the liner as is customary.

DeGiacomo said the zoning board is concerned chiefly with the zoning violation: CHL's permit does not allow it to dump refuse in Area IV-B.

"I think that the sense of the board is that the building inspector should have taken some sort of action," DeGiacomo said. "Bob (Egan) wanted to work with DEP and the board of health, but the environmental issues can be dealt with by other agencies."

DeGiacomo sympathized with Egan for trying to work with environmental officials on the illegal fill. But, DeGiacomo added, the illegal fill is a zoning violation and Egan is in charge of enforcing zoning violations.

DeGiacomo said it was likely the board would remand the decision to Egan to take some action against CHL.

McNabb wants Egan to issue a cease and desist order for illegal landfilling. He also wants the material immediately removed from the unpermitted area.

According to McNabb, a cease and desist order from Egan would effectively require CHL to remove the illegal material. He also insisted a fine was appropriate.

But DeGiacomo said he was personally uncomfortable with the fine because it appeared the violation was unintentional.

"It's a violation they (CHL) have admitted to and I expect they will comply with any removal order," DeGiacomo said. "The board felt that, clearly, there was a violation. Whether that violation was intentional or not is important to me regarding the fine."

McNabb has scoffed at CHL's assertion that the landfilling was inadvertent because of the size of the affected area.

SITEC Environmental Consultants of Hingham, CHL's engineering consultant, estimates the amount of illegal material at about 1,070 tons on 7,800 square feet of land.

DeGiacomo also pointed out that it is the building inspector who usually issues fines for zoning violations.

McNabb discovered the illegal landfilling last November after a visual inspection of the landfill and engineers maps detailing the boundaries of the landfill. He found a section of material about 200-feet long and up to 50-feet wide in Area IV-B that clearly extended beyond the approved area .

In a letter to DEP, CHL attorney Anton Moehrke admitted that CHL "inadvertently" placed material in Area IV-B. He also said CHL would remove the material if ordered to do so.

"It (CHL) is ready and willing nonetheless to remove the overfill and place it in previously approved portions of Area IV-A," Moehrke said.

Town manager proposes paramedic service with a professional manager. Previously the town employed a town administrator, who had significantly less authority over the day-to-day operations of the town, and budgetary authority rested with selectmen and the advisory committee.

While selectmen support the concept of upgrading the fire department to include more paramedics, they're not sure how to fund it.

The call firefighters cost the town about $30,000 a year. Haddad suggests next year that money be used to train two permanent firefighters to become paramedics and to cover their shifts while they are in training.

But Selectmen Chairman Michael H. Sullivan worries the town may need a call firefighters to boost the ranks during fires.

"We have a certain size fire department and have a limited number of fires in town," Sullivan said. "But when we do have a fire, the call firefighters show up.

"We have to be very careful before cutting that concept from the fire department."

Selectman Merle Brown said he thinks radical changes to the fire department are premature. He wants Haddad, who came on board last summer, to spend more time working with the fire chief and reassess his proposals later.

The board was not favorable to adding the position of deputy fire chief whose proposed $45,000 salary would come from money the town pays the water department for fire hydrant rental.

Water commission Chairman Robert Kasameyer cautioned that the water department would have to make up the lost $100,000 in rental fees by raising the water rates. That would cost the typical homeowner about $50 more a year, he said.

Hydrant rental money is not only used to repair hydrants but to maintain fire-flow capacity in town and is calculated on a per hydrant basis, Kasameyer explained.

But Haddad called the budget line item "archaic" and serves no purpose to the town. He pointed out that the water department and town have swapped dollars for years as the water department repays loans to the town in about equivalent annual amounts to what the town pays in hydrant fees to the department.

Haddad suggested setting aside $15,000 in a hydrant repair line item to repair hydrants and to begin a program to replace damaged hydrants in town.

But Kasameyer said the debt to the town is almost paid and the water department would have to pass on a budget cut to the users.

"You're taking money out of a portion of the budget and pretending this is new money and it's really not," he said.

Selectmen and Haddad took the matter under advisement and plan to continue budget discussions at their Jan.26 meeting.

site into a library and community center. The idea would mean a metamorphosis of its original mission, and Sullivan, who does not necessarily favor selling town property, agreed the group need not read its charge too literally. Moreover, a quick poll of the group found all the members favored exploring the idea, although the library trustees have so far only floated the idea and do not yet have a proposal.

But the change of direction seemed unwarranted to James Reilly of 64 Windy Hill Road.

"That's outside the scope of your charge," Reilly said. "Forget it." Reilly wanted the group to stick to the original charge and get the building back on the tax rolls. In the somewhat rancorous debates a year ago over closing Osgood and building a new Cohasset elementary school, the vacant building had been a bargaining chip in the negotiations. Its $1.3 million estimated value was expected to help defray the costs of the new school, he said.

Moreover, Reilly was not the only voice to challenge the committee. The committee also defended its work and its vision against an ominous assessment from school board man Joseph McElroy. Holding up a survey which only about 75 people returned, McElroy said the survey questions, which quizzed the public about the disposition of the school building, were flawed and the tabulations all but meaningless. "You're headed pell-mell towards mothballing this building," McElroy said. "Please do something. Do something."

But Adkins said repeatedly she was committed to finding the best use for the building and not merely sell it for the best price.

"If you just want to slap a sign on it and sell it, do it," Adkins said. "I'll quit."

How is this for a "super" idea? The Appalachia Service Project is selling submarine sandwiches, chili, salad and brownies for Super Bowl Sunday as a fundraiser to help support their week repairing homes in central Appalachia in June. Order forms are available at the local churches or you may call the Second Congregational Church at 383-0345. HAPPY 80TH SALLY

Here is an inspiration for all — Sunday, Jan. 11, Sally Wheeler celebrated her 80th birthday! There was a big celebration held in her honor at the home of her son, Christopher, in Norwell. The remarkable thing about this celebration, and why Sally should be an inspiration to many, is that for 65 years Sally has had diabetes! That must be some record, don't you think? She certainly has done her part, following doctor's orders, and committing to the requirements needed to maintain the proper balance needed to live a full and happy life. We think the other reason is her wonderful marriage to her husband Dick, they have been married for 58 years! Here's to you, Sally, you have our best wishes and our admiration!

GOLDEN ANNIVERSARY

Speaking of longevity and marriage, here is yet another wonderful story! A surprise 50th wedding anniversary party was given for Francis and Ruth Mitchell Dec. 5 by their children, Paul and Jane Mitchell, Brian and Linda Mitchell and Judy. The festivities were held at the Sons of Italy Hall in Hingham. The catered sit-down dinner was attended by 100 friends and relatives. Also attending the affair were their seven grandchildren! A great time was had by all and you have our heartiest congratulations.

GEMS OF HOPE

Hope that everyone caught the "cheers to ..." column in the Patriot Ledger recently — it spoke of Leah Taylor Roy and M[illegible] Larson and their work with the Gems of Hope organization — this organization helps poor families in South America by giving small loans to families and education to South American communities. The ladies went to the village of Pici (located in Brazil) where Gems had built a three-room schoolhouse. Leah brought the idea from Canada when she married Peter Roy, and Mary joined her in the work! Two hard-working gals who make things happen, we salute you!

GERARD'S NEW ADDRESS

Remember when we told you about Gerard Keating and how he would love to get visits and/or cards from you? Well, that still goes, but he has moved! Gerard's new address is: Gerard Keating, Harbor House, 11 Condito Rd. Rm. # 228, Hingham, 02043. If you want to visit, the hours are 2 to 8 p.m. Such a special man, let him know you care!

NO TERRIBLE TWOS

We have a very special birthday in our family this week; our granddaughter, Tori, will be 2 years old Jan. 14. So far, no terrible twos have started, it just won't happen (yeah, right!). Anyway, a nice family gathering with all of the fixin's (including great-grandmother Mimi's pink cake for Tori to stick her hands into) will take place. Happy birthday to Tori!

HONOR ROLL AT BC HIGH

We received a press release from Boston College High School recently, and thought that we could share the news with you — John R. Crowley-Buck (graduation year 2001) made honors; Jason S. You gents are certainly giving Cohasset an awesome name, and most especially, your names will always be recognized for your hard work! Congrats!

CO-CAPTAIN AT HOLDERNESS

The Holderness School also sent us news about one of its Cohasset students, Neely Wakeman. Neely is a junior there, and has been voted a co-captain of that school's varsity field hockey team for the second straight year. This fall Neely was an outstanding midfielder for a team that reached the semifinals of the New England prep school championship tournament. Neely's coach stated that, "It's very unusual for someone to be elected captain as a junior, and then to repeat. This speaks well of her integrity, and the respect she has earned from her peers. Next year will be her fourth year starting at midfield for us. The corner play and midfield through-passes are her particular specialties." Neely is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel H. Wakeman of Cohasset.

COHASSET MARINER

EDITORIALS & OPINIONS

A dream in progress

Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. would tell us on the South Shore we still have a way to go to realize more diversity. His dream has not quite been realized in the suburbs south of Boston.

Our communities have made some important strides in the journey to promote diversity and acceptance among all races. There are many success stories to talk about, but there is still a lot of work that needs to be done. The South Shore has become more tolerant and to an extent has welcomed people of color and various ethnic backgrounds. Yet the small number of minorities living and working in our communities cannot be overlooked.

There are more minority-run businesses on the South Shore than ever. However, they still represent a very small portion of the business community. The business leaders still have to fight stereotypes and need to prove themselves over and over again. Our role as community members should be to patronize and support these businesses, thereby encouraging them.

In 1997, non-white residents accounted for about 3.94 percent of the South Shore population, or about 10,206 people. That's a far cry from the dream envisioned by Dr. King.

So what's the solution?

Keep working at it. We have to stand up and let our elected officials know we want increased affordable housing and opportunities to encourage more diversity. Providing affordable housing is not a minority issue. With housing prices soaring, the South Shore — save for a few isolated areas — is getting out of reach for many people, and it is not just an issue for minorities. We need more thought in overall housing development as part of each town's vision for the future. We are witnessing too many high-priced developments sprouting up; homes which end up costing well over $300,000. The South Shore is home to the METCO program, which buses in children from urban areas. The program has been a model of success in such towns as Scituate, Braintree, Hingham and Cohasset. In its 32nd year, the program has helped break down barriers and enlighten all who have participated. The program has served as a catalyst in developing healthier race relations.

As one proponent of the program noted, "kids just end up seeing each other as kids."

The challenge is getting more towns involved with the program. For example, the Silver Lake school district, which serves the towns of Kingston, Pembroke, Halifax and Plympton, has never considered the program in the nearly 20 years Paul Squarcia has been superintendent. Abington, Weymouth, Holbrook, Duxbury and Marshfield have never participated in the program either. Most school officials will argue there isn't enough space to accommodate the additional students. Maybe so, but many of these towns are looking at building expansion projects and could possibly consider the idea of several METCO students in the overall scheme. Students here on the South Shore will learn invaluable lessons, teachings that go beyond the textbook. They can learn to develop more tolerance and accept more people who are different from them. And they'll get a taste of the "real world," where our global neighbors from every walk of life become closer as we continue to advance technologically and develop world-wide business links. This weekend we celebrate Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday with a holiday. This year also marks the 30th anniversary of his assassination. It is a perfect opportunity to give pause and reflect on his dream for our country and our community.

In this issue, we devote eight pages to exploring that legacy and how it relates to the South Shore. We see first-hand his dream coming to life with many success stories profiled, yet we also see where it still falls short. We can't change the past or what has been, but we can make a difference going forward. That's what he would have wanted.

— Mark Skala

Mariner editorials praised

To the Editor:

As 1997 comes to a close, I want to commend the Cohasset Mariner for the fine, thoughtful, meritorious and provocative editorials that have alerted our citizens to think and to act on issues and programs that would benefit Cohasset, the environment, education, and citizens of all ages.

We are also fortunate to have such an outstanding, progressive newspaper that has contributed to the financial success of fundraising endeavors of non-profit organizations by voicing and encouraging the giving and attendance to causes that serve the betterment of Cohasset.

'Thank you, Book Angels'

To the Editor:

Buttonwood Books would like to thank all its wonderful customers who became Book Angels this holiday season. In the spirit of holiday sharing, more than 170 books were given to people in need. Books purchased at Buttonwood Books and Toys in Cohasset became gifts for children and adults served by Wellspring in Hull and Friends of the Homeless of the South Shore in Weymouth. Books purchased at Buttonwood for Kids in Hingham went to children served by the Mary-Martha Learning Center, Hingham Interfaith Food Pantry and The South Shore Educational Collaborative Teen Parent Program, all in Hingham. Our most sincere thanks to you all!

Taking responsibility for liquor-related deaths

To the Editor:

With reference to an article by staff writer Susan Coffey published Jan. 8, I suggest that punishing hosts for the misadventures of young people who drink too much doesn't solve the problem, except in the rare cases where an adult is proven to have deliberately and directly encouraged under-age drinking.

The real problem is the inability of hosts to control the behavior of youngsters who reflect the permissiveness of today's society, thanks to poor parental training and the degrading influence of TV, movies, rock stars etc. on our culture.

If a young drinker kills himself or others, his or her parents should bear much of the blame. They, not his or her teachers, and certainly not the host, had the primary responsibility to instill values and basis for judgment. The host should not, but often does, have the burden of dealing with young people untrained to respect authority, all too accustomed to having their own way, unequipped to resist peer pressure, and already too familiar with the glow of alcohol.

Evasion of responsibility by taking someone else to court has become de rigueur, at the same time we decry the number of lawyers, increasing cost of goods and services, and constraints on freedom. Well, the sickness of litigation fever didn't result from having an excess of lawyers, it's the other way around. It's the increasing unwillingness to take personal responsibility, and increasing use of litigation to help shift the blame to someone else, that requires more and more lawyers.

Our society does not need more laws that shift responsibility from young drinkers and their parents, any more than we need more TV and movie expressions of contempt for good behavior.

Memory Tree support appreciated

To the Editor:

The South Shore Community Center would like to thank you for the wonderful coverage of our "Memory Tree" during the recent holiday season. We had great positive response and interest from many individuals and plan to make this an annual tradition.

We would like to thank Barry Waste for the donation of a lovely Christmas tree, which was displayed with the memorial lights in our front yard. Additionally, we would like to thank John Bellefontaine for designing and making a special indoor tree which was displayed in our lobby with names of loved ones.

We would also like to mention an Archangel donation we received, in memory of Daniel H. Leahy Sr., given by Barbara and David Leahy.

Thanks to all for the continued support.

Holistic septic solution needed

To the Editor:

Recently, I had a long talk with Lisa Bumstead, a member of CEES (Citizens for Equitable Environmental Solutions). Having been in town long enough to become cynical about participation in "the process," it was refreshing for me to see someone, who is obviously busy raising kids and all, become focused on quality of life issues. I discussed this with Polly Logan who also remarked on the refreshing new activists such as Lisa who seem to have a much more rational point of view about town growth and its politics.

Lisa says that she has stopped being surprised by the confusion that attended the last health board meeting when, as an example, the two agencies, sewer and health, have trouble explaining which town meeting warrant article controls the formation of a priority district. As the story unfolded it became clear that the system of responsibilities and proper management of major elements of our infrastructure were, and are, to a great extent dysfunctional. The town is apparently on the verge of implementing a series of measures which will greatly enrich contractors and septic inspectors without doing very much for our environment, our septic/sewer system or our health.

Some of those forming the CEES group felt that it might make sense to see if there is a technical basis for any of the mandated inspection and implementation requirements. Alas, after reading the literally hundreds of documents accumulated over the 20-odd years the town has been in noncompliance, it was found that the process had become so politicized that neither facts nor technology nor logic contributed in reaching the final decision.

It should be said at the outset that everyone participating in the game has the best intentions. It is just that some are playing with outdated equipment, and some are playing with insufficient information or training. It's clear that in Cohasset is an element which wishes to choke off growth by almost any means. But it's no longer possible to use sewer system management to limit the growth of a town. The risks are too great. We could easily have an ecological meltdown here without a responsible oversight of all types of effluent. Our rocky, coastal, marsh-filled suburban town will continue to grow. It's a demographic certainty. Pollution will increase, and with every improvement to transportation or infrastructure, the problem will become bigger, and putting a Mount Flushmore of sand in everyone's backyard may be the Title V solution, but it won't solve the problem. It's time for our various boards to look at a holistic solution for our water, waste treatment, septic and trash disposal needs and see where the practical, cost-effective solution lies. Our boards need to exchange information in a planned and regular way, seek and receive information about the best technology and management tools available and use them, and stop this senseless vituperative name-calling silliness.

What did happen last week was that everyone became familiar with one another's rhetoric, the players were introduced to each other, and a final decision was delayed thanks to the CEES and the courageous board of health. If the time so gained is used to engage in some constructive data-gathering and fruitful discussions and negotiations involving all interested parties, it will be well spent.

Public support for school budget urged

To the Editor:

As a school committee member, I want to thank the selectmen and Town Manager Haddad for their strong effort to understand the current school district budgetary issues at the Monday meeting. It had to be difficult for each of them to listen to our explanation of why we have a FY98 cost overrun and why we need help over and above Town Manager Haddad's original FY99 budgetary guidelines.

It's impossible to recapitulate all the specific factors driving the current situation; so, I will not make that attempt. I will simply promise you that I have not forgotten my election commitment to be "good for the taxpayer, good for the schools." I also believe that my school committee colleagues share the same goals although our conclusions sometimes differ. Likewise, I know that some of the more outspoken critics of the schools have legitimate concerns. What we all have in common is the objective of providing the best possible schools for our children at the lowest achievable cost.

At this difficult point in time, I will simply appeal to the Selectmen and the public to support our request for an increase over the original budgetary guidelines. In turn, I accept the commitment of my fellow school committee members to present next year's budget accompanied by a comprehensive five-year strategic plan which includes a first quality financial component. Frankly, we need that time to present to you, the public, our vision for the Cohasset School District and what it will cost. The final decision will be yours.

In the meantime, I ask you to "bite the bullet," and place confidence in the officials that have been elected and appointed to lead the school district. Right now, I sense a tremendous disappointment among many persons who voted for me, because I am supporting a significant school district budget increase. I can understand such a perception considering the current situation. However, you elected us to lead and that is what we must do to the best of our ability. Candidly, we face a very difficult period during fiscal years 1998 and 1999 and cannot make adjustments "on a dime." To do so would dismantle progress that has been painstakingly realized over a period of years. I am not willing to do that.

In the final analysis, we must join together at the annual town meeting to listen to the best recommendations that your town manager, the selectmen, advisory committee, and school committee can present. I ask you to respect the dedicated effort that we will all make on your behalf.

I want to close by taking my hat off to a man that I have sometimes differed with in the past. Superintendent Hart has worked diligently on the current budgetary issues and during protracted meetings and discussions. He has worked throughout the holidays and as recently as this Sunday when he was driving around Cohasset dropping off budget updates. I have come to appreciate a man with whom I quite frequently disagree. He is as committed today, despite his retirement announcement, as he has been during his almost 29 years of service to the Cohasset schools.

I hold the fervent hope that the rancor of the recent past will not perpetuate itself and that we will move forward as a united community.

Cutler Committee releases campaign finance records

Campaign finance reports released by the Cutler Committee this week show the campaign has jumped to a quick start in fund-raising.

Contributions for 1997 totalled $15,150 with an additional $580 of in-kind contributions received. The campaign's ending balance for the year was $13,663.19.

"I'm very grateful for this strong show of support. We've exceeded all of our expectations for the year," said Cutler. "What pleases me the most is not the amount of contributions, but the number of contributors. We've had more than 120 people donate $10 or more. That's the backbone of a successful campaign."

The 27-year old democrat is running for state representative in Hingham, Hull and Cohasset. Although not required by state campaign finance law, the Cutler Committee has released its records to all local media.

An itemized listing of contributors is available with the state Office of Campaign and Political Finance, or by contacting the Cutler Committee. In the interests of full disclosure the Cutler Committee also plans to release its campaign finance records on the Internet, via its web site.

Wilkerson violated public trust

Last week, the Massachusetts State Senate took up a formidable task. We were asked to decide the fate of a fellow senator who had pleaded guilty to charges of failing to file her federal income tax returns for four years. The task was clear; we were to determine the appropriate penalty for a representative of the people who had violated the trust of those who had elected her. The verdict which was ultimately reached, however, fell far short of an appropriate response.

The Senate Committee on Ethics recommended that Sen. Diane Wilkerson be removed from her position as chairwoman of the Insurance Committee. I voted against this recommendation, feeling that it did not adequately address the seriousness of the mistakes made by Sen. Wilkerson regarding the basic responsibility of paying her taxes, and supported an alternative proposal which would have resulted in her expulsion from the Senate.

Senator Wilkerson assumed certain responsibilities when she accepted the public office which she still holds. A major part of her job entails introducing and voting on legislation, much of which is tax related. After failing to file federal income tax returns from 1991 to 1994, how can she possibly vote on these issues? Can Sen. Wilkerson truly continue to perform her duties as an elected official and maintain the trust of her constituency? While Sen. Wilkerson has proven to be an independent and hard working legislator, I do not believe that she will be able to do so.

Sen. Wilkerson's actions also have broader implications. Her failure to comply with federal law sullies the reputation of the entire Massachusetts Senate. Much of the Senate's time is committed to the wise expenditure of the taxpayers' money, levied through the very process which she herself has chosen not to participate in. This type of flagrant violation will only contribute to the public's cynicism about government, weakening their faith in the officials which they have elected to represent them. I believe that the proper and efficient functioning of the Senate body must be placed above the interests of any one legislator. Therefore, expulsion would have been the proper course, not to punish Sen. Wilkerson, but rather to vindicate the integrity of the Senate.

For these and other reasons, I was one of the 11 senators who supported a measure to increase Sen. Wilkerson's punishment to expulsion. While failure to pay federal income tax may be a misdemeanor in the eyes of the law, the violation of the public's trust by a state senator is a much more serious offense.

School committee lobbies for more money

new police cruiser and copier and ventilator for the fire department — with the balance coming from a reduction across the board from all departments.

School committee members propose the following increases over the school department's FY'98 budget:

$152,210 for special needs;

$223,621 for contracted salaries;

$51,631 for non-contracted salaries;

$139,753 for additional teachers and aides due to increased enrollment;

$20,500 for technology services/repairs;

$28,100 for building and maintenance;

$18,144 for middle school athletics;

$30,000 to upgrade the position of business manager from part-time to full-time.

Jerz explained that some felt $300-$400,000 more was needed in the budget. She said Supt. Stephen Hart sat down with principals who had feedback from the teaching staff and asked for the minimum.

Selectmen questioned the need for a full-time business manager and wondered why that request couldn't wait until the new superintendent is on board. They thought the new superintendent should decide if that position is needed.

Hart is retiring at the end of this school year.

They also asked about the need for middle school athletics and questioned the rise in special education costs.

Saying it would save in the long run, school committee member Joseph McElroy defended the upgrade in the business manager position.

"I'm absolutely convinced we would have a return on investment within two years on that position," he said.

About 17 percent of Cohasset students have special needs. The school department expects to expend upwards of $1.33 million for special needs this year which includes $460,000 in outside tuition for residential placements, day schools and collaboratives.

The school committee said the middle school athletic program has attracted new kids to sports. Before the middle school was created, seventh- and eighth-graders were on teams with high school students.

No decision on the school budget was reached this week. Selectmen and Haddad will continue budget deliberations Jan. 26.

COHASSET MARINER

Free agent has dreams of pulling on Red Sox

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset resident Ken Greer has accomplished his own version of the American Dream, pulling on a uniform and taking the mound in the big leagues for both the San Fransisco Giants and the Chicago Cubs.

Now looking at what might be the end of his career Greer is still holding out hope that he might be able to do the same for his hometown team, the Boston Red Sox.

Greer, 30, spent last year in the Baltimore Orioles organization with the Bowie BaySox and then finishing with their AAA club, the Rochester Red Wings.

Set free by the Orioles after the end of last season, Greer said a non-roster invite to the Red Sox camp may be the only thing that will stand behind him and starting his new life after baseball.

Part of that life began over the weekend as a pitching instructor with the grand opening of the Bases Loaded Training Center, located at the South Shore Sports Center in Hingham, where he handles the pitchers; his brother Kevin, the baseball coach at Scituate, works with the younger players; and Hingham High's assistant baseball coach Danny McHugh works with the sluggers and the fielders.

"I want to be involved with baseball in some fashion and this opportunity seemed to come along at the exact right time for me," said Greer, who was a tenth round draft pick in 1988 by the dreaded New York Yankees. "I'm looking forward to it."

Coming off of what he called a "simply horrible" stint with the Red Wings (0-2, 5.79 ERA and one save in 15 appearances), Greer says he still believes he can play professional baseball but is at a point in his life where it is going to have to be on his own terms.

He and his wife Abby (Adams) bought a house in Cohasset in September and Greer said that being away from home may have contributed to the problems he experienced on the mound last year.

"I've told my agent that I'd like to finish my career playing for the Red Sox," said Greer, who also contacted the team himself to tell them the same thing. "You always want to have an opportunity to play for your hometown team and I really do think that I could pitch at Fenway Park. I'm not going to hold my breath, but I'd love a chance to make the team."

With the likes of Jim Corsi and Dennis Eckersley on the pitching staff, Boston has shown that they are not adverse to having veteran leadership on the mound.

Greer said despite the problems that plagued him last season he truly feels he could still be a major league pitcher.

"There are a lot of guys like me out there looking to hook on with a baseball team. That's the nature of the business," said Greer. "If this is it, I still had a great career. I got to play with the Giants and the Mets and was traded straight up for Frank Tanana. I have no regrets."

Greer started out following in the footsteps of his older brother on the baseball field and eventually distinguished himself

CHS hoopsters can't seem to buy a break

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

This winter vacation was a bittersweet one for the Cohasset boys' basketball team.

In the Cohasset Converse Classic, the Skippers dropped their first game to Scituate in a disappointing loss. The visiting Sailors cruised by their hosts 91-76, a game in which the home team could never seem to get intense. As indicated by the score, unusually high for a high school game, little defense was played by either side.

As has been their tendency this year, the Skippers relied heavily on three-pointers for their offense. Indeed, in the first half they netted five, including a Pat Hurley buzzer beater. Hurley was fouled on the play and sank his freebie for a four-point play, making the half-time score 40-37 in Scituate's favor.

Despite gallant second half efforts by senior captains Paul-Michael Quintin and Justin McNamara, Cohasset couldn't stay with Scituate's high-powered attack in the second half.

The tournament's consolation round was a different story. Again playing host, this time to the Dover-Sherborn Raiders, the boys in blue fell behind 20-3 in the game's first few minutes.

By the half, they had closed the gap to seven points at 36-29. Paul-Michael Quintin and Jamie DeMichele accounted for the Skippers' last 28 first-half points, including a dazzling play when DeMichele picked off a pass and dished to Quintin, who slipped, but nailed the shot on his way to the floor. The senior captain also drained three threes in the first half alone. Hurley and senior Andy Hamilton set the tempo at the defensive end of the court, with blocked shots and excellent footwork.

With McNamara running the point, the home team began to mount the final charge of their comeback. A 16-4 run was highlighted by a DeMichele lefty lay-up three-point play, a Hamilton bucket on a pass from McNamara and a DeMichele trey, which brought all 37 Skipper fans to their feet. Hamilton then put Cohasset ahead for good with a swish from beyond the arc, bringing the score to 51-50.

Hurley canned a bucket in the point and he and his mates sank the necessary amount of foul shots, staggering away gratefully with a 64-62 victory. The win was a gutsy one, over a long time non-league nemesis, the type which a team needs for a gut check and to build confidence in close games. Hopefully, the Skippers will be in for fewer nail-biters and more blowout wins as the season goes on.

Girls lacrosse registration open

Because the Cohasset Middle School will not begin a grade 7-8 girls lacrosse program until the spring of 1999, arrangements have been made for Cohasset girls in those grades to join the Scituate youth lacrosse girls' team that begins play in March.

The youth lacrosse games will be played on the weekends, and one practice will be held during each week.

Any girls or their parents wishing to join the Scituate team should call Rose Kahn at 383-0332. Registration should be done as soon as possible. "Scituate's registration has already taken place, and we do not want to lose this opportunity," said Mrs. Kahn.

Luke Caldwell and Mike Baird

For this first edition of Mariner Athlete of the Month, two CHS grapplers are better than one as Luke Caldwell and Mike Baird share the award.

Caldwell and Baird have a lot in common. Both are Honor Roll members of the junior class, serve as the captains of the wrestling squad and are following in a family tradition of wrestling success at CHS.

Baird has been with the wrestling with the team since seventh grade. He's done well in recent tourneys: finishing second in the 125 l.b. weight class in Marshfield and fourth in the Whitman-Hanson event over the weekend.

The third of the four wrestling Baird brothers, Mike should reach the 100-win plateau sometime next season. He also plays soccer and runs track at the high school.

Caldwell, a starter on the varsity football team, wrestles at 174 lb. class.

"Luke is just a tireless worker," said wrestling coach Torin Sweeney.

Free agent has dreams of pulling on Red Sox

as one of the top pitchers in the area for Hull High.

Greer also excelled as a football player, but saw a better chance for him to play major league baseball.

He would then move on to UMass-Amherst, with scholarship in hand, where he was teamed up with a number of eventual major leaguers, including Anaheim Angels all-star shortstop Gary DiSarcina.

Greer said that he expected to be drafted, but not as high as he was and was especially grateful that the Yankees allowed him to finish his last year of school. He left with a degree in Sports Management. A lifelong Red Sox fan, Greer said becoming a Yankee led to the requisite amount of razzing from friends and family but he did find a friendly face at Oneonta, NY, his first minor league stop.

"My coach there was (former Red Sox catcher and coach) Gary Allenson, so we took some friendly abuse and had a lot of things to talk about," remembered Greer. "It was exciting just to be in a professional baseball uniform."

> "I've told my agent that I'd like to finish my career playing for the Red Sox. You always want to have an opportunity to play for your hometown team and I really do think that I could pitch at Fenway Park. I'm not going to hold my breath, but I'd love a chance to make the team."
> KEN GREER

In between stints in the big leagues with San Fransico and Chicago Cubs, Greer has had a chance to see a great deal of North America in his well-traveled minor league career. Some of his stops have included Oneonta, Prince William, Fort Lauderdale, Fort Lauderdale (again), Prince William (again), Albany, Columbus, Columbus (again), New York, Phoenix, San Fransico, Chicago, Calgary (twice), Bowie and finally Rochester. "The first five years were great, but eventually you learn that although baseball is a game, it's a business as well," said Greer. "As you get older, if you don't perform you go out the door. That's just business, but you have to go out there and enjoy it as long as you can."

A pure power pitcher in high school, Greer said he had to change through college and the minor leagues to make himself a more attractive commodity. "Everyone can thrown 90 mph once you go professional so you need to have something that makes you special," said Greer. He made the total cross-over to a different style of pitching in 1994 after surgery on his elbow to remove six bone chips and a bone spur caused by the wear and tear of being a pitcher all his life.

"After the surgery I actually picked up a little bit of velocity," said Greer. "I got to be a little more of a power pitcher and developed a split-fingered fastball." Talking about his work at Bases Loaded, Greer said his teaching is simple: stick with the basics and above all, have fun with what you are doing.

"No matter who you are, it's a matter of sticking with the fundamentals and building from there no matter in what league you are playing," said Greer. "What do guys like Barry Bonds, Matt Williams, Wade Boggs and Cal Ripken do when they are in a slump? They go back to video and hitting the ball off of a tee to see what they are doing wrong. Even when they get into a slump, they get out of it by going back to the basics and everything else takes care of itself."

"I've been struggling with my weight since I was a teenager and never believed that I could actually lose it. But Diet Workshop has taught me how to make healthy eating a priority for me and my family. I started out wanting to get into a smaller dress size. Instead I found a whole new way of life. Grapplers fare well in Panther Tourney

Cohasset warmed up for their own Jan. 24th wrestling tourney by taking a strong third place in the Whitman-Hanson event over the weekend.

Cohasset grapplers Craig Sheerin (second) and Mike Rossi (first) placed high at the event.

Others who did well included Liam O'Donnell, Dan Litteaur, J.P. Laugelle, Justin Golden, Luke Caldwell and Mike Baird.

"Overall, we did really well," said coach Torin Sweeney. "I didn't know where we were going to fall, but a lot of things went our way and we were able to pull out a third place finish."

In town for the seventh annual Cohasset tourney will be such South Shore powers as Rockland, Duxbury, Hanover, Middleboro, Scitaute and Norwell.

We've won it for the last couple of years, but it's going to be a tight race this time," said Sweeney. "Rockland and Marshfield are really coming on strong, but our boys really like wrestling in front of the home crowd."

Blood shortage crisis declared

Cohasset drive bolsters supply to area hospitals

By Jennifer R. Horan
STAFF WRITER

Just in time for a national blood shortage, 140 Cohasset residents made appointments to donate blood at yesterday's Cohasset Community Blood Drive, sponsored by the Red Cross.

"There is no artificial substitute for blood," said Cohasset resident Kevin O'Connor, who organizes the event with his wife Ann at the Unitarian Parish House. "So it's only other folks that help the people who need it."

The New England Red Cross headquarters in Dedham recently declared a blood shortage crisis in its four-state region of Massachusetts, Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont. The National Red Cross declared a shortage this week.

"A lot of people survive and thrive because of blood donations," said Pat Hurley, a spokesman for the New England Red Cross. Donated blood and blood by-products — platelets, plasma and red cells —help a variety of hospital patients, including organ and bone marrow transplant survivors as well as accident and trauma victims.

The New England chapter has been relying heavily on local blood drives to meet the needs of patients at area hospitals.

"We're meeting all the hospitals' needs," Hurley said. "We like to have a four-day supply of blood in anticipation of unexpected emergencies. Presently we're operating on a one-day supply." A one-day supply consists of 1,200 units of blood, she said.

To generate blood donations in Cohasset, local volunteers call residents in town who have given blood in the past. They ask the donors to schedule an appointment for a donation.

O'Connor thinks Cohasset — which has been holding blood drives since World War II — may be one of the only remaining towns that still solicits blood donations over the phone prior to the drive. Different groups and organizations in town collaborate on contacting a list of previous donors who are part of their membership.

"We usually get a pretty good turnout," O'Connor said, noting that between 80 and 100 people donate one pint of blood at each of the three drives held each year. Traditionally, about 30 percent of those who sign up to donate blood never show up, he said.

"We're always looking for more donors."
— KEVIN O'CONNOR, LOCAL BLOOD DRIVE ORGANIZER.

The list contains 250 names from St. Stephen's Church, the Second Congregational Church, the Unitarian Church, the Rotary Club and Seevey Engineering as well as "independents" from the community. That number decreased from 350 people f- years ago, O'Connor said.

"We're always looking more donors," he said.

Some of the donors in Cohasset have given blood almost 100 times, he pointed out.

"The donors in Cohasset are very faithful," said Corinne Cahill, a registered nurse who has been involved with the town's blood drives since 1965. "It's considered to be a very productive blood mobile. The Red Cross loves coming to our town because they feel the effort they put into it pays off."

Giving blood takes about an hour and includes filling out a form and receiving a quick health and blood pressure check from a nurse on duty. Donors recline on beds for about 25 minutes while volunteers draw a pint of blood. Afterward, juice and snacks are served to ward off sluggishness. Donors are asked not to engage in strenuous physical activity and to refrain from smoking for about 24 hours after giving blood.

Last year, 305,000 people donated blood to the New England Red Cross, which served 702,000 patients, Hurley said.

Donated blood must undergo a series of 11 tests — including HIV and Hepatitis — before it can be administered to patients. While all types of blood are needed, the Red Cross currently has a critical shortage of type O negative blood, type A negative blood, type B negative blood and type O positive.

Wednesday's blood drive took place between 2 and 7 p.m. at the Unitarian Parish House at 23 North Main Street. Other Cohasset Community Blood Drives are held in June and September.

Interested donors who missed the Jan. 14 drive in Cohasset can call (800) GIVE LIFE for the nearest bloodmobile.

The King Legacy

A lifetime hewing 'a stone of hope'

"With this faith we will be able to hew out of the mountain of despair a stone of hope."

"I Have a Dream" speech

It took 15 years to create Martin Luther King Jr. Day, even though Rep. John Conyers, D-Mich., submitted the first legislation to commemorate King's birthday four days after the April 4, 1968, assassination.

It wasn't until November, 1983, that then-President Ronald Reagan signed in the holiday, even though the legislation had been resubmitted each congressional session and millions had joined in support.

Another 15 years have passed. Where are we in terms of the ideals King so fervently fought and died for? In these eight pages, we explore the status of King's legacy, here on the South Shore.

It is a legacy that began to form early in King's life. His grandfather, the Rev. A.D. Williams, was fond of saying that even at the age of 2, the youngster "kept books around him, he just like the idea of having them."

The love of books continued as the young Martin Luther grew up in the Sweet Auburn section of Atlanta, Ga., the second of three children, attending all-black schools. He graduated from Morehouse College in Atlanta in 1948, and by the age of 27 he had earned two more degrees, a BD from Crozer Theological Seminary and a PhD from Boston University.

In 1954, the year King arrived with his bride, Coretta Scott, at his first pastorate in Montgomery, Ala., Rosa Parks was arrested for refusing to move to the back of the bus. King was chosen to lead the Montgomery Improvement Association, the support group that organized in her defense. Soon he became a household figure not only throughout the U.S., but also throughout the world. A 1957 visit to India is said to have cemented his commitment to non-violence.

King's civil rights activities grew until he could no longer justly perform his Montgomery pastoral duties, and he returned to Atlanta to co-pastor the Ebenezer Baptist Church with his father, Martin Luther King Sr. He became president of the new and rapidly growing Southern Christian Leadership Conference, a civil rights organization committed to non-violence. His practicing of civil disobedience led to a 1960 sentencing to four months in state prison, which in turn became a Kennedy-Nixon campaign issue. From 1961 to spring, 1963, he intensified his drive for equal rights with boycotts in Albany, Ga., and Birmingham, Ala., resulting in his arrest and jailing.

Early summer 1963 was filled with plans for the March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom, and it was there, on Aug. 28, that King delivered his now-famous "I Have a Dream" speech. That year he was Time magazine's man of the year. The next year, at his, his followers and then-president Lyndon B. Johnson's prodding, Congress passed the first civil rights bill since 1875. In fall, 1964, King received the Nobel Prize for Peace.

Yet King's push for civil rights met opposition from the onset, first setting off home and church bombings and the murders of civil rights workers. The 1965 Selma to Montgomery march, pressing for voting rights, was almost stalled. At the same time, the civil rights movement began to lose confidence in non-violence as boycotting, picketing and demonstrating became unsuccessful tactics.

Still, King persevered. In spring, 1968, he went to Memphis to assist striking sanitation workers. It was there, on April 4, that he was shot and killed on a motel balcony. News of his assassination set off days of rioting in various U.S. cities, and millions the world over mourned his death.

Diversity a way of life for Hingham neighborhood

By Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITER

On Ward Street in Hingham, diversity is a natural part of life. While lifestyles have become more fast-paced over the years, the friendliness and loyalty which have characterized the neighborhood for decades still exists there today.

According to Marion Teague, members of her family, the Simpsons and the Tuttles, were among the first settlers on Ward Street. The Simpson family was of American Indian background and the Tuttles of Negro and Indian background.

"The land was divided up between the two families, who were related through intermarriage," Teague said. "Ward Street was first settled by both black and white families."

In fact, "Tuttleville" is still shown on some maps of Hingham. At least three generations of her family have lived on the street since at least the early 1800s.

While growing up on Ward Street, Teague recalls it was a neighborly place to live.

"The closeness of the neighbors centered around the fact that many of the women stayed home to care for their families, which bred a close-knit feeling," she said. "Whenever there was a marriage or picnic or a death or illness, that issue became a neighborhood concern. The neighbors were like a family to one another."

Nevertheless, even today with more hectic lifestyles predominating and "more things to take residents away from home" during the day, Teague said she isn't aware of any racial tension in the neighborhood.

Joyce Smith, who has lived on Ward Street for 10 years, agreed that its residents "don't think about race until someone brings up the subject." She is the mother of a 7-year-old boy.

"We don't recognize it as a factor; it's not an issue," she said. "There are also residents of Italian and Irish descent living on our street, and I think the diversity is great. Everyone always says hello to each other and gets along. We couldn't ask for a nicer neighborhood."

Many years ago, black and white families used to meet in each other's homes to hold church services, including two of Teague's great-aunts.

Ultimately a small chapel was built at the corner of High and Ward streets, now the site of a dentist's office, where neighbors would gather for church services.

As the congregation grew, various members went on to join other denominations, including Baptist and Methodist. Eventually the chapel was outgrown.

"As transportation became more readily available, some of the parishioners branched out to other churches," Teague said.

At a hearing held last year regarding installing sidewalks on busy Ward Street, resident Robert Green, who is Teague's nephew, was surprised and pleased to see new residents "fight as passionately for them as longtime residents have for many years.

"Their concern was just as genuine as ours, and that really made an impression," he said.

The Teagues met some of their neighbors for the first time at that meeting.

"Everyone was friendly and banded together in support of the issue," Teague said. "People are just busier today and don't always take the time to meet their neighbors."

According to Ronald "Bucky" Yourell, Ward Street residents still keep a watchful eye out for each other. He has lived on Ward Street since 1962, and his grandmother, Edith Margetts, has resided there since 1920.

"I remember cow pastures across the street from my house which led to Plymouth River School," he recalled.

During the 1960s and '70s, there were at least 22 kids in the neighborhood, according to Yourell.

"We all stuck together," he said. "The kids were always with each other, even in school."

Any altercations arising among any of the children weren't based on racial tension, said Yourell, who enjoys the neighborhood so much he and his wife chose to raise their three children, Jimmy, 13, Jessica, 7, and Jacqlyn, 16 months, there.

"Even though the neighbors only see each other in passing, it's still like the '60s here," he said. "We all wave to each other in the morning as we head out."

"If a strange car is seen in the area, one of us reports it," said Yourell. "It's an extremely safe neighborhood."

Today, as when he was growing up, Ward Street residents iron out any differences among their children in a neighborly fashion.

"We go right up to the house and say, 'Hey, our kids aren't getting along' and work out a solution," he said. "After all, kids will be kids."

Judy Margetts, who has lived on Ward Street most of her life, also recalls childhood memories.

"We used to skate on a neighborhood pond together and visit each other's houses," she said. "I don't ever recall hearing any derogatory remarks based on race.

"We had our typical neighborhood disagreements, but they were based on the usual 'kid' issues, like someone claiming he was taller than another, and they were easily ironed out," she said. "A lot of people move here and don't want to leave because it's a pleasant place to live."

Today nothing much has changed that way. Margetts shared the fact that one of the closest friendships on Ward Street is between two teenagers of different racial backgrounds.

"They've always been best friends," she said. Teague's husband, Robert, who moved to Ward Street in 1962, enjoys the friendly feeling of the neighborhood. He fondly recalls times spent in conversation with neighbors during snowstorms, for example.

"There haven't been many changes over the years, except that some people have moved in and out," he said. "We'll stop and talk when we have the chance."

Karen Green, who is the Teagues' niece, remembers a walk held in Hingham during the 1960s to celebrate civil rights, which was organized by black elementary school principal Samuel Turner. Local churches were also involved in the effort.

In her opinion, tolerance for people of diverse backgrounds on Ward Street is rooted in the fact that blacks who originally settled there were of different ethnic backgrounds themselves. "They assimilated into a certain culture unique to Ward Street," she said. "That's key to why this neighborhood has worked so well — that was the start of all residents accepting a mixture of different nationalities."

High priced homes mean less economic diversity

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

With home prices soaring, the lack of diversity on the South Shore may have more to do with economics than race.

"There is a need for more affordable housing in all communities whether there is a high minority population there or not," says Aaron Gornstein, executive director of the non-profit Citizens Housing and Planning Association, which advocates for affordable housing.

Most area towns fall well below the state guideline of 10 percent for low- to moderate-income housing.

Cohasset is at 2.84 percent, Norwell at 3.17 and Marshfield at 4.61, for example (see related chart). Percentages are calculated by dividing the number of subsidized housing units into the total number of year-round households.

As the need for more affordable housing increases, the challenge will be to get the towns to cooperate. And the biggest roadblock to that is attitude.

James R. Watson still bristles when recalling the brouhaha surrounding a proposal by South Shore Habitat for Humanity several years ago to build four houses for low-income families on a parcel of land off Central Street in Hingham.

Watson, who is chairman of the local housing partnership, said in the face of neighborhood opposition, the plan for four was finally reduced to a single house.

Even today some people sneer at the camper parked in the yard.

"But if there was a mast on it, it would be OK," he said.

The South Shore region does not do its fair share of providing the range of housing needed, says Sen. John D. O'Brien Jr., D-Andover, chairman of the Housing and Urban Development Committee.

O'Brien is a lead sponsor of the 1997 Housing Bond Bill to support affordable housing initiatives and preserve the state's investment in affordable housing.

Affordable housing is defined as affordable for people or families with incomes not higher than 80 percent of the median annual income in the region, which is about $40,000.

The state has a tool to encourage communities to develop more affordable housing. The so-called Anti-Snob Zoning Act of 1969 streamlines the approval process through a single "comprehensive permit" from the local zoning board of appeals for developers who propose to build affordable or mixed-income housing. Those towns with less than 10 percent affordable housing are particularly vulnerable to the state law.

> "There is a moral obligation for communities to provide access and opportunity for people."
> —MICHAEL STONE, PROFESSOR OF COMMUNITY PLANNING AT UMASS BOSTON.

Despite stiff community opposition, Scituate's Kent Village off the Driftway was approved under the comprehensive permit in the early 1980s. The Archdiocese of Boston owned the property and wanted to build low-income housing on it, recalled Robert Loring, an attorney, who was chairman of the zoning board at the time.

The zoning board denied the permit because it felt the bylaws did not allow the density of housing proposed. The matter was appealed to the state and ended up in the U.S. Supreme Court. Today, the development, which is architecturally attractive for the area, is viewed as an affordable housing success story.

Michael Stone, professor of community planning at UMass Boston, says while housing may not be a "hot button" issue, it is central to all our lives.

He estimates one-third of the households in the state have affordability problems.

Through its McCormick Institute, the university is embarking on a housing needs study to get a handle on the problem.

"We'll be looking at the scale of the problem and with the data, try to inform policy makers," Stone said.

He explained that housing is a critical aspect of economic development.

"There is a moral obligation for communities to provide access and opportunity for people," Stone said.

Hingham's Watson points out that he wouldn't be able to afford his house, which he bought in 1973, at today's prices.

"It's three times as expensive in relationship to income as when we moved in," he said.

And he worries that the town he's called home for 25 years is in danger of becoming totally income stratified.

"A town filled with people earning enough for a $700,000 house, is a pretty limited place to live," he said.

'A Stone of Hope'

Racial identity is put to the test

Answer isn't always black and white for family

By Lesley Mahoney
STAFF WRITER

Thomas Bowman, whose mother Debbie is white and father Arthur is black, remembers the difficulty of identifying his race on forms for standardized testing like the PSATs and SATs.

"You have to fill out those forms, those little bubble forms. And everyone does them. You go through pages and pages of those things — What do you like to do? Are your parents married? Where did they go to school? And it gets to race. That was the question that I always had the hardest time with because I would look at it and it would say, 'black, white, Asian, Indian, Hispanic' but you couldn't choose two... So I'd always have to put 'other,'" says Thomas, 18, who has returned home to Norwell for winter break from Duke University in North Carolina.

"And that upset me for the longest time. For the longest time, I said, 'This is annoying. I never can get to put anything. I always have to put 'other.' I just fall into the 'other category.' And I didn't really like it... It was like there was no place. And society has this tendency, this obsession with categorizing things. And so you fall into that trap," he says.

Not only did Thomas face a quandary identifying himself by race on official forms, but in day-to-day encounters. Looking back to his high school days at Thayer Academy, he recalls a discussion with a teacher in class following an assembly on a racial matter.

"The teacher was asking the black kids — they were clearly black — what they felt about it. And he never asked me. I'm sitting there after class and saying, 'Gee, I wonder if he knows that I'm mixed.' And I thought, 'How come he didn't ask me. He could've asked me.' And what comes in again — What category do I fit in? I guess he doesn't consider me black. Does he consider me white?" Thomas says, adding that he eventually discovered the teacher had not been aware of his multiracial heritage.

"And I did a lot of soul-searching. I asked my parents. I said, 'I'm kind of tired of this other category.' Everyone said the same thing: 'You are whatever you want to be.' Finally, I came to accept that it's not important that you put this label on yourself. I'm just a person first and foremost just like everyone else. So, I didn't need to categorize myself and so I said, 'That's fine that I'm the other category because they don't really need to know anyway. It's unimportant to the SATs. They just want demographics," he continues, adding that college applications provided him the opportunity to check "mulatto"— a person who has one white and one black parent.

But shifts in philosophy like Thomas' when it comes to self-identifying oneself as "other" on forms may become unnecessary if a recent federal directive to allow individuals to check more than one category on federal forms proliferates to local levels.

Issued at the end of October, the recommendation comes from the federal Office of Management and Budget and states among its recommendations for changes to the classification of federal data on race and ethnicity: "When self-identification is used, a method for reporting more than one race should be adopted... Based on research conducted so far, two recommended forms for the instruction accompanying the multiple response question are 'Mark one or more...' and 'Select one or more...'" The new standards will be used for the decennial census and other data producers reporting to the federal government must conform by Jan. 1, 2003. The Office of Management and Budget is currently studying ways it will tabulate the upcoming data.

Thomas says the recommendations "broaden the horizons. You can't just put people in one category... If they broaden those categories, then people will be better able to represent who they are."

His father, Arthur Bowman, says he has no political agendas and has agreed to speak about his family and give up some of their privacy in hopes that he might "help to build a bridge of goodwill.

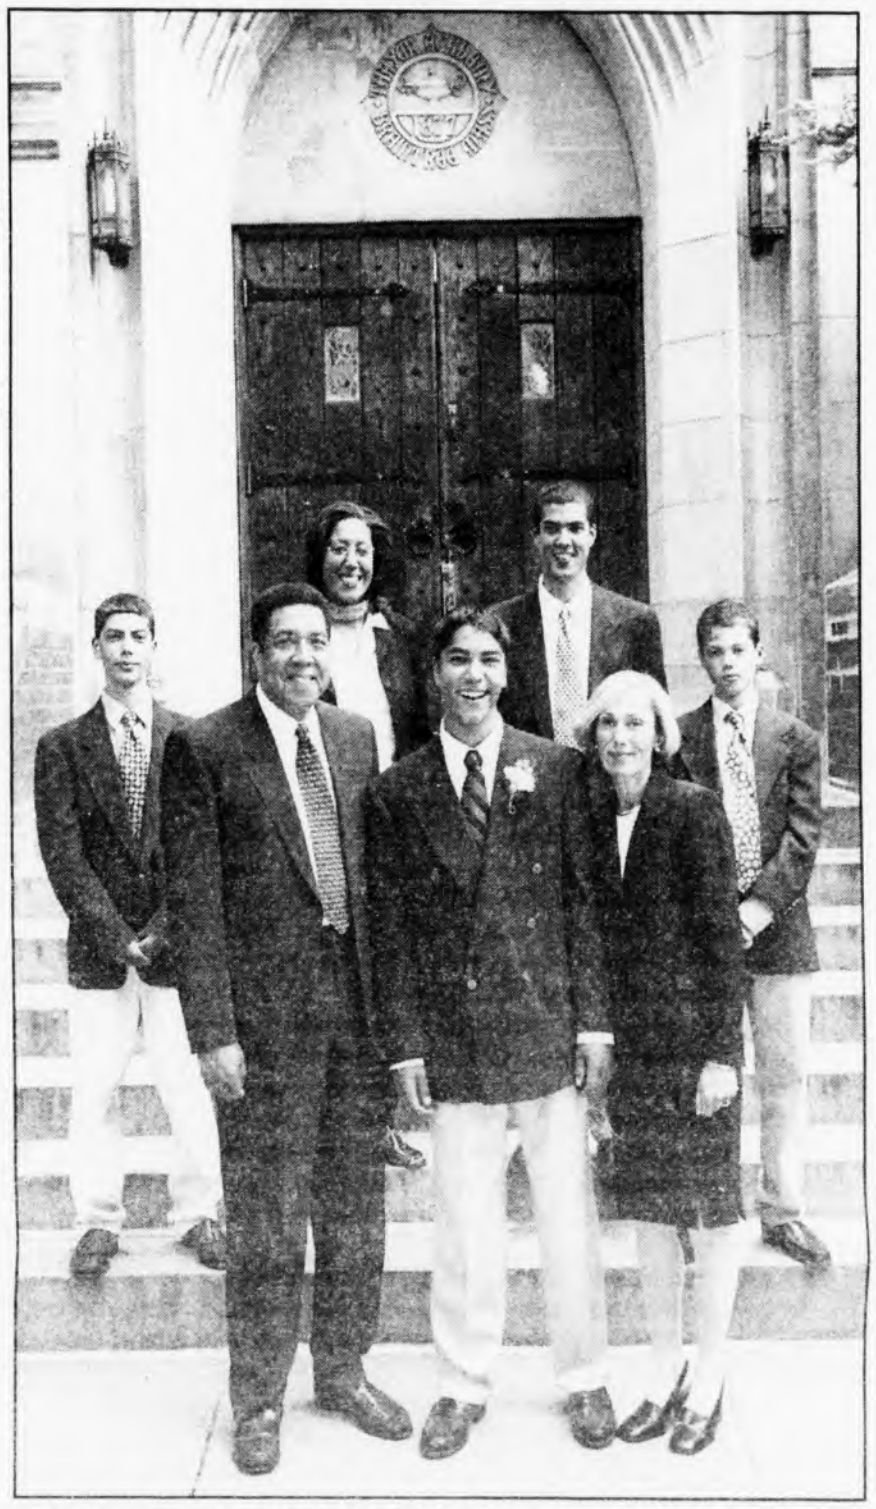
"I'd rather see people as human beings. But if the government insists on categorizing people for whatever reason, let that categorization be accurate," says Arthur, a physician at South Shore Hospital. "It's very difficult to categorize by 'black, white, and other.' That doesn't do it. A lot of this needs explanation. Most white people are not uni-ethnic. I think it's only fair, if you're going to categorize, let the individual expand and give recognition to all of the groups that compose the individual."

Jane Chiong, who founded the first non-profit multiracial family network in greater Boston and talks about racial categorization in her upcoming book Racial Categorization of Multiracial Children in the School, says, "What has been said up until now is that mixed race kids can only check one box. So, what do you do with more then one? Now, it says select more than one."

She says up until now, the government has technically determined if people exist or not.

"If you don't check a box, you're invisible... This is making the invisible visible. Now, technically multiracial children are going to exist," says Chiong, who is white and whose husband is Chinese and Filipino. They have three children.

"The fact that the issue is getting in front of the national government and being debated in public forums, there's starting to emerge a multiracial solidarity... The fact that multiracial families are expanding exponentially, it means their voices are clearly getting louder," says Peggy Gillespie, who authored "Of Many Colors, Portraits of Multiracial Families" — Gigi Kaesar took the photographs. The two also created a photo exhibit of the same name and co-directs Family Diversity Projects, Inc. in Amherst.



While Chiong calls the federal directive "a very strong symbol of how America's beginning to think about race," she stresses that it's a technical change and that "social change is slow and difficult."

On a larger scale, Chiong says, "We need to increase the dialogue for multiracial children. We need to validate their uniqueness — not as an act of separatism for them but as part of a nationwide racial re-identification, one that celebrates our connection to our diverse neighbors as part of our wider selves... We need to elacticize what it means to be American."

Meanwhile, the Office of Management and Budget rejected the recommendation to include a multiracial category — among the recommendations issued by the committee it formed to study the issue in response to increasing criticism that current classifications don't accurately reflect the nation's diversity.

"One of the more compelling reasons (for rejecting the recommendation) is that it's just another category. Multiracial doesn't tell people about anything that's there. We want to give people an opportunity to give a more complete picture when it comes to self-identification," says Jack Gribben, spokesman for the Office of Management and Budget.

At the state level, state Sen. William Keating, D-Sharon, has filed a bill to create a multiracial category every year since 1993 and testified before the Office of Management and Budget for its inclusion at the federal level. Each year, Keating's bill has found its fate in a study order that yielded no action. But Michael Jackman, legislative aide to Keating, says he anticipates an accelerated effort to push the bill through this legislative session and cites the federal government's adoption of a new standard as a potential catalyst.

Mixed feelings

Barring labels and categories on official forms, Thomas Bowman says he calls himself "mixed." With terms like multiracial and biracial at his disposal, Thomas simply says "family" when it comes to defining his parents and four siblings.

He sees having two races as a positive thing. "I like it... People say it's a cliché but it's the best of both worlds... People have two ideas of America — a black America and a white America. I'm both," Thomas says. "Being black and white has made me more open because I don't see people in terms of that anymore. You don't see them as what color they are. I don't look at people for how they're different from me. I look at people for how they're alike, how they're similar. And you can't find that on the surface. So, you just have to dig deeper."

His father would agree.

"In this household, we have overcome this attitude of separation of races. To us, it's already been overcome. Race has never been an issue in our house," Arthur says.

That kind of perspective leads Thomas to identify not with one particular race over another but with "people." He thinks back to a race panel in high school at which black students sat at the same table because those were the people the students were most comfortable with.

"I'd think of that in my own terms. Certainly, there's not going to be mulatto table. So, I would sit with whoever I identified most with and that's just people. It just says to me that it's not important to say that just because these people are the same skin color, I'm going to sit with them. Because the black students are no different from my father's side of the family in my eyes and the white students are no different from my mother's side of the family. They're just people," Thomas says.

Stares, no glares

The Bowmans say they have not encountered a negative reaction to its racial make-up.

"The South Shore community and Norwell in particular are fine communities. We have many wonderful neighbors and friends. No one has ever given us a difficult time because of our interracial status," Arthur says.

The Bowmans say inquiries and occasional stares indicate interest. "I think most of it is out of curiosity, not out of meanness or hatefulness," Arthur says.

Chiong would agree that there is a positive climate for interracial marriages and multicultural families. She says multiracial children are a "microcosm of the nation... Both the interracial child and the nation have dealt with an identity complex."

Calling multiracial an "empowerment term," Chiong says it's unfortunate the recommendation for a multiracial category did not make it in the final directive.

But the Bowmans, on the other hand, say they don't find a need in their lives to belong to a network of multiracial families. "One family's values are different from another family's values. The differences have nothing to do with race... I think it should be more of a natural process," Arthur says.

People of good will are soul of METCO

By Jeanne M. Rideout and Bob Aicardi

When Camilla Roundtree was an eighth-grade honors student in Mansfield, she was the only minority in her school. She was qualified to prepare for college, but she was not allowed to attend the college preparatory course at the high school because she was black.

One teacher, Ruby Davison, championed Roundtree's cause, taking her case to both the school committee and even to town hall, to no avail. Davison, spurred by her Quaker beliefs, resigned her teaching position in protest.

While Davison failed to win an opportunity for equal education for Roundtree, she instilled in the younger woman a determination to fight for equal opportunity for all students that has remained with Roundtree all through her 29 years as METCO coordinator in Hingham Public Schools.

Roxbury-based METCO, in its 32nd year, is a voluntary partnership between city and suburbs that promotes, through a busing program, desegregation of Boston schools and the integration of primarily non-minority suburban districts, providing educational opportunities that black and white students otherwise would not have, according to METCO Associate Director John Shandorf.

There are 32 communities in metro Boston and four communities in metro Springfield currently participating in METCO. Only two communities, Milton and Rockland, have ever dropped out of the program. Rockland, a town with a METCO program in the 1970s described as a showcase program by METCO Director Jean McGuire, had to withdraw due to severe budget cutbacks, said Shandorf.

METCO was first funded by federal grants. State funding that began in the mid-1970s allowed for growth in the program. However, since the mid-1980s, the program has been level funded, which has hampered its growth. There has been a slight decline in the number of students participating from a high point of 3,600 to the current level of 3,200, said Shandorf.

Long-time METCO Director Jean McGuire is concerned about today's political trend away from affirmative action.

"You do not have integration unless there is equality in power," said McGuire.

Programs should still be evaluated in terms of outcome, rather than in terms of intent, and accurate statistics are still needed to make arguments about the effectiveness of a program, said McGuire.

State grant applications no longer include the race of teaching staff. One of METCO's guidelines is to hire minority teachers, and without knowing the number of minority teachers in a school district, it is difficult to know how effectively this guideline is being implemented, said McGuire.

McGuire applauds President Bill Clinton's quest for racial dialogue, with a caveat.

"Unless talk is followed with justice, it means nothing. It takes a law to make change. Affirmative action is a way to do this," said McGuire.

In a nutshell, a vote for METCO is a vote for cultural diversity.

METCO in the '60s and '70s often came to districts through community groups active in fair housing programs. In some cases, METCO advocates encountered strong opposition, with objections that inner city students would lower standards.

However, in spite of initial fears and prejudices that kept some communities out of METCO, the program has won acclaim in participating communities, with many success stories generated. All METCO communities tell of lasting relationships brought about through the program.

In the last analysis, people of good will are the soul of the METCO program.

Braintree was one of the original seven towns that started the METCO program. At its highest level, 82 students were in the program, but due to decreasing classroom space, the program has dropped to its current level of 44 students, according to coordinator Jacqueline Dix Smith.

"The town believed in diversity and wanted their children to meet other students and be exposed to other cultures," said Smith.

Cultural exchange is deemed very important, and this year the Braintree community visited the 12th Baptist Church in Roxbury to take part in Kwanzaa, an African-American cultural holiday featuring poetry, music, a feast of ethnic foods, and this year a drill team performance.

Camilla Roundtree, who was once inspired by her teacher Ruby Davison, is now a source of strength and encouragement to her METCO students. METCO came to Hingham through the Hingham Freedom Movement. There are currently 38 students in the program, which shares busing costs with Cohasset. All elementary school age children have host families, and the community enjoys Host Family Dinners, said Roundtree.

METCO has been in Cohasset for about 29 years and currently has 50 students in the program, according to coordinator Yvonne Jones.

"The town has a long-time program, a very successful program for the community and for the students who participate. Cohasset is a very small town, and the program adds a taste of diversity and teaches about other cultures. A lot of people have a lot of prejudices just because they have no experience. When you put the two groups of students together in an educational process, what they find out is that they are all just kids," said Jones.

Cohasset has a very strong host family network, said Jones.

The Scituate METCO program began in 1968 and has increased over time to 59 students, said coordinator Oni Igartua.

Scituate joined METCO "because they valued helping students," said Igartua.

"The Scituate community is very receptive. We have wonderful host families, a very accepting atmosphere," said Igartua.

Weymouth, Holbrook, Abington, Duxbury and Marshfield, have never participated in METCO. Most communities cite a lack of classroom space as the reason.

"It's not a program that, to my knowledge, has been in the Abington public schools," said Superintendent of Schools John Aherne. "I'm not sure that a discussion has taken place here. I know that it hasn't in the six years I've been here."

Dr. Kathleen Tyrell, assistant superintendent of schools in Stoughton, said, "I've been here for three years and I've never heard it discussed, but we have a diverse student population already, which we feel is one of the strengths of the Stoughton public schools."

"I've had no discussions about it (METCO), but I'm relatively new because I've been here since August," said Allen Brown, Canton's superintendent of schools. "I'm not aware of any previous discussions about it."

Dr. Paul Squarcia, superintendent of Silver Lake district (comprised of Pembroke, Kingston, Halifax and Plympton), said, "This hasn't been discussed at any time by any school committee in the 21 years I've been here."

Those who have experienced the program have no doubts about why the program has lasted 32 years.

"If people would just look at what the program does for children, they will be pleasantly surprised. There must be something good happening, because the program is still holding its own," said Cohasset METCO coordinator Yvonne Jones.

There is still a need for programs like METCO.

"We have people everywhere, in every generation, of good will, but each generation has their own battles. If people don't know how to deal with others who are different from them, you don't have a democracy," said McGuire.

Schools are fertile ground for fostering King's legacy

By Paula Woodhull
STAFF WRITER

Thirty years after the death of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., a debate is raging in conservative Riverside, Calif. over naming a public school in honor of the slain civil rights leader.

Opponents argue King had no real connection to the community, but many educators say it is in the hearts and minds of young people that racial intolerance and the seeds of hatred, violence and discrimination can finally begin to be eradicated.

Indeed, it is perhaps in the nation's classrooms that King's most enduring legacy can be found as textbooks and curriculum now give a fuller, more accurate picture of the civil rights movement.

Ever so slowly, blacks and other minorities, both white collar and working class, are moving to the suburbs south of Boston. The challenge for the future as the black middle class grows, educators say, is to prepare young people for a world that is becoming less and less homogenous.

Patricia Randall, an assistant superintendent for the sprawling four-town Silver Lake regional school district, noted that teachers, especially, "need to address how they'll deal with classrooms in the next century that are truly multicultural."

An educator for 35 years, Randall came to Silver Lake three years ago from a large, extremely diverse high school on the north shore of Long Island, N. Y., where she worked as a principal.

On the South Shore, addressing discrimination and intolerance "is really an academic discussion," she noted. "We don't have a huge amount of diversity."

11 years in METCO - it's been quite a ride

By Cathy Conley
STAFF WRITER

It was 5:55 a.m. Sept. 3, 1986. The sun was barely up as little Randi Pittman in her best back to school clothes left the familiarity of her home and neighborhood in Dorchester and jumped on a school bus for the eight-mile sometimes-one-hour ride to Braintree.

She was one of eight first-graders in the METCO program that year, a program that had already been in existence in Braintree for 17 years and had educated hundreds of inner city children.

One of her warmest memories of first grade is Friendship Day.

Classmate Amanda Pettiti invited her home for the afternoon. The two girls played restaurant. Amanda's older sister was the waitress. She served her customers English muffin pizzas.

Randi had fun. From that moment on, she figured everything was going to be OK for her in the Braintree schools.

It hasn't exactly been one long pizza party. But it has been rewarding, she said.

It's 11 years later. Randi, 16, is now a junior at Braintree High School. "I've been comfortable in Braintree," she said "Most of my friends at home also are in the METCO program, but not in Braintree."

Randi sailed through grammar school, making friends at every turn.

In middle school she was a peer mediator. "I liked the teachers in elementary and middle school. They were very caring. I was never treated differently from anyone else," she said.

There have been some rough spots at Braintree High School, not for her but for some of her classmates in the METCO program.

"Things got a little rough last year for the METCO students. There were racial conflicts. They were sporadic, but they were there. A lot came to the surface," she said.

"I never had any problems. I'm friends with everybody. I have been since grammar school. Some of my closest friends are not in METCO.

"I've always felt that if a kid has a problem with me being here, that's their problem, not mine. I don't get angry at stuff like that," she said.

Some of the racial tension subsided last year, "just because kids got tired of it," she said.

But most of the tension eased because of the action of two students, one white, and one black.

With the help of the assistant METCO coordinator Mark Jackson, they began a club called H.E.A.R. (Help Erase America's Racism). The club has grown to 15 members, just about split down the middle racially

At weekly meetings members discuss how to resolve conflicts that have come up at school and try to head off further tension.

They have visited the attorney general's office in Boston for conflict resolution ideas and attended the huge Team Harmony rally at the Fleet Center in December which featured First Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton.

The club is now working on skits about racism and how it can be avoided which they hope to put on for school officials and students.

"The skits are no rougher than what is going on in the school," Randi said.

An honor student, Randi plans to go to college and study psychology. Her first choice is Spelman College in Georgia, the alma mater of her mother who is a Boston police officer.

She's already looking beyond college toward a master's degree in child psychology.

Her goal is to be first a preschool teacher, then perhaps a child psychologist.

She got her feet wet in the field this summer as a counselor at a resident camp for inner city children in Duxbury where she was in the leader in training program.

"I love little children. I have a six-year-old brother who is in the first grade in the Braintree METCO program and lots of little cousins," she said.

Randi Pittman has been in the METCO program since she was in the first grade.

Randi reflects on her years in the Braintree schools.

Staff photos/Carey Marden

Science is her favorite subject. "I don't think I get it. Then I'm surprised at how well I do." Math is her least favorite. "It frustrates me."

"I like learning but it can be a pain. I want to be someone who knows everything without having to learn," she said.

Being on the dance team is her greatest joy at Braintree High. She also has high praise for her teachers, many of whom "have really helped me along the way."

The downside of the school day is the long ride home. Sometimes it takes an hour. "Time for a little nap," she said.

Randi feels there are mutual benefits from METCO both for those in the program and whose who are not.

"The other kids can learn diversity. They can learn about what our home in Boston is like. They can learn about our celebrations like Kwanzaa. Last year we put on a program at Braintree High. This year it was at the 12th Baptist Church in Boston and a few students came.

"Students in the METCO program are also learning a different culture. And they are getting a quality education," she said.

She has a pet gripe.

She doesn't like to be called "a METCO student."

"It's a characterization. It's like that's a person from Dorchester who doesn't belong here. I've heard Dorchester called Dumchester. I'd rather just be called a black girl than a METCO student."

She is thrilled her little brother is in the METCO program. "He loves it. I want him to have the same educational value that I've had," she said.

"Sometimes I felt that I had to prove myself because I was in METCO. But my mother says that when you feel you have to prove yourself, you try harder and you do better."

Would she put her own children in a METCO program?

"By the time I am a mother I hope there will be no need for METCO. I hope that the quality of education will be the same in the city and in the suburbs.

"But if METCO is still around, my children will be in it."

Schools make diversity part of the curriculum

Teaching students to appreciate diversity and raising cultural awareness in a largely homogenous school population is always a challenge. But several South Shore schools have made it a priority and are making a difference.

Rather than waiting until Black History Month or the observation of Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday to sponsor diversity programs, schools in Scituate, Hingham, Norwell and Duxbury are trying to make it part of their curriculum year-round.

In addition to a new Language Arts curriculum focusing on multicultural literature for elementary through high school students, and a new world history program for ninth graders, Scituate schools receive funding through grants and their PTOs to bring in storytellers, artists and musical programs that share distinct cultures with students.

Newly initiated and enjoying success is the integration of all students who learn English as a second language, said Director of Curriculum and Staff Development Prudence Goodale. Goodale explained that at all grade levels ESL students including the school's small Cape Verdean population are no longer separated in a bilingual transitional program.

In addition to teaching students about other cultures throughout the year and throughout the curriculum, Gates Intermediate School in Scituate spends an entire day celebrating different cultures every other spring when it holds its Multicultural Fair —a day-long event features student presentations, food and art from various cultures.

At the high school level the school's Peer Leader program has really taken off, Goodale said "We have a very vibrant peer leader program," she said noting that the teens were on hand for December's "World of Difference Conference" in which Hilary Clinton was a guest speaker. The conference brings dozens of high school students together to discuss issues like rascism, sexism and harassment. Goodale said peer leaders along with student council members meet monthly with school staff and administrators to discuss goals and to work within the school to help spread awareness about prejudice and intolerance. Through his school spirit initiatives, new SHS principal Daniel Burke, Ph.D is working to garner student support for all school activities, Goodale said, whether they be athletic, academic or dramatic.

Despite these diversity initiatives, Goodale said as a school system, she would like to see Scituate do more. "We're always looking at more ways to introduce our students to diversity," she said.

Hingham's Director of Social Studies James Kirkaldy said efforts are always being made to weave cultural awareness and an appreciation of differences and other cultures into the curriculum in both the primary and secondary schools. Whether it be the fourth grade China Trade program which focuses on the history, culture, economics and arts of that country, the seventh grade World Tours curriculum or Global education for 10th grade history students which focuses on non-western cultures, Kirkaldy said Hingham students at all grade levels are learning to understand and appreciate cultures different from their own. Ninth grade students are learning Character Education, a unique educational initiative which uses history as the vehicle to teach students a lesson about respect and responsibility and the consequences of intolerance and bigotry.

On an extra-curricular basis the Hingham High School is home to the Diversity Club, the Intergenerational Club — which helps arrange school programs in which students and senior citizens work together and the Climate Committee —a new group monitoring the student climate at the school and tackling tough issues like student to student intolerance. Kirkaldy also points to "living history" school programs in which professional actors and story tellers teach powerful

Race relations through the years

Blacks 'invisible,' whites 'ambivalent' on South Shore

By Tom Henshaw
STAFF WRITER

When the black author Ralph Ellison wrote his novel, "The Invisible Man," he may have had the South Shore in mind.

Although they have lived and worked in the shore towns south of Boston since the time of the Pilgrims and the Puritans, persons of color have received little notice from the white historians of the times.

An account of a day at the Arnold Tavern in Weymouth, a waystop on the road from Boston to Plymouth, in the 18th century describes the highlight of the day, the arrival of the stage.

"It was the crowning event of the day when the stagecoach drew up at the Tavern, the driver on his high seat curbing his horses when making a grand sweep toward the entrance.

"Excitedly, the darkey would come running out and reach for the mailbags . . . the jaded horses would be fed by the aforesaid darkey . . . "

Who was the aforesaid darkey? What was his name? Where did he live? How did he live? Was he paid for his services or was he "owned" by the tavern keeper? The account didn't deem it important enough to say.

Persons of color have never lived on the South Shore in significant numbers. They have never been a "felt minority," as the sociologists like to say; their numbers not large enough to influence events.

For instance, in 1790, when the last slaves were freed in Massachusetts, 0.22 percent of Scituate's population of 2,862 were people of color; in 1830 it was 0.17 percent of 3,512; and in 1997 it was 0.55 percent of 16,589.

The attitude of white people toward their black brothers and sisters has been ambivalent at best. Many prominent people on the South Shore owned black slaves, even while they fought slavery, a fact that is largely ignored in most town histories.

When Judge William Cushing of Scituate went riding in his carriage "his faithful servant, Prince, a jet black Negro, whose parents had been slaves in the family . . . followed behind in a one-horse vehicle, with the baggage."

Later, as the second chief justice of the state supreme court, he was to write a key anti-slavery decision that eventually outlawed involuntary servitude in the Bay State.

The Rev. William Smith of Weymouth, father-in-law of President John Adams, had a slave named Phoebe, who was freed under the terms of his will as the American Revolution drew to a close.

(Note that slaves and others in similar servitude were known only by their first names, which measures their importance in that day.)

The Rev. Smith's grandson, John Quincy Adams, represented the South Shore in Congress when he successfully argued the case of the slave ship Amistad's black mutineers before the Supreme Court.

The first mention of a slave in the annals of Weymouth was Dinah, the property of Thomas White, brother of the town's first doctor. She appears to have been well-treated, even allowed to join the church.

But she had to worship in a pew set aside from the others in the back of the church, an early form of segregation. Some of the so-called "black pews" can still be seen in Norwell's First Parish Church.

When the black abolitionist Frederick Douglass came to Liberty Hall in Weymouth to debate with his white peers in the 1840s, the stage driver refused to take him back to Boston because of his color.

A prominent Weymouth man, Thomas Tilden, got out his best horse and chaise and drove him back to his home in style.

When the Fugitive Slave Law, which heavily penalized anyone in the nation, both North and South, if they aided a runaway slave, was passed in 1850, the Weymouth Town Meeting responded quickly with a resolution of its own.

"That any man aiding or abetting the execution of the Fugitive Slave Law is a deadly enemy to society, and that the Fugitive Slave Law in unconstitutional and highly obnoxious.

"We trust that the citizens of Weymouth never become blood hounds for slave holders and return the fugitive but would protect him as they would their own citizens."

But four months later they had second thoughts and voted to expunge the original resolution. Thirty years after that, when the issue was moot, they had third thoughts and voted to expunge the expungement.

People of color fought on both sides in the Revolution and were rewarded by both British and colonists.

Those who remained loyal to the crown were relocated to Canada or the West Indies while some of those who rebelled were settled in Kingston at a place called "New Guinea," now known as Parting Ways.

Archeologists who have worked at Parting Ways noted that the foundations of homes there were designed in 12-foot floor patterns, common to Africa, instead of the 16-foot patterns common to white Americans.

The famed black educator, Booker T. Washington, headmaster of Tuskegee Institute, summered at 825 Main St., South Weymouth, across from what is now South Shore Hospital, in 1902 and 1903 and worshipped at the Old South Union Congregational Church.

He was even invited to speak at the townwide celebration, Old Home Week, in 1903.

"It is rather embarrassing to me, almost a stranger in your midst, and having been here only a few brief months each year, to be assigned to so important a task in the celebration of Old Home Week," he said, and he added a gentle word of racial complaint:

"As I have witnessed during the past few days the deep interest manifested by those who have returned to visit their old homes, I have not been able to rid myself of the almost constant thought that I belong to a race which, until recently, has not had opportunity to make homes for itself."

Relations between black and white on the South Shore in recent years, have improved, although there are those who would be quick to contradict that opinion.

"There has been a tremendous advancement," says Abe Cohen of Quincy, president of the South Shore Human Rights Commission. "As people get to know each other, their fears disappear.

"Ten or 15 years ago, if you saw a black man walking down the street, you'd ask 'What is he doing here?' Now he's just another man walking down the street."

Even at that, there remains a residue of suspicion.

Ten years ago, a black Nigerian named Akponoluo Etteh, the affirmative action officer in Weymouth, bought a retired police car, one with a place for a spotlight on the left front door post and an antenna mount on the trunk.

The first thing he did was take it to a Roxbury garage to have the brakes fixed. It disappeared for a full day. Etteh reported it stolen. Later the garage owner reported that it had been returned. Etteh notified police but it remained on the state's central registry as stolen.

A short time later, Weymouth police spotted the car on a North Weymouth street, recognized it as a police car and called in the number to see who it was. It came back as stolen. Patrol cars surrounded Etteh and he was ordered out of the car.

It didn't take long for Etteh to identify himself and establish that the car was not stolen. An investigation satisfied Police Chief Tom Higgins that his men had acted properly. But Etteh still harbored a suspicion, a distrust shared by most blacks in a white world.

"I feel that he called my number in because I am black," he said. "He was working on the assumption that I was a car thief."

Train signals new era for South Shore

By Sarah R. Coffey
STAFF WRITER

Just take one look at the demographics: most towns on the South Shore are almost as white as the driven snow. Diversity is more of a catch phrase than an actuality in most of the suburban towns in the region.

But with the restoration of the Old Colony Railroad, more people from the inner cities may find the South Shore more appealing, and that may mean more diversity arriving in towns father south of Boston.

With the added accessibility of the train, the South Shore may see more minorities filter on down form the city, said Brooks Kelly, director of the Plymouth County Development Council, but he didn't think there would be any drastic change in the foreseeable future.

"There are little enclaves of people from other nations that are here now," Kelly said. "I think (diversity and the trains) are two separate trends — more multi-ethnic people are moving down all the time, and the train does has an influence on people, but jobs in general are in the district of Boston," Kelly said.

The ethnic mix seen in Boston jobs may filter down to the South Shore with the advent of the train, Kelly said.

"Some Boston businesses make a concentrated effort to hire minorities," Kelly said.

In the town of Braintree, the onslaught of the red line in the late 1980s didn't bring about major change, said Sonny Shaw, director of Fair Housing and chairman of the Fair Housing Committee. Braintree is still almost 97 percent white, according to 1990 census figures, the last official census taken by the federal government, and Shaw said the percentages haven't changed dramatically in recent years.

What the T has brought to Braintree is a more diverse workforce, who use the train to commute to Braintree, but the percentage of minorities living and buying homes in the Braintree area has stayed relatively stable, Shaw said.

"We do have more people who work in town who use the T to get to and from work," Shaw

Fair Housing, who promotes diversity and works to make residents more comfortable with diversity in Braintree, hasn't seen a change in the number of minorities moving to Braintree, Shaw said.

"I don't think the T made a difference one way or the other," Shaw said.

Minority businessmen stick together through hard times

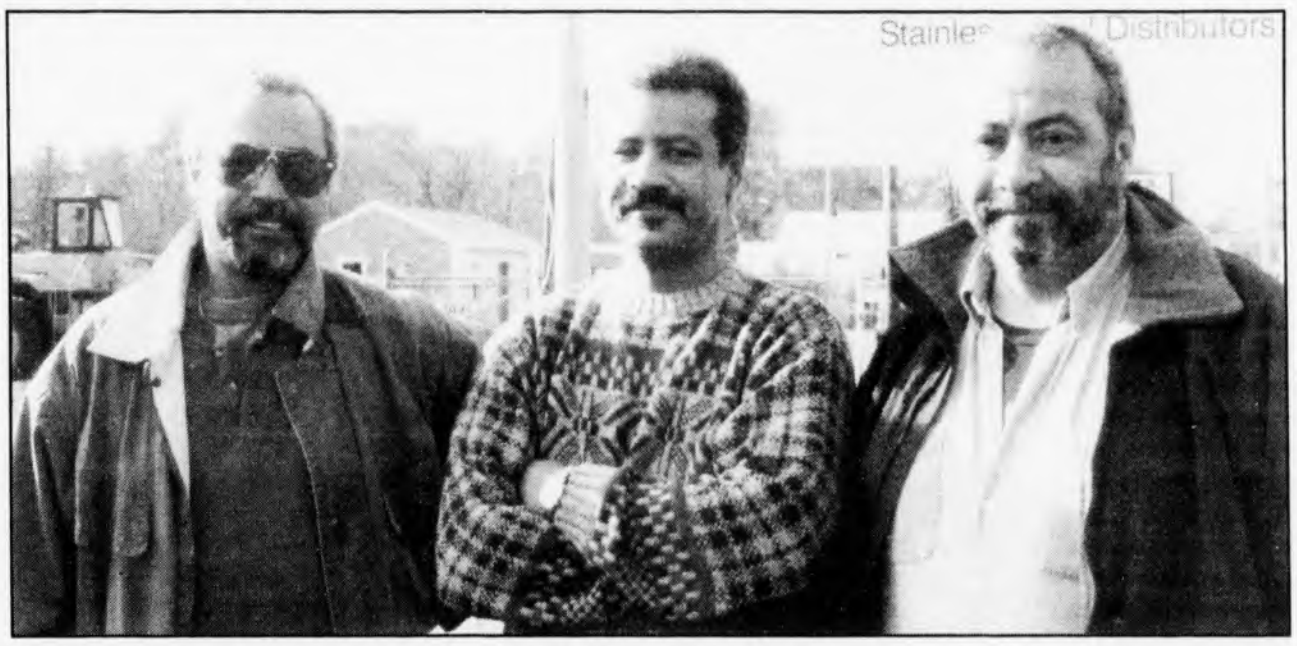
By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Minority-owned businesses have proved a successful investment for the government, according to the most recent report to Congress from the U.S. Small Business Administration's Office of Minority Enterprise Development.

Statewide, about 1,200 such enterprises meet the guidelines established by the state Office of Minority and Women Businesss Assistance. Moreover, the 600 which do business through the New England Minority Purchasing Council banked $520,705,062 in sales of good and services in 1995 alone.

But while there is little doubt minority-owned businesses pump up their local economies, only about 25 of them are thriving on the South Shore.

"There aren't too many of us," said Donald Martin of Marshfield who owns a well-established road construction business.



Martin's business competes for major highway contracts in the Greater Boston area and has won a few big assignments. But business is still tough, he said even though as a minority-owned business, his firm gets special consideration bidding on government projects.

The tough going on the bottom line is almost always due to price competition, according to Nicholas Roundtree, vice-president of All Stainless, one of the oldest minority businesses in the area. Because most minority owners are usually distributors, not manufacturers, he said, the companies are typically vulnerable to price wars, particularly in lean times when the manufacturers also sell in the retail markets.

"It's become more like an open market," he said. "Everybody has to compete on price."

Roundtree's company, now based in Whitman, has been a leader and mentor to emerging minority-owned businesses, particularly during the 1970s. With roots in Hingham, All Stainless has racked up an impressive track record in its 45 years of existence.

Basically, Roundtree said, the formula for success is simple. Minority-owned businesses have to price their products right to make a profit, even when they get an edge. They also have to keep going after new markets even when the quest is frustrating.

Chris Roundtree, Phillip Roundtree, and Nicholas Roundtree,, owners of All Stainless.

Holding up a thick manila file straining at the seams with paper, Roundtree paged through some of the forms he said must be filled out just to float a bid in the competition for the smaller government contracts. Sometimes, the effort does little more than help the municipal government show it accepted bids from minority-owned businesses, he said, as the contract is ultimately awarded to the company that quoted the lowest price.

"All I'm bidding is price," he said. "What do they care if I'm a minority?"

Yet Roundtree, who has also worked for Fortune 500 companies, acknowledged it can be hard for outsiders to understand how the difficulty of running a minority-owned business compares to any other business.

"It's a weird thing to try to understand," he said. "But each time you do something, you have to prove yourself."

While other firms compete for business by touting price, service and quality, a minority-owned business also has to answer sometimes unspoken questions about capability to deliver.

"In a new business if you fail," he said. "the client might associate it with being disadvantaged. A lot of those stereotypes are getting removed," he said.

Sitting in his Whitman office, surrounded by pictures of some of the boats that have All Stainless rivets in their hulls, Roundtree said though time is precious, he values the camaraderie among small businessmen in this area. Moreover, it is a spirit of endurance and survival that he and his brothers first tasted when they were children.

Roundtree's grandfather, who worked in the steel business, founded the company after realizing there was a market for stainless and the demand was steady. (Though stainless steel is the preferred metal in sites where toxic materials are present and where sanitary conditions are a consideration, the company that employed Roundtree's grandfather was not interested in filling orders for stainless steel.)

"He saw the opportunity, and he knew who the customers were," he said.

All Stainless started out in 1951 with a house trailer and a two car garage in Allston. Roundtree's father worked in the business as a salesman. When they were old enough, Roundtree and his brothers were part of the end of the month rush to get the deliveries packed and shipped.

"If they weren't shipped by the end of the month, we didn't get paid," he said. "It was a lot of work, but it was fun, too."

The company, which is still family-owned, now employs 20 full-time workers and one part-timer. Going against the trend, All Stainless employees average about 15 years with the company, and few of their hires seek jobs elsewhere.

Police aim to arrest discrimination

By Jennifer Horan
STAFF WRITER

Despite a decade of comprehensive sensitivity training courses at the Plymouth Police Academy, two South Shore municipal police forces have been caught in the spotlight for sexual harassment and racial discrimination lawsuits during the 1990s.

The town of Norwell's first female and only black police officer blew the horn in 1991 on an alleged hostile work environment which she said included sexual harassment and racial discrimination. Among other charges, rookie officer Belinda Johnson — who joined the force in 1988 — alleged in her complaint with the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination (MCAD) that her colleagues subjected her to sexually explicit comments and questions, forced her to ask for permission to use the bathroom over the police radio and left pornographic magazines in her cruiser's glove compartment. Johnson also accused her fellow officers of treating her with contempt, refusing to speak to her or walking away as she tried to talk to them. In 1996, Johnson received $518,000 in a settlement reached with the town of Norwell.

The following year, a veteran Scituate police officer and the only black female officer on the town's force filed charges of sexual harassment, racial and age discrimination against the police department for what she called an ongoing pattern of offensive conduct. Shirley Fopiano, 50, claimed among other charges that certain male officers reported to the station's roll call room clad in nothing but small towels. An 18-year member of the force, Fopiano said the women's locker rooms were inferior to the men's facilities and that male officers taunted her by jiggling the handle while she changed her clothes in the locker room — which she said had no lock. Witnessing what she perceived to be favoritism of a male officer prompted Fopiano's complaint. She said in her eight-page suit that she received a 22-day suspension for turning in an overtime/detail slip two days late, whereas a male officer on the force had been more lax and received only a warning. Fopiano's suit with the MCAD is still pending.

In both cases, the female officers said they suffered emotional distress and other ailments as a result of male officers' inappropriate behavior.

And in both cases, the police departments called the allegations unfounded and repeatedly stated their ongoing dedication to upholding a working atmosphere free of discrimination and harassment.

Before receiving certification as law enforcement officers, cadets spend more than 100 hours during 20 weeks of classes (800 hours) concentrating on sensitivity training to enable police to identify and prevent instances of discrimination not only on the force but also in the community, said Plymouth Police Academy Director John Deguitas, a civilian.

Cadets cannot become police officers without this training and they must make up classes they miss before graduation, he said.

"If you discriminate against any type of group, you shouldn't be a police officer," Deguitas said. "We, as well as the police chiefs and the state, try to make them aware of all these particular problems. We want them to be sensitive. Police business is people business. The transition from the private sector to the public sector is quite a transition in the mind also."

As part of its curriculum, the academy teaches its officers-to-be about sexual harassment, bias/hate crimes, cultural diversity, domestic violence, victim rights, juvenile issues and youth violence, elder abuse and suicide prevention.

"If you're in government today and you are not aware of these issues, then shame on you," Deguitas said. "And shame on us if we don't do it."

A 12-hour problem-solving course bolsters the academy's teachings, offering cadets the techniques they need to determine whether a problem exists and if so, how it can be resolved. They also take a 24-hour-long course in integrity, which instills in them the responsibility that comes with the role of a police officer.

Since the academy opened in 1985, Deguitas said he has noticed an upswing in diversity among incoming cadets.

During the first few years, the academy saw only one female cadet, Deguitas said. About a dozen women graduated from the academy's last class, he said. Women are now training classes of both male and female cadets and make excellent cops, he said.

Deguitas has also seen a measurable increase in racial as well as sexual diversity of police candidates training at the academy.

'A Stone of Hope'

Icon of peace ministers to harsh reality

Worldwide symbol juggles tourism with inner-city needs

By Helen Graves
STAFF WRITER

There is an aura to the Ebenezer Baptist Church in the Atlanta, Ga., community of Sweet Auburn, says Assistant Pastor James Victor Jr.

After all, it is the church where Martin Luther King Jr.'s grandfather, A.D. Williams, was pastor; where his father, Martin Luther King Sr., was pastor and where, in 1960, he returned to co-pastor, his father still at the church's helm.

It is the church where the younger King grew up, where, at age 17, he preached his first sermon, and where, in 1968, his body was laid in state. It is the church where his mother, Alberta, while playing the organ, was assassinated. It is the church where the civil rights organization, the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, was organized, King its first president.

"Initially, with the taking on of new responsibilities, there is a certain nervousness," says the two-year assistant pastor, "and of course, there is the aura of the place, the icon of peace worldwide. Once you're in the hands of the inner-city ministry, though, that aura goes quickly."

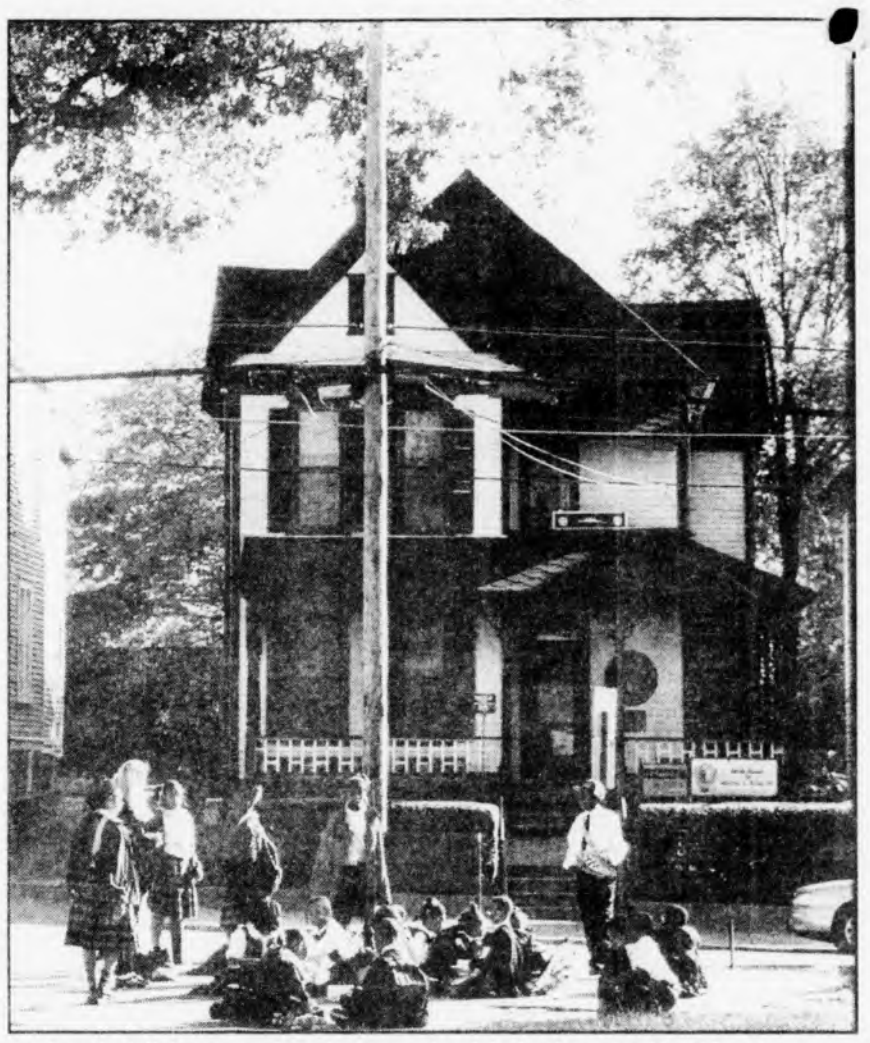
While Ebenezer Baptist Church is a tourist attraction — "it is the second-most visited tourist attraction in Georgia," Victor says — the church is in what is now Atlanta's inner city, and its 2,000 to 3,000 members have many needs. Victor was a pastor with his own church in Tennessee, "on the backdoor step of Nashville," when he sent his résumé to Ebenezer in order to pursue an advanced degree and at the same time continue his pastoral work. Sharing duties with a five-member team headed by a full-time administrator, his responsibilities include worship, counseling and outreach.

"We feed 300 to 400 homeless every Sunday morning. We have a winter feeding program, providing the homeless with a sack lunch along with stew or soup. We have a crisis food pantry for families with children. Our public transportation is called MARTA and we give MARTA cards away to individuals seeking employment. We run the Kingdom Food Co-op. People around the church are basically senior citizens on a fixed income with some low-income families mixed in. We sell fresh vegetables and fruit at cost — there's no grocery store nearby. Those are just a few of the things we do," Victor says.

"We address the social and the spiritual," he adds, noting more, prison outreach and programs for teenage mothers. There are Bible studies, Sunday services geared to address local needs, counseling by appointment and on-call psychiatrists and psychologists who are members of the congregation.

It is a delicate balance, juggling the tourist side with the ministry, "but the ministry is far more challenging," Victor says.

Ebenezer Baptist Church is open to tourists Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., and Saturdays, 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. "We may extend the Saturday hours," Victor says. Tour guides greet visitors, give an overview of the church's history, take guests through the sanctuary and present a 10-minute video.



Members who remember King still attend the church. "There are people here whom he baptized, married. One of our tour guides was a baby-sitter for Martin Luther King Jr.," Victor says.

Sunday worship will include tourists from all over the world as well the local congregation. With a seating capacity of only 750, a new church across the street is now under construction, completion expected by November. Donations, Victor notes, are accepted by the Ebenezer Baptist Church Building Fund; 407 Auburn Ave.; Atlanta, Ga. 30312. Under lease to the National Park Service, the old building will be used by the church for special occasions.

This year's national observance of King's Jan. 15, 1929, birthday takes place at Ebenezer Baptist Church on Monday, Jan. 19, the services organized by the Martin Luther King Jr. Center for Nonviolent Social Change and the King family. This year's theme is "Remember! Celebrate! Act! A Day On, Not a Day Off!!"

The church, the center and King's birth home and gravesite Freedom Hall Complex comprise a national historic district. The adjacent preservation district strives to maintain the historic nature of Sweet Auburn, which earlier this century symbolized achievement for Atlanta's black community. The birth home is restored to the 1929-1941 era, when King lived there.

When visiting the Martin Luther King Jr. National Historic Site, start at the National Park Service Visitor Center, 450 Auburn Ave., open daily 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Tours of King's birth home and the surrounding community start here, and there are exhibits, a video presentation and schedules of activities as well. For more information, write the Superintendent; Martin Luther King Jr. National Historic Site; 450 Auburn Ave. NE; Atlanta, Ga. 30312-0000, or call (404) 331-3920.

Schools are fertile ground for fostering King's legacy

She added, "people say all the right things, but most haven't had to address their feelings about race" because they haven't had to in their neighborhoods and schools, although the workplace is becoming increasingly diversified at a more rapid pace.

Randall said that in the absence of real diversity, the task is to sensitize students and educators in order to reduce "the strangeness of eventually having to deal with people who are different from us."

Compared to 35 years ago when the civil rights movement was in its infancy, "the issues are much more complicated now," she said. Still, some progress is being made.

Unfortunate misunderstandings can come about in the clash of cultures, she said, recalling an incident at her former New York high school.

A Korean student was thought to be disrespectful for not making eye contact with his teachers when spoken to. That was until the staff learned that in Asian cultures, a submissive demeanor is really a sign of respect for authority figures.

In citing this example, she said, "I think we have a long way to go" in fostering greater tolerance when confronted with different races and cultures.

Ellin Booras, director of the Head Start and Community Partnership pre-school programs that serve the Silver Lake district, believes the prospect for a more open, tolerant society lies in shaping the attitudes of the younger generations, while they are still color blind.

"We are fortunate to have children of color enrolled here," she said. "Young children have a very broad lens. Children at this age don't see differences of culture."

Light years away from the days of Dick and Jane, puzzles, books, and play activities at the pre-school represent children of different races and ethnic backgrounds. Non-traditional gender roles in the workplace are also portrayed, for example, female firefighters.

The Silver Lake pre-school collaborative for special needs is housed in the same facility as the Head Start and Community Partnership programs, said Booras, allowing children with no disabilities to mingle with those who are wheelchair bound.

"In this way, children become comfortable with the notion of disability," she explained. The youngsters see that civil rights and non-discrimination are burning issues for this group of people, as well.

Schools make diversity part of curriculum lessons about the results of racism and intolerance in the past. In two programs planned for this year ninth graders will meet Ann Frank and learn about the anti-Semitism that led to the horrors of the holocaust and eighth grade U.S. History students will learn about the Irish Immigrant experience and the discrimination they faced in their new country, Kirkaldy said. When it comes to diversity, Kirkaldy said Hingham strives to work in context through the whole curriculum. "We're not just doing this because its black history or any other month," he said.

For the strides they've taken and the initiatives they've made, Duxbury's Junior-Senior High School students were honored by the Anti-Defamation League of New England during last year's Team Harmony event. The annual day-long event brings middle and high school students across the state together to learn to make a stand against stereotyping and discrimination in schools and within the community. Duxbury's Diversity Group, a Gay/Straight Alliance and Teen Leaders help promote acceptance of all students regardless of their color, interests and sexual orientation. During last year's Black History Month programs for instance, the Diversity Group sponsored the screening of "The Long Walk Home" and "Mississippi Burning," and the Gay/Straight Alliance has worked to get more books in the school and town libraries on gays and lesbians. Under the Duxbury Teen Leaders program, Peer Mediators work to address conflicts between students before they develop into serious problems. Hingham also sponsors conflict resolution workshops, Kirkaldy said, because while the student population as a whole may be homogenous the students are all different and the groups they form disparate as well.

Norwell High School has also started its own diversity club and gay/straight alliance said Acting Principal Maryann Martin. The two groups meet twice a month on alternate weeks to promote acceptance of all students and their is no stigma associated with membership in either club, Martin noted. Every other year Norwell spends "Diversity Day" to further increase an appreciation of differences.

Like other schools curricula, Norwell integrates cultural awareness into a variety of subjects including a 10th grade U.S history course on immigration in which students traces their heritage and learn what the climate was like for their ancestors in both Europe and the U.S. at the time. Through the Understanding Differences Program —a completely parent coordinated and run event— Norwell fifth graders learn what its like to live with a disability, said Paula Delaney, Ph.D., Director of Instructional Services. The month-long program shows students what life is like with physical limitations, including blindness, or being confined to a wheel chair, Delaney said. New reading and language arts programs also at the elementary level have a distinct multicultural flavor and through Norwell's Social Health program it is an on-going mission to raise awareness among the student population of all kinds of differences, Delaney noted.

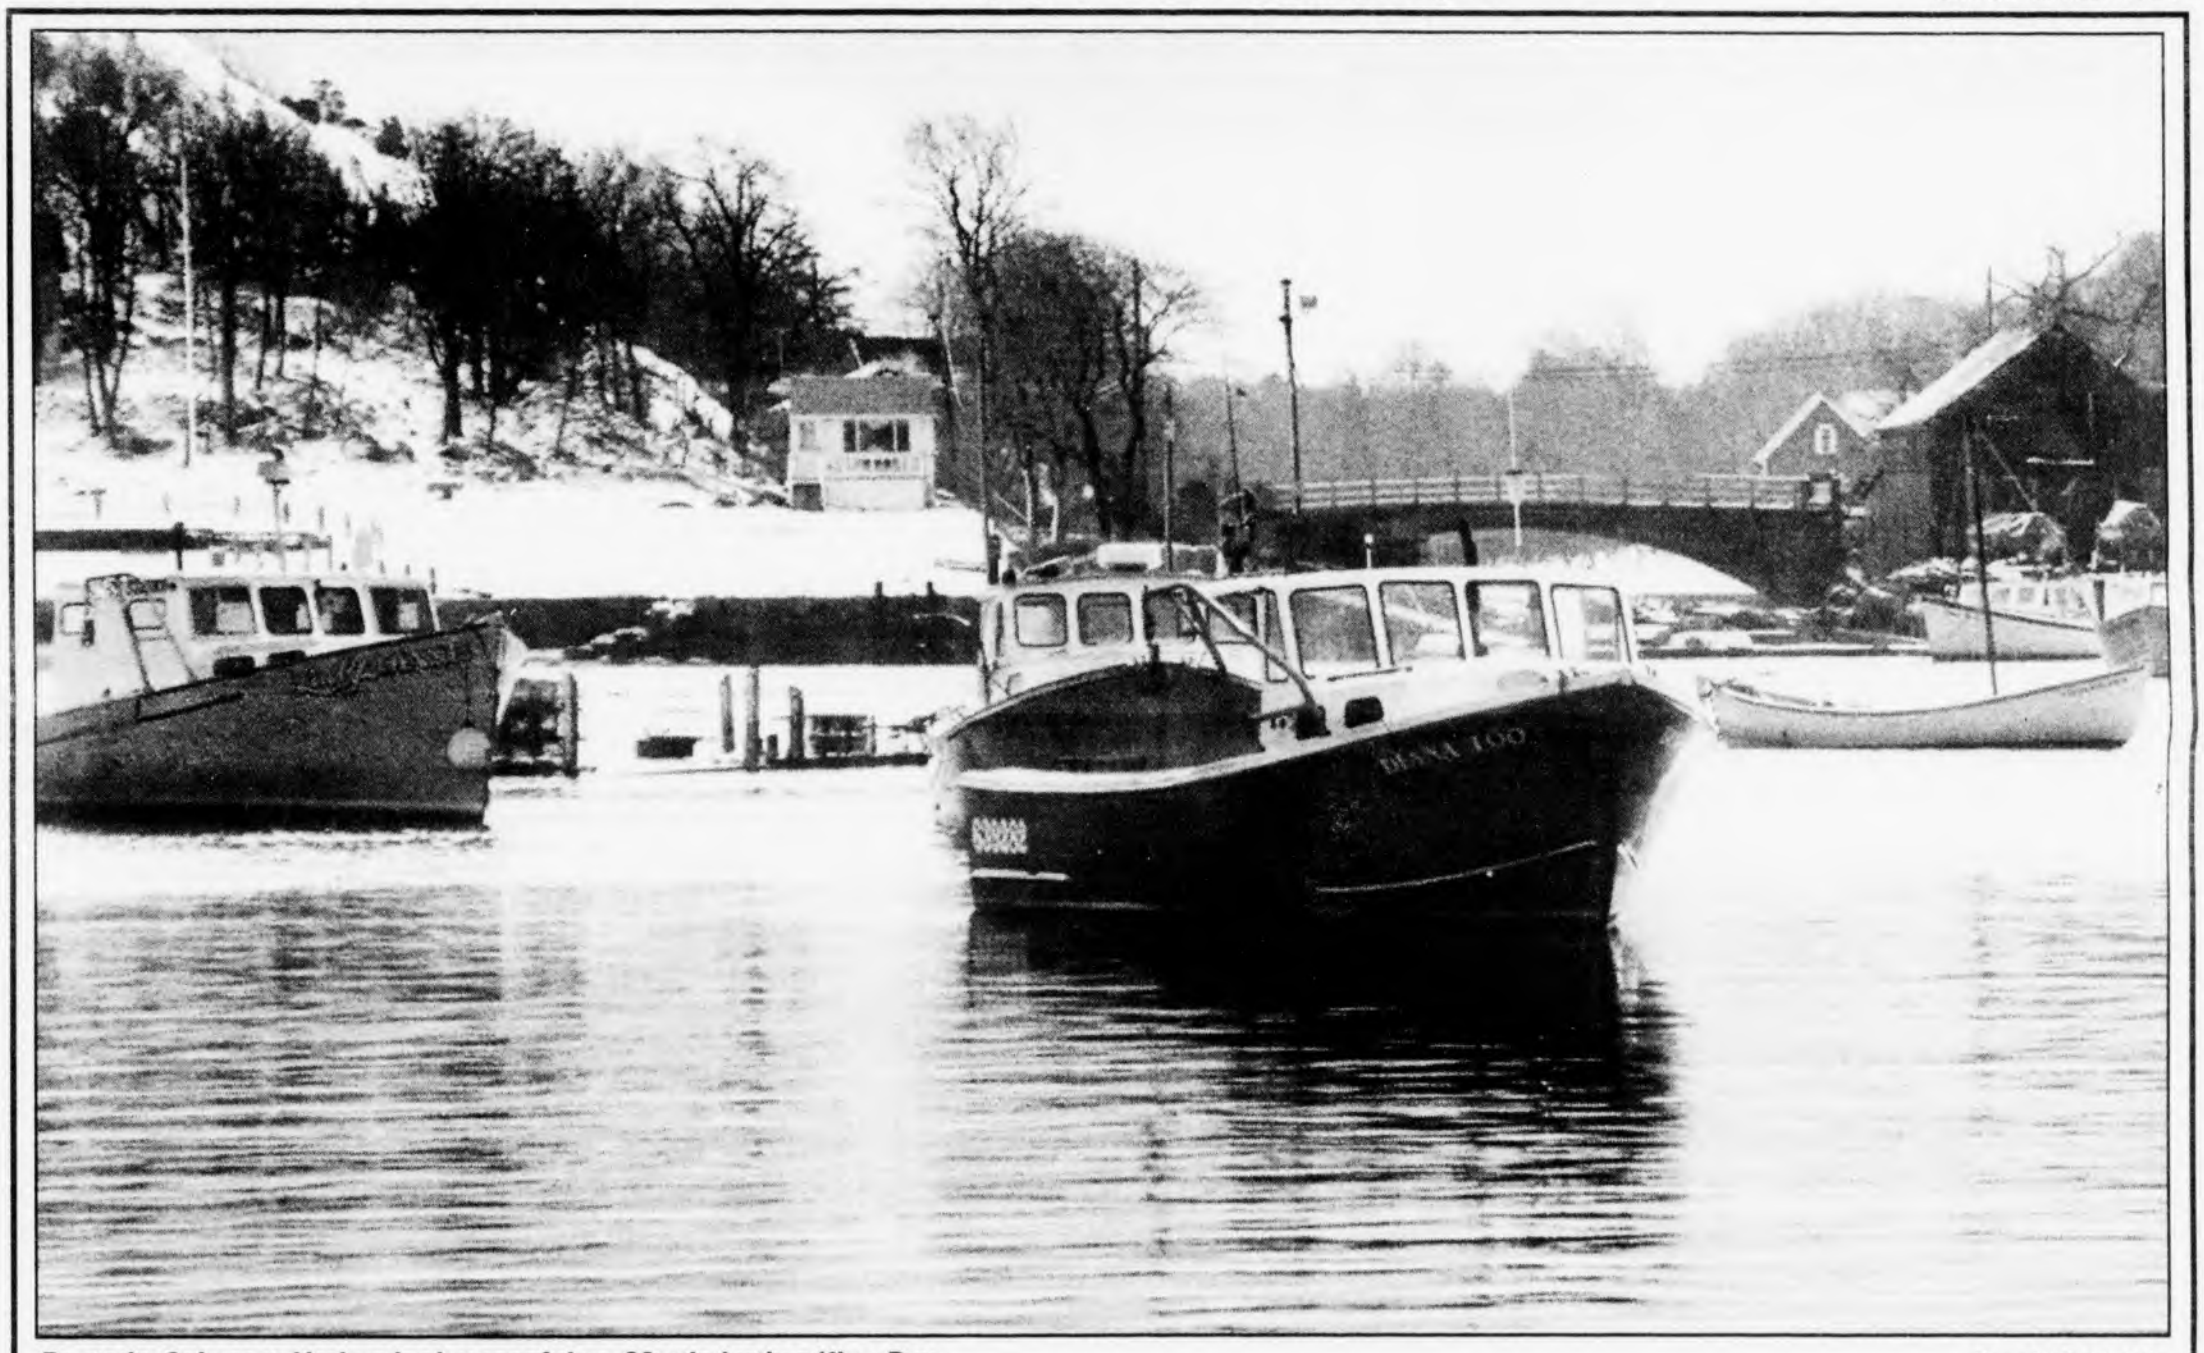
Residential project on Scituate Hill eyed

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Scituate Hill is many things to many people. To the town it is a piece of taxable, industrial real estate on Route 3A. To some hopeful residents it is the perfect site for a second water tank instead of current plans to build one next to the existing tank on Bear Hill. And to owner J. Michael Susi and Sons and developer Noel Collins, it is a possible site for residential development.



All of these interests could be coming together as Collins and Susi explore the possibility of building a residential development on the site, while also selling enough land to the town for $1 to erect a new water tank.

"We are examining development options that are available under zoning bylaws and intend to meet with town officials and the zoning board of appeals in connection with that examination," Collins said. "It is our intent to develop the site and incorporate a mutually acceptable tank site located in the overall development plan."

Collins discussed the possibility of a development and water tank with water commissioners at their Jan. 20 meeting.

Water commissioner John K. McNabb Jr. said he had planned to test the soil on the highest elevation on Scituate Hill for suit-

North Cohasset sewer project over budget

By Mary Ford

The bids are in and the sewer project for North Cohasset is going to cost about $2.7 million more than anticipated.

Voters approved a 50 percent subsidy from the town for the project, which was expected to cost $6.6 million when it was approved at town meeting ten months ago, through a Proposition 2-1/2 debt exclusion vote May 3.

What is not clear now is if the 330 homeowners in North Cohasset will have to pick up the entire additional cost.

Osgood School reuse group to seek money for consultant

By Margo Sullivan

Osgood Reuse Committee Chairman Joanne Adkins made the issue clear during the panelís strategy session Tuesday. She will be looking for a vote of confidence from the selectmen Monday as well as for financial support when she asks the board to earmark funds to hire a consultant.

Adkins plans to brief selectmen Monday on the committeeís status and the progress the Osgood Reuse Committee has made so far towards ultimately coming up with a recommendation about the property. But she will also use the occasion to make a new request for a consultant, subject to approval by town meeting. The reuse committee originally asked for an outside expert last spring. Though town

Condo plowing okay'ed

In a 4-1 vote, selectmen authorized the DPW to plow private condominium complexes in town contingent on receipt of an insurance certificate. Selectman Diane Sullivan voted no saying that condominium owners understand when they buy a condo that they will have to be responsible for services like plowing.

Next year's legal budget

Selectmen and Town Manager Mark Haddad reached a consensus to set aside $160,000 for legal services next year. That includes the $48,000 annual retainer for town counsel. Haddad initially proposed $140,000 but selectmen asked him to increase the line item because of all the legal matters before the town.

Youth task force appointed

Based on his discussions with Recreation Director Jack Worley, Town Manager Mark Haddad has appointed the following citizens to the newly established Youth Task Force Committee:

Rose Collins 425 N. Main St.; Melinda Murray, 137 N. Main St.; Ronald Nicynski, 34 Riverview Dr.; Patience Towle, 180 Lamberts Lane; Anthony Bramblett, 3 Grace Drive; Jami Butman, 17 Spring St.; Mike McMillen, 9 Bailey Road; and Matt Ogrodnik, 21 Pleasant St.

Fire department overtime update

The fire department used $14,528.89 in overtime last month including $3,306.03 for call backs and $7,603.05 to cover for those on sick leave. The balance remaining in the department's overtime account for this fiscal year which ends June 30 is $19,969.85 out of $120,182 appropriated as of July 1.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the fire chief will ask for a $39,000 transfer at town meeting to cover overtime for the remainder of the fiscal year. Haddad said some money that is unexpended in the salary account will help offset the overtime costs. Also, one of the firefighters who was out on long-term sick leave is back, the other will be out another couple of months, he said.

Liquor license can be transferred

Selectmen said this week the Chart House liquor license can be transferred to a new owner. Town Manager Mark Haddad said the owners of the Chart House which closed about two weeks ago, called the inquire about transferring the license. The harbor-front building is for sale.

He said he called the Alcoholic Beverage Control Commission which said it was up to selectmen who serve as the local licensing authority.

"The property is not viable without a liquor license," Selectman Nan Roth said.

Lightkeepers want shed painted

The Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation has asked the town to seek inmate labor from the Braintree Alternative Center to paint the engineer's shack next to the assistant lightkeepers residence on Government Island. The county will provide free prisoner labor if the town provides the supplies. The red building was used as the engineer's and payment shack during construction of the second Minot's Light in the mid-1800's.

Delightful 'Annie' plays to sold-out audiences

By Mary Sheppard Earon
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

It was a big bite of Broadway brought home. To the tune of three stunningly professional sold-out shows, the cast of "Annie" brought the house down in the 400-seat capacity of the Cohasset High School this past weekend. It was the show that went on, despite icy roads and blowing snow.

Working with a cast of 70 and a full backstage crew of 16, Cohasset's own 17-year-old wonder, Ron Nicynski, succeeded in harnessing the energy and talent of those involved with the production, "Annie," one of America's best-loved stage musicals, based on the book "Little Orphan Annie," by Thomas Meehan.

All good theater depends upon attention to detail, and it is something that Nicynski understands. His intuitive casting, impeccable attention to props and scenery faithful to the era, and working with the cast for months on characterization, enabled "Annie" audiences to be wrapped up in the story of the red-haired orphan, played poignantly and sung beautifully by Katie Roche. She was Annie, who went from rags to velvet dresses and big white bows, and finally to the signature Christmas-red dress with white trim in the final scene, when she became Daddy Warbucks' little girl.

Brian Krupczak was a real Daddy Warbucks, playing the role of the Republican billionaire, who was disdainful toward Democrats, despite his close relationship with President Franklin D. Roosevelt. Krupczak commanded the stage with his tall, athletic presence and well-timed political puns. As the ultimate 1930s blustery wealthy New Yorker, Warbucks, in manner and dialogue, was "big and loud," like NYC, itself.

FDR was portrayed by Bryan Bilton, a seventh-grader who understood FDR's dry sense of humor and vocal delivery. Bilton's FDR fiddled with a cigarette holder and wore wireless glasses as he was pushed in his wheelchair by his aide, played by Tess Foley, who kept a plaid blanket tucked around the president's legs.

Grace Farrell, Warbucks' assistant, was perfectly cast in Meredith Bates, a sweet, pretty, unflappable eighth-grader who kept her arms protectively around Annie, especially when Miss Hannigan came around.

Miss Hannigan was brilliantly played by Marisa Mello, who knew no limits in portraying the tragically misguided and funny character of Miss Hannigan. She was scary, threatening, explosive, loud, tipsy and sad. Marisa Mello's solo, "Little Girls," was unbeatable and unforgettable. She was on like crazy in "Easy Street," the tune she sang with Rooster, Miss Hannigan's brother, and his hotel girlfriend, Lily, played by two show stealers, David Ingber and Caroline Carr. Raucous, cheap and up to no good, the pair came on like gangbusters as Rooster and Lily, then later as Mr. and Mrs. Mudge, Annie's parents.

Daddy Warbucks (Brian Krupczak) and Annie (Katie Roche) sing "I Don't Need Anything But You" in the Cohasset Plays by the Sea production of the musical "Annie."

Bert Healy, the happy-go-lucky radio talk host, was played enthusiastically by Brenna O'-Donnell, who dressed the part in a straw hat and red suspenders.

The "lovely" Boylan Sisters, in polka dot dresses and red hats, became popular publicity photos for several newspapers, and in their brief time on stage, succeeded in portraying themselves as bored, gum-snapping backup singers with attitude until they were in front of the mike, accompanying Bert Healy with "Never Fully Dressed Without A Smile," which they sang with perky, animated voices and mannerisms. The Boylan Sisters were played by Ali Earon, Krista Nicynski and Shawna Sullivan.

Working with a cast of 70 and a full backstage crew of 16, Cohasset's own 17-year-old wonder, Ron Nicynski, succeeded in harnessing the energy and talent of those involved with the production, "Annie."

The orphans opened the show from their cots, then launched into "Hard Knock Life," using mops, pails, sheets and gymnastics to catapult the audience into Act I.

It was difficult to decide who was more adorable in Act I, the orphan, Molly, played by Brooke Allen, or Hannah, the 9-year-old golden retriever, who played Sandy, and who kept escaping into the audience with her tennis ball. The audience ate it up.

Drake, the butler, played well by David Crowley-Buck, was portrayed elegantly and with stiff reserve.

Katie Flynn, playing a young star-to-be arriving in New York full of hope, soloed sweetly and shyly with the tune, "N.Y.C."

Then mansion servants sang and danced to "Gonna Like It Here," and were dressed in creative black and white uniforms.

The massive undertaking of this production would not have been possible without dedicated parents assisting, yet it is testimonial to what young people are capable of achieving when given the opportunity and the means.

Cohasset Plays By The Sea's "Annie" was directed by Ron Nicynski and choreographed by Janet Campbell, with music direction by Joan Jensen and accompanying quartet.

Rooster (David Ingber) and Lily (Caroline Carr) were real show stealers as they pose as Annie's parents.

Special dinner benefits 'The Garage' project

By Mary Sheppard Earon
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Anthony Bramblett, 17 years old, of Grace Lane, spearheaded an elegant fundraising dinner Saturday evening in conjunction with the Cohasset Plays By The Sea production of "ANNIE." The dinner benefited The Garage, a project directed at renovating the old town garage in the village parking lot into a youth center to accommodate activities such as art exhibits, dances, rehearsals and weekend movies.

The delicious four-course meal was catered by Papa Razzi of Norwell and organized by its employee, Anne Marie Lagrotteria of Cohasset. Guests enjoyed antipasto, a specialty of Papa Razzi, followed by a crisp mixed green salad, sautéed chicken breast stuffed with asparagus, and the traditional Italian tiramisu. Sparkling cider and water accompanied the meal and was served under soft lights and on intimate tables in Bancroft Hall at the Lightkeepers residence on Government Island.

Quiet and interesting jazz selections from Bramblett's personal collection entertained the approximately 50 diners, who relaxed and ate before attending the Saturday evening performance of "Annie" at the Cohasset High School.

Bramblett involves himself with good friend Ron Nicynski's theater productions as his lighting and sound technician, a role he enjoys and is adept at. Bramblett is also part of the newly-formed committee for The Garage project and arrived with the idea of the benefit dinner last October.

"I believe our community needs The Garage because it can provide an outlet to show the good things kids do. Too often, people only hear about the trouble kids get into," he says.

Bramblett said he would like to see The Garage accommodate a great variety of ages and activities for Cohasset youths.

Bramblett is also a waiter at Tosca's, a restaurant in Hingham. He likes to cook at home and someday would like to own his own restaurant.

Included in his thanks for their generosity in making the event successful are Anne Marie Lagrotteria and the Papa Razzi Restaurant, Tosca's, Curtis Liquors, Tina Watson of Cohasset Hardware, and his friends who helped serve, Amanda Cowing, and Abbi and Jami Butman (Jami is also on The Garage committee).

Residential project on Scituate Hill eyed ability as a water tank site. But after first giving McNabb permission to test the soil, Susi withdrew the offer.

"Noel Collins is working on some sort of project for high-density housing,"McNabb said. "That is why they didn't want us to test the highest spot."

The town is planning to erect a new water tank and has allocated $1.4 million for the project. The tower is needed to improve water pressure in town and increasing the amount of water on hand for fire fighting.

Water commissioners had planned to follow the recommendation of town engineer Tutela Engineering to build the tower on town-owned land on Bear Hill.

But residents who live within view of Bear Hill and the existing tower organized fierce opposition to the plan. Opponents claimed Scituate Hill would be a far better location for a new water tower.

Bear hill is 158 feet high and would require a 62-foot-high tank to achieve adequate water pressure.

Water pressure in a tank is governed by gravity. The higher the tank, the higher the pressure. But the highest elevation on Scituate Hill is 14 feet higher than Bear Hill at 172 feet. This higher elevation would require a shorter tank to achieve the same water pressure.

However, the land on Bear Hill is already owned by the town while Susi owns the land on Scituate Hill. The town could try to purchase the land at market rates or seize it by eminent domain, but those are expensive options.

McNabb said purchasing or seizing the land could increase the cost of the project by more than $100,000.

There are some problems with this latest development. The land is zoned industrial and residential development is not allowed. Collins and Susi would have to get either a variance or a change in bylaws to build a residential development.

McNabb said he thinks the water commissioners would support a zoning change if it meant the town could get free land on Scituate Hill for a water tank. But town meeting must make the final decision on whether to change zoning bylaws.

Time is also a factor. The project has already been delayed while water commissioners explored the Scituate Hill site. The residential development could take some time to acquire approval, potentially increasing the cost of the project.

Also, the highest elevation on Scituate Hill is also the best place for prime residential real estate development. Collins and Susi may not be offering the highest elevation as the site for the tank.

If the developers offer a lower site, they will have to bear the extra cost to increase the height of the tank and possibly install more water pipe.

McNabb said he was confident that Collins was the best man to make the projects work.

"If anyone can make it happen, Noel Collins can,"McNabb said.

Collins said he believed developing the land and giving the town land for a tank for $1 would be a win-win situation for everyone.

Collins has developed a reputation as someone who specializes in win-win developments for the town and developers.

Collins convinced the zoning board to grant him a variance to replace a series of Quonset huts on South Street with five new townhouses. Collins originally wanted 10 townhouses.

Collins appealed the zoning board decision to superior court, but continued to negotiate. He finally convinced the zoning board to allow five units.

Residents living near the Quonset huts complained that the buildings were a blight to the neighborhood. Supporters of Collins' project were delighted that he was able to compromise with the zoning board while keeping his development profitable.

Water commissioners cannot just wait for Collins and Susi to come back with a proposal. The commissioners are already planning a number of articles for the spring town meeting to modify the current tank plan.

Last year's warrant article authorizing the commissioner's to borrow $1.4 million to build a tank specified Bear Hill as the location for the new water tank. Water commissioner's want the language to be changed to allow them to choose a different site at their discretion.

Water commissioner's will also ask for another $200,000 in case they need to purchase land on Scituate Hill and cope with additional development costs.

McNabb said the commissioners also want a change in zoning bylaws to allow the town to build a tank beyond the current 45-foot height limit on town-owned land or in an industrial zone.

This article would allow the commissioners to approve the tank on Scituate Hill without a variance.

Three throw hats in ring for school board seats

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Few of the offices at stake in the Apr. 4 annual town election will be uncontested, if all the candidates who have announced so far get on the ballot. Currently, Henry Rattenbury is the only official candidate. Rattenbury, who is running for a new term on the sewer commission, returned nomination papers to the town clerk—becoming the first candidate on the ballot. The candidates have until Feb. 16 to return nomination papers, with signatures of 50 registered voters, to the town clerk's office.

In the school board election, two women and one man have announced they will run for two seats currently held by incumbents Ralph Kidder and Maureen Jerz, the chairwoman. Both incumbents are expected to announce their plans Thursday.

Meantime, planning board incumbent Robert Sturdy of 270 Jerusalem Road has decided he will seek a new term, and water commissioner Robert Kasameyer of 17 Pond St. indicated he also intends to run again, though Kasameyer had not pulled nomination papers before the Mariner's deadline. If he does, he might face at least one opponent. John Fortin is also seeking the three-year term on the water board.

Wednesday Kasameyer said the location of the new water tank was a critical issue, with both Bear and Scituate Hills acceptable sites and cost the main question.

In the health board election, political newcomer Steve Bobo of 292 Jerusalem Road will try for the seat vacated by longtime member Thomas Cook. Bobo said the ecology is the main issue facing Cohasset. He advocates an holistic solution and said town boards should combine forces to find solutions.

"The major issues in town are related to the environment—the dump, the sewers, the septic system and the pollution of our harbors," Bobo said Tuesday. A retired mechanical engineer, he is confident the solutions are out there.

"We've got a beautiful town," he said. "But we've got some things that aren't working right."

While Bobo so far has no challengers, the school board election will be contested. Zoning board chairman Mark DeGiacomo of 14 Holly Lane will test Janyce Brown of 39 Rocky Lane and Patricia Martin of 169 Linden Drive in a three-way race for two seats.

DeGiacomo, an attorney and a product of the Cohasset public schools, said one of the major issues facing the new board is the condition of the school buildings.

"I've been especially concerned with the condition of the facilities," DeGiacomo said Wednesday. "There is obviously a limited budget we can work with."

DeGiacomo said he would work to see the school committee "get maximum amount of funding and use it in best interest of the children." He also said he wanted to be an advocate for the schools.

"I can help the school committee by taking on kind of a leadership role as an advocate for our schools with other boards as well as with community as a whole. I think we have a very good school system. But there's always room for improvement," he said.

"The major issues in town are related to the environment—the dump, the sewers, the septic system and the pollution of our harbors."

— STEPHEN BOBO, POTENTIAL CANDIDATE FOR HEALTH BOARD.

Sounding much the same theme, Janyce Brown said the schools need repairs, and she believes she can help get Cohasset through the budget crunch. A former insurance sales representative for the Aetna Insurance Company of Hartford, Brown is now a full-time mother who said she has a "vested interest" in the schools. She recently learned more than 80 percent of the town's population consists of adults whose children are not of school age, she said.

"No one wants to see their taxes raised," she said.

Though a newcomer to Cohasset, Brown also said she is eager to get involved.

"Getting new blood on committees and organizations is a good thing," she said.

Patricia Martin, like Brown, also recently moved to Cohasset. But while Martin will be making her first run for public office, she has previously worked on numerous campaigns and been an adviser to municipal government officials in the Princeton, New Jersey area.

"The biggest issue I advised on was substance abuse prevention," Martin said who said she had been a consultant at the municipal level to about 11 towns in central New Jersey and still works with the Cranbury and Montgomery townships.

Martin holds a master's degree in social work from Rutgers University through a program in administrative policy and planning development. She was graduated from the University of Rhode Island with a B.A. in psychology and is currently at home with two children. She said she is running for the school board to offer her skills as a fund raiser and a grant writer. She also said the main issues facing the new board will be building the new elementary school, choosing a new superintendent and dealing with the future uses of the Osgood School building.

In the other races, as previously reported, incumbent selectman Merle Brown will have a test from Thomas Callahan and William Ross in another three-way race for two seats. Richard Barrow will seek a new five year stint on the recreation board. Three incumbent library trustees, Sarah Pease, June Hubbard and Barbara Power, are so far unopposed. But there will be a contest between Jamie Williams and Carol Riley to fill a two-year term for the seat vacated by Anne Bowdoin. Finally, no one has yet announced for the three-year assessor's term.

Nomination papers available

Nomination papers for the annual town election April 4 are available at the town clerk's office. In order to hold an elected office you must be a registered voter of the town. The following positions will be available:

Town moderator irked by proposed by-law

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Town Moderator George Marlette doesn't like selectmen poking their noses into his business.

He is very angry about selectmen's plans to change the by-laws so that articles at town meeting will come up by random selection. Marlette prefers the articles — which are items of business before town meeting — to be taken in the order in which they appear in the town warrant.

For the past two weeks, selectmen discussed random selection saying they think the suspense keeps more people in attendance. The quorum at Cohasset town meeting is 100 registered voters and at times, it's been a challenge to keep that many in the hall.

Selectmen conceded that Marlette might not like the idea, so they asked Town Manager Mark Haddad to let him know about the proposed by-law change.

Marlette said he is not going to sit back and let selectmen set a bad precedent by involving themselves in the moderator's role.

"I will step down from the podium at town meeting for the purposes of debating on that issue," Marlette said. "This is another example of selectmen doing what they want whether it's disregard of the Open Meeting Law or the separation of the two executive branches of town government."

While Marlette steps down to argue against the proposal, the town clerk would step in temporarily to act as moderator.

"They have slipped in an article without consulting me and I think that's unconscionable," Marlette said. "If I'd been asked, I'd have gladly met with them to see if there is a middle ground."

He explained there are far more pressing issues before the town but feels this is a matter of principle.

Ironically, selectmen have the power to place the articles on the warrant in any order they choose, Marlette explained.

"What they are saying is they don't give any thought to the order," he said.

Marlette also explained that under town meeting rules, town meeting can vote how it wants the articles to come up.

"Town meeting can govern itself," he said. "If someone made a motion (about the order of the articles), I would put it to a vote."

Random selection has its drawbacks, he said.

"I don't think people should be compelled to sit there through mundane business that does not concern them," he said.

Marlette also worries that consultants, who are paid by the town, will have to sit there wondering when the articles that concern them will come up.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said Tuesday that the article has not been drafted yet. He explained that town counsel was reviewing how other towns have handled similar by-laws.

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan, who was late to the meeting last week and was not part of the discussion, sees it as a minor matter.

"There is too much to do in town to spend more than a minute on this issue," Sullivan said.

Public hearing on parish center tonight

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

St. Anthony's Church wants to build a 10,400 square foot parish center to accommodate religious classes and functions for a rapidly expanding membership. But there are a couple of problems. The proposed center would sit in a coastal flood plain and increase the lot coverage to 40 percent, 10 percent over the town's limit.

The zoning board of appeals discussed the proposal Jan. 7., and continued the public hearing until Thursday, Jan. 22.

St. Anthony's has known for a long time that it needs a parish center. More than 650 students attend religious classes at the church.

But the parish could not build the center because of a prohibition against septic systems in the flood plain and a freeze on new sewer connections.

But state officials recently agreed to allow a limited number of new sewer connections in town. St. Anthony's was at the top of the list for new connections, and the sewer department approved the parish's application.

Since St. Anthony's doesn't have a parish center; all religious classes and events are held in the church or one small spare room. The church needs room to hold religious classes, functions, gatherings, special events and lectures from guest speakers.

The Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Boston is sponsoring the project, and proposing a large, self-standing parish center that would house eight classrooms, meeting rooms, a kitchen and an area f[illegible] functions that could accommodat[illegible] more than 300 guests.

The architecture of the proposed building would match the brick church.

The proposed building would sit on the same 4.7 acre parcel of church-owned property that includes the church at 6 Summer St. But the church already covers more than 30 percent of the lot.

Zoning board Chairman Mark DeGiacomo said there are also a number of neighbors concerned that the new building would exacerbate existing drainage problems and increase traffic in the area.

DeGiacomo said water draining off the roof of the proposed building could add to drainage problems in the area during large rain storms. Covering more of the lot would leave less soil to absorb storm water.

Large functions, such as weddings or social gatherings could add heavy traffic and noise to the area and create parking problems.

"Part of the proposal includes an outside terrace," DeGiacomo said. "Neighbors are concerned about the noise and worried about having a big building in their back yards."

Church officials have asked the zoning board to require no further parking spaces for the parish center. Currently, the church has 136 parking spaces.

Pastor John Mulvehill said the conservation commission approved the design at a Jan. 8 hearing.

Mulvehill said the conservation commission approval would be a good sign only if the ZBA also approved the plan.

Mall walk for hospice

You can help bring care and comfort to terminally ill patients and their families by walking in the seventh annual Mall Walk for Hospice of the South Shore Saturday, March 7, from 7 to 10 a.m. inside Hanover Mall.

Again this year, participants of all ages will walk sponsored laps inside the mall. There will be entertainment, prizes, surprises and gifts for all registered walkers as well as drawings for dozens of prizes.

Dolly Bicknell of Marshfield and Jo Anne Olson of Hanover are the volunteer co-chairs for this year's Mall Walk. Cohasset resident Mary Sullivan has volunteered to help coordinate recruitment efforts in the town of Cohasset.

The event is an important source of funding for hospice, which helps patients who are in the final stages of illness, live their remaining days to the fullest in the comfort of their own homes. Last year's Mall Walk was the most successful yet, raising $124,000 to help make it possible to provide care regardless of an individual's ability to pay. To get your "walking papers" and register as a walker, or to become involved by underwriting a portion of the walk, donating raffle items, or organizing walking teams, call Jill McDonough at (781) 340-8848.

Hats off to Melinda Johansen, she has made the dean's list at Simmons College for the third semester! Not only that, she has been accepted, early admission, to that school's graduate program! Quite a feat, you sure should be proud of yourself, Melinda!

THANKS FROM CAPT. MORGAN

Had a nice chat with "Captain Morgan" the other day. He told of all the kindness the children and their parents showed him at Christmastime! Hugh said that he would never be able to send notes to all of you generous, thoughtful folks (young and old), so he asked that we do so for him through Around Town — so, Captain Morgan from Bus 2 thanks you all profusely.

VOLUNTEER AT CONSIGNMENT SHOP

Since its beginning in 1912, the Social Service League's Cohasset Consignment Shop has relied on volunteers. Manager Andy Merrill is sending out an SOS for all retirees — men and women — along with newcomers in the towns which benefit form the services of the league (Hingham, Scituate, Hull, Norwell and Cohasset). Merrill said volunteers are especially needed Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays, but assistance is always needed throughout the week. She added that there is a great comradeship, fellowship and camaraderie among the volunteers, and most volunteers look forward to not only helping a great cause, but value the friendships that have developed over the years. All who are interested, should call 383-0687. The non-profit shop is located in Shaw's Plaza, and is open 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Sunday. Proceeds from the shop benefit the flu shots, meals on wheels, battered women and the keep-well programs, to name but a few. Andy also encourages all South Shore residents to come and view the men and women's tweed jackets, fur coats, silver tea service, hand-knit gloves and sweaters, and everything else for the cold winter days!!

SPECIAL WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

GONE PLATINUM!

Did you read about the former CHS basketball star, Bryan Edwards? He has gone "Platinum!" Bryan doesn't play basketball anymore, although he did play in Europe and in the Continental Basketball League in Hartford. Now he is signing talent for Platinum Entertainment, an independent local record label that also manages talent. Bryan didn't want to play overseas anymore, so he decided to invest his money in Platinum. He is now promoting "Timeless," an R&B/contemporary gospel group, and a local hip-hop group, 1850. Watch for Bryan's name to appear again and again, he will do well! Just to make you feel old, Bryan graduated from CHS in 1988, 10 years ago! He certainly captured every headline then!

MARATHON RUNNER

Bonnie (Kehoe) Taft did it! Remember we told you she was going to run in the Disney Marathon? For the fourth time? Well, she had a problem at 13 miles with her legs cramping up, but she wouldn't give up. She walked for the next six miles and then ran the rest of the way! She was very disappointed with her time because she usually runs this 26.2 mile course in just under four hours, but it took her five because of her problem. She came through the finish line with her mom, Shirley Kehoe, cheering her on, and received her Disney World Mickey Mouse Ears Medal.

Bonnie ran for a 5-year-old leukemia patient, and she was glad to be able to finish it for her! Her determination was unbelievable, she became ill after crossing the finish line! While her mom tries to talk her into coming home to run in the Boston Marathon, we'll join her plea! Bonnie, you love to run, it would be grand to see you again, and you would certainly have tons of cheerleaders to cheer you on! Anyway, congrats to a star!

COHASSET MARINER

EDITORIALS & OPINIONS

The Super Bowl

Okay, it's a trick headline to entice you sports fans out there to read this editorial.

That being said, just in case you haven't been paying attention over the past few weeks, here at the Mariner we've been trying to beef up our local sports coverage.

"Local" to us does not mean the Green Bay Packers and the Denver Broncos, which kick off in the Super Bowl Sunday evening, or the Boston Celtics or Red Sox for that matter. And we don't cover college teams except to let you know what our graduates are up to.

What we do cover are Cohasset High School and youth sports. But because we have limited staff and cannot reach all the local teams out there, we need your help.

Every week we're going to run "box scores" with the basics including names of standouts.

For example: Seahawks 3, Hingham 1. Hat trick: John Alden; assists, Bill Bradford (2) and Miles Standish (1). Goalie, Priscilla Alden, 20 saves. You may also include a short description of the action. For example, "The Seahawks' John Alden scored a hat trick in the final two minutes of the game for a come behind win over the Hingham. The team's record is now 10-1-1."

All a team representative has to do is call our sports line at: 1-800-649-6661 ext. 4263. Results can also be sent by FAX to 781-837-4540 or dropped off at Cohasset News, 3 Brook St.. With the results, be sure to include your name and a telephone number where you can be reached if we have questions.

If you don't notify us, the results for your team won't appear. All teams have to do is designate someone to call (or send) in the team stats every week. It's as simple as that.

We are also in the market for good sports feature ideas. If your team is going to a special tournament, has an unusual story to tell or has a unique performer — please contact sports editor David Wolcott at 781-837-4577. We'd like to thank those coaches and parents that are already providing us with weekly updates on their youth teams.

Jim O'Sullivan, our sports correspondent, will continue to cover high school sports action every week with expanded stories.

Last week our monthly "Athlete of the Month" debuted. We hope you like that feature and we congratulate wrestling standouts Luke Caldwell and Mike Baird on being selected.

As many of you sit down Sunday evening to enjoy the Super Bowl, don't forget all those super kids out there who would get thrill out of seeing their name in the local paper.

We enjoy being scrapbook material and hope you will help us to better fulfill that role.

ZBA urged to take action against CHL

Mark DeGiacomo
Chairman
Cohasset Zoning Board of Appeals
Dear Mr. DeGiacomo:

I would like to express an opinion regarding the meeting of the ZBA Jan. 6. At that time the board heard reasoned and passionate testimony regarding the situation at CHL where the permit holder (CHL) has admitted to being in violation of its permit and site assignment. The owner of CHL has dumped debris and cover materials onto part of our water protection area using the property in direct violation under the terms of his permit. He readily admitted his error and the situation is not in dispute.

I understand that the board needs to carefully weigh its decision. But if this was a neighborhood question of a misplaced deck or addition, I can't imagine a delay in a removal decision. Members of the board, we are talking about thousands of tons of construction debris and fill that CHL has made many thousands of dollars in profit for disposal. This trespass artificially increases the capacity of the present operation by enlarging the base of the site. All this material must be removed immediately from the excluded zone and the slope adjusted accordingly. A fine must be imposed to insure that this situation is never repeated.

Members of the board, this situation is no misplaced deck, this is an illegal trespass onto conservation land over a period of years and I urge you to order this removal immediately.

Support for food pantry appreciated

To the Editor:

As we close the books on 1997 and enter a new year, the workers of the Cohasset Food Pantry, who themselves deserve thanks for their volunteer effort, want to be sure the generous people, businesses and agencies of our town know how much their contributions of food and funds are appreciated.

We have tried to thank donors directly, but the public should also know how the support of these individuals, companies or groups has kept our shelves well-stocked so that some hard-pressed local families could be sure of help with their food budgets. Once again, for example, we were able to provide bounteous holiday baskets at Thanksgiving and Christmas.

At the risk of omitting some of our major donors, I would particularly like to cite all the town churches, the Community Center Nursery School, the Carriage House Nursery School, the Copeland Family Foundation, Cohasset Post Office workers, the Girl Scouts, the Cohasset Democratic Town Committee, the First Parish Christmas Tree sale, Stop and Shop, Buttonwood Books, the Christopher Gallery, Goodale Company Insurance, Kinnealey Meats for gift of turkeys, Leo Fiore's Exxon, and Ann Musto and friends for wreaths. These are in addition, of course, to the many individual donors for their generous contributions.

We find there is a continuing need in Cohasset for the service the Food Pantry provides and we speak for the recipients as well as for the pantry volunteers when we say a thank you to all who have supported it.

Enclosing town pool is put on hold

By Joe McElroy
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Although a high degree of consensus appears to exist to enclose the Cohasset swimming pool while retaining a maximum degree of "openness," the necessary financial support remains in question. Accordingly, the Friends of the Cohasset Swim Center are going to continue to work with the trustees in whatever manner is most constructive, but pursuit of the "enclosure option" will be indefinitely deferred.

Our exploratory efforts will be documented for the trustees, town officials and citizenry and should prove useful at a future date. We believe that we have identified an architectural approach that is both cost-effective and retains much of the openness that we now enjoy. Additionally, it is clear to us that a partnership between the town and the trust (similar to the Percy Walker Pool in Duxbury) offers great potential for affordable rates without significant taxpayer expense. Currently, the Duxbury Recreation Department manages the Percy Walker Pool on a break-even basis and family memberships are $180/year.

However, we cannot minimize the start-up challenges that are complicated by current financial pressures that the town and citizens of Cohasset confront. Until we have definitely documented that a broad cross-spectrum of the community will fund start-up costs and support ongoing pool programs, we cannot recommend that the trustees support the "enclosure option."

In the meantime, the trustees have identified an imminent need to upgrade the facility as it approaches its 25th anniversary. We will assist the trustees in that endeavor while we continue to work towards realization of a year-found facility.

We want to thank you for your continued encouragement and to particularly cite Josiah Stevenson, Glenn Pratt, Jack Worley, Clark Chatterton, Bill Needle and the trustees for their help.

Septic elitism

To the Editor:

A letter by Stephen Bobo entitled "Holistic Septic Solution Needed" contained these two especially interesting sentences: "It's clear that in Cohasset is an element which wishes to choke off growth by almost any means. But it's no longer possible to use sewer system management to limit growth in a town."

How true! Unfortunately, that mindset was largely responsible for our failure to build a large sewage treatment plant a few years ago, when it would have been largely subsidized by federal and state funds. As the sewer commission chairman admitted at a public meeting about two years ago: "We believed the funds were there for us, but we just didn't want the big plant."

How many remember the mesmerizing speeches a few years ago about our beautiful town and how it would be ruined forever if we expanded our sewer system? This elitist nonsense was much applauded at the time, and no doubt it's still popular with a certain element. For example, those who still feel that we could have made do without the water treatment plant beside Lily Pond!

We fumbled the opportunity to have our septic solution subsidized, so perhaps a greatly expanded sewer system is no longer a viable "holistic solution."

The input from the public at hearings isn't much help; most of it is whining about cost by people who haven't bothered to learn anything about the history of the issues and who have nothing practically constructive to offer. We may disagree with the judgment and actions of the health and sewer commissioners, but we should appreciate the inordinate time and energy they devote and try to appreciate the rats' nest of problems they have to deal with.

Pay-as-you-throw system clarified

To the Editor:

This is in response to last week's "Letter to the Editor" from Mr. Dale Malone.

Based on statements in his letter, it's apparent that Mr. Malone doesn't seem to be very well informed about the Pay-as-you-throw system: To correct a few statements that were in error, I quote, "The stated justification of the program is to increase the town's recycling rate." This is totally wrong. The justification of the pay-as-you-throw never has been to increase recycling but to cut our (the town) cost for disposing of our trash. As stated many times, the cost of disposing of our trash is currently $85 a ton (this will increase each year). The Pay-as-you-throw system is a big incentive to reduce our trash and therefore reduce the cost. Yes, recycling is a large part of reducing that cost, but so are the other two R'S, "REFUSE AND REUSE."

Regarding the statement, "Given our good track record, it is not clear that Cohasset has a margin for improvement." At any given time, look in the trash bin and you will see many recyclable materials thrown in the bin. This is costing you, the taxpayers, money. Yes, we do have mandatory recycling, but to strictly enforce this, we would need someone standing by the trash bin all the time, checking people as they throw their trash in the bin. Not counting the added personnel to monitor this, traffic would probably be backed up to the entrance to the RTF.

Mr. Malone makes the statement that when the "buck-a-bag proposal was originally floated, Mr. Brown suggested that the program would be revenue-neutral based on a supposed "average" Cohasset family throwing away one (!) bag of trash per week. Mr. Malone goes on to say, "Clearly this assumption was incorrect and for a large majority of Cohasset families, the proposed plan would double or triple the cost of trash disposal. The plan is a tax hike, plain and simple." This is incorrect. I never stated that the Pay-as-you-throw system would be a revenue-neutral system. What I did say was that throughout the country, many studies have been done that show the average family of four will throw away 1.2 trash bags a week. I don't claim to be an expert on the Pay-as-you-throw system, but I have done some research, attended seminars, interviewed and visited communities with the Pay-as-you-throw-system. This is not something new that the Recycling Committee of Cohasset is trying to do. The Pay-as-you-throw system is done in many states throughout the country.

In Massachusetts alone there are at last count 75 cities and towns that have the Pay-as-you-throw system. As for it being a tax hike, I guess you could say it is if you don't want to use the three R'S, REFUSE, REUSE, RECYCLE. However, I don't see it that way. I believe it to be a tax reduction. Remember, for every ton of trash we don't send to SEMASS we save money. As stated before, if we just reduce our trash to SEMASS by 15 percent (and that is a conservative estimate), it would save us $35,700. That is more than 3.5 cents reduction off the tax rate.

Regarding Mr. Malone's "cheat" comment: Using a trash compactor does not make me a "cheat." I was pointing out that the weight of trash put into the bag is not too heavy for people to lift and be able to dispose of. By removing all recyclable materials from my trash, the weight is greatly reduced. My trash bag weighs 10 lbs. I call myself "environmentally responsible." Look at what Cohasset recycles and you can clearly see that there is no large amount of weight to the trash we have to throw away.

The statement, "Imagine the mess from all those overfilled bags breaking." The standard Pay-as-you-throw bag has been tested to hold at least 25 lbs. This test was done by dropping the bag with 25 lbs. off a two-story building. Regarding the purchase of bags, the plan has been all along to have all the stores that are willing to participate in the program to do so. That will include at least five stores along Route 3A. I might also note that the RTF is not open any time that the stores are not.

Statement: "For those residents who generate less than one bag of trash per week, the proposal represents a public health risk. We should not encourage residents to store garbage in their homes for weeks at a time." This type of statement really reaches out for reasons not to go with Pay-as-you-throw. Again, Mr. Malone apparently is only interested in what he wants to read into the program. We stated many times that any person who does not compost, can bring his garbage to the RTF any day it is open. This is a very simple thing to do by using, for example, the plastic bag that bread is packaged in (the second "R" — reuse). Mr. Malone says, "The proposed plan also provides a tangible incentive to dump trash illegally." It has been proven many times over that this program will not create more illegal dumping than is done already. Mr. Malone states that when it comes to garbage, I seem to be a bit obsessed. My obsession is not with garbage, but with taxes, finding ways (large and small) that taxpayers of Cohasset can help them from increasing. If there is a way to reduce taxes, I want to do it. I don't believe we should stick our head in the sand or try to find excuses not to save money.

Mr. Malone says, "There is a limit to how far the town should go to encourage noble goals like recycling." I ask, "What is that limit and why should there be a limit? Should we not care about our environment?" If we live that way we will bury ourselves in our own trash.

I want to thank Mr. Malone for stating his opposition to the Pay-as-you-throw system, however, I would encourage him and all interested citizens to look at all the facts. I believe the best conclusion is, the Pay-as-you-throw system for Cohasset's trash disposal needs.

Recycling committee has a busy year

To the Editor:

The Recycling Committee has had a busy year with efforts to find markets for our recyclables. The fluctuating market for steel, plastic, corrugated and glass has presented continuing problems in marketing.

Our percentage of trash to recycling continues good but we are still below the state recycling goal.

New recyclables with the help of our South Shore Coalition have broadened our area of recyclables. Fluorescent bulbs, still considered hazardous with mercury, is the newest effort. Plastic grocery bags are being collected on a trial basis since there presently is no market for our anticipated volume.

The paint recycling program has proven successful with a considerable amount of paint recycled back to reuse. The school system has made use of our surplus paint also.

Hazardous Waste Collection is now operated by the Recycling Committee and a very successful day was conducted at the new D.P.W. area.

Recycling is only as effective as the effort made by residents to separate their recyclables from their trash. We thank those who are working in that direction.

It is with regret that we report the loss of one of our most dedicated recyclers, Jack Hubbard. He will be greatly missed.

Bradley supports Cohasset youth

Assistant District Attorney and current state representative candidate Garrett Bradley helped raise more than $200 Saturday night at a dinner theater fundraiser for "The Garage," a project to renovate the old town garage in Cohasset center to accommodate activities for young people in our community. Bradley presented Anthony Bramblett, the 16-year-old Cohasset resident whose hard work and dedication helped bring this project to life, with a $100 check from Hingham Youth Football, a $50 donation from his campaign committee, and a $65 personal contribution for two tickets to the fundraiser.

Bradley feels that it is the job of our state representative to support important local initiatives like The Garage.

"Our district needs a representative who will provide effective leadership and be pro-active rather than just reactive," Bradley said. "It is important for our elected officials to be active in our communities and support local activists like Anthony Bramblett."

Bradley is focusing on the issues of education, taxes and water rate relief, and crime prevention in his campaign for state representative. As an assistant district attorney, Bradley understands the importance of providing after school activities for our young people to give them constructive alternatives. Bradley has pledged to work hard to promote such activities as our state representative, and to work with local business people to provide internships and after-school jobs.

Osgood reuse group to seek money for consultant officials stalled a year ago on the question of financing the committee, Adkins and the reuse board has held firm in the view the town should pay a consultant for an independent opinion about the Osgood property. They were united on the issue again Tuesday night in the wake of public criticism about their work as a committee and their commitment to taking the time necessaryóperhaps until this Septemberóto find the right use for a school building that is to be closed in June.

Yet as the panel faced up to somewhat stinging criticism of its plan, the chairwoman also floated the possibility the selectmen might not back either the committeeís request for financing or its commitment to study the alternatives in depth.

"The question is,î Adkins told the other board members. "Do we have a role?"

Tuesday, with the question about the committeeís future still undecided, the reuse board stopped short of delivering an ultimatum to the selectmen and got down to work instead. Though the committee reached a consensus on the issue about the consultant, with the five members present at the meeting united in support of paying for independent expertise, they also came up with a short list of recommendations for the site. While most of the options focused on housing with an independent living facility at the top of the list and rental units at the bottom, the committee is also considering a charter school, an institutional use and a library. Only a commercial use has been ruled out.

For the present, Adkins said the panel lacked the information to evaluate the use of the school as a library, due to the uncertainty about the plans of the Board of Library Trustees. The other options listed were condominiums and an assisted living facility.

Finally, the group considered their alternatives should their proposal to bring in an independent expert be nixed. The possibility still seemed somewhat remote to the panel, even though Selectman Diane Sullivan said at a previous meeting she doubted the board would OK the expense for a consultant.

"I never thought anybody would disagree with that,"said Adkins, who maintained going to a consultant was a sensible move. "Never in my wildest dreams."

Yet Adkins, who frankly acknowledged she does not agree with asking professionals to do work for free, did appear open to the idea the selectmen might be leaning towards a role for the reuse committee that is in conflict with the membersí convictions. As the group grappled with continuing questions about their mission to get the property sold and back on the tax rolls, partly to offset the cost of building the new Cohasset Elementary School, the reuse committee reaffirmed their commitment to see the property put to the best use for the town, and not necessarily sold to the highest bidder. The united stand was adopted, in spite of public criticism about the committeeís commitment to move expeditiously.

"I personally am disappointed,"the chairman said on the criticism the committee has faced over the past week. "Weíre donating our time. People might disagree with us. But they donít need to immediately assume weíre incompetent; we donít know what weíre doing, or what weíre doing is wrong."

North Cohasset sewer project over budget

That thought angers Maria Plante, 798 Jerusalem Road, who fought so tirelessly over the past two years to get the town to pick up half the tab of sewering her end of town.

"Asking 330 people to pick up $2.7 million will hurt many tremendously," she said.

Sewer Commission Chairman Ted Guild said the project, which was bid in four phases to make it more competitive, should go forward. Tentative plans are to ask town meeting to appropriate the additional money which would be assessed through betterments on those to be hooked up to the sewer in North Cohasset and would amount to about $290 more a year for 20 years for each homeowner. He doesn't expect town meeting to reject the additional appropriation because the money would not come from the tax base.

The end result would be the project would get a 40 percent subsidy from the town with users picking up 60 percent, Guild said.

Town counsel is investigating whether or not a 60/40 shared town/user payment plan can be implemented in light of the override vote last spring which approved a 50/50 split.

Guild met with a group of homeowners Monday night at Selectman Diane Sullivan's home. Sullivan, who lives at 708 Jerusalem Road, was one of the activists pushing for the town/user shared funding plan approved at town meeting. Guild said the consensus at that meeting was to award the contract for the first two phases of the North Cohasset project to the low bidder, D & C Construction of Rockland. Then go to town meeting for the additional money to pay for phases three and four which would be rebid.

This was the second bid round and attracted 23 bidders. The first, held in October, attracted 15 bidders with low bids totaling $1 million higher than those in the second round.

Guild cited the price of a linear foot of pipe, which nearly doubled, as an example of a cost driver. Also, many contractors are reluctant to go onto private property because of liability issues, making the bids for phases three and four, which involve sewer service installation, higher than expected.

Phases one and two involve installing mains on all streets in the North Cohasset area, buying into the Hingham pump station, buying capacity in the Hull treatment plant, covering all engineering to date and installing sewer service to the Straits Pond area, which has been deemed by the state as an Area of Critical Environmental Concern (ACEC).

Guild said completing those phases would protect the town from possible court action by the state and town of Hull. The town is under a court order to solve its sewer woes or face stiff fines from the state.

Sewer commissioners will meet with selectmen at 8:30 p.m., Monday to discuss the issue.

In addition to betterments, sewer users will also pay operating and maintenance fees of about $400 a year. Also approved last spring was the $13.4 million central Cohasset sewer project which upgrades the town's wastewater treatment plant and extends service to about 600 homes not currently on the sewer.

Hoopsters need to get in gear quickly

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

With a string of three consecutive losses and not much hope in the foreseeable future, the 3-8 Cohasset Skippers boys' varsity basketball team faces the prospect of not making the state tourney for the first time in a long time.

Despite solid individual efforts, Cohasset has lost to Hanover, Rockland and Abington, all within the last month. A lone bright spot came with a nail-biting win over Dover Sherborn.

The Abington game was one which could be looked back upon as a back-breaker. Leading by one point with three ticks showing on the clock in Abington's home gym, and the game seemingly won, the Skippers were nearly assured of a 3-5 record, not ideal, but certainly worthy of play-off hopes.

However, through some miracle, and a wink toward home court advantage, the Green Wave found a way to win. With the length of the court to go, an Abington player inbounded the ball on a pass which was lightly deflected by senior Pat Hurley. By rule, the clock should have started when the ball touched Hurley's hand. But, there was still time enough for the ball to cross halfcourt and a shot to be taken. Plausible as this may seem, it is highly unlikely that the ball could come down, be shot again, be rebounded a third time, and finally put through for the winning bucket in half the time it takes to read this sentence.

Needless to say, despite cinematic evidence to the contrary, the Skippers were handed a loss.

To qualify for the Massachusetts state tournament, a record of .500 or better is required. Cohasset seems to have run up against a brick wall.

No such excuse can be offered for the Rockland game. Visiting Cohasset was outplayed, pure and simple. The high-flying, fun to watch Bulldogs put on a clinic, tearing the Skippers to shreds 84-42, a perfect doubling. Season-leading scorer Paul-Michael Quintin was shadowed by two defenders and held to six points. Jamie DeMichele, coach Ford's junior sensation, led his squad with 13 points. Coupled with a loss Tuesday night to the Hanover Indians, this dropped the boys in blue to a discouraging 2-9.

Skippers stay atop the South Shore League

Gymnasts yet to tumble from ranks of the unbeaten

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

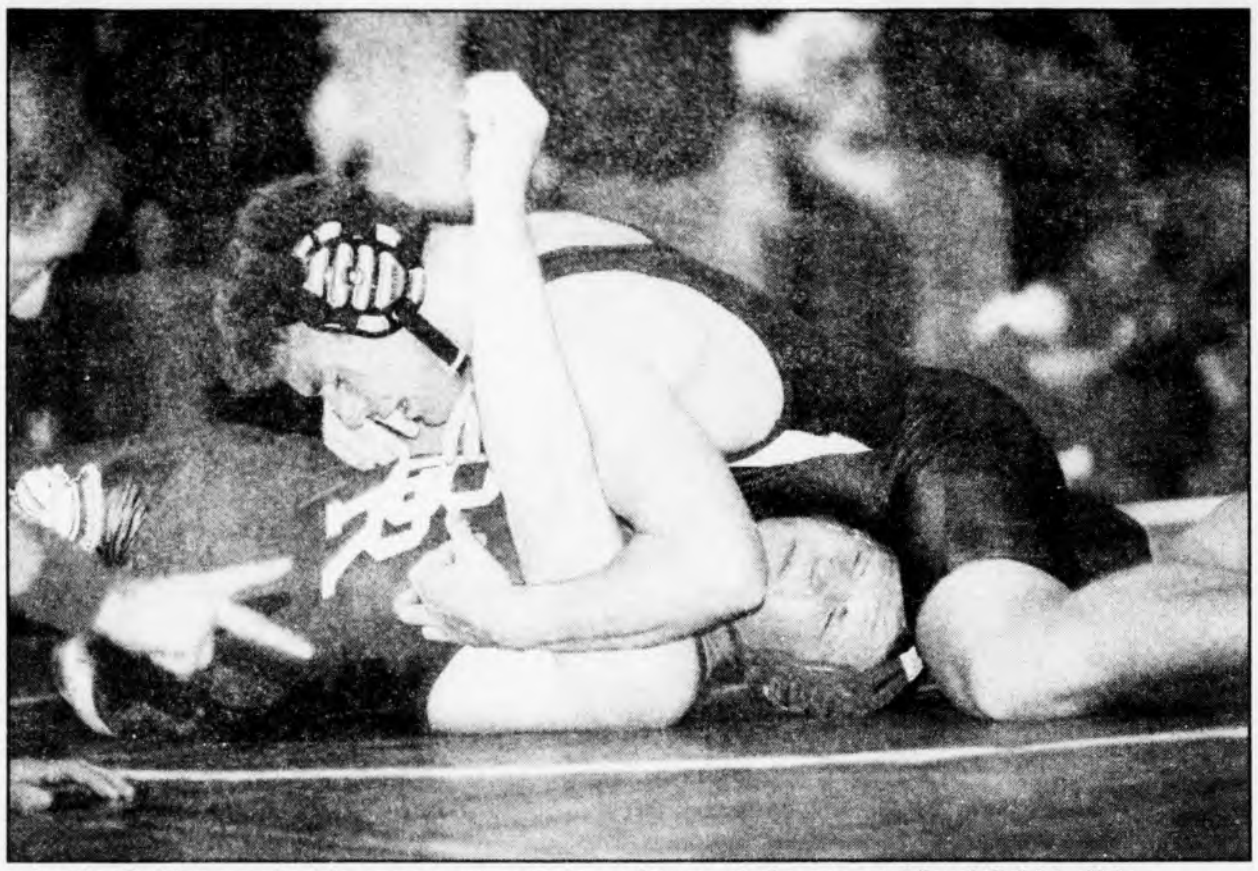
Just call them the "Magnificent Seven."

Is there really any other way to describe the small band of warriors disguised as the Cohasset High gymnastics team?

The Lady Skippers proved they don't just beat up on the run-of-the-mill squads as they raised their record to a league-leading 6-0 on Jan. 14 with a tight 119.45 — 117.8 win over a tough Hanover High team.

The meet was hardly a runaway for Cohasset, which faces the Lady Indians on Monday night at the Hanover Middle School beginning at 7:15 p.m. Cohasset was only slightly ahead, 27.9 to 26.95, after the contest opened with the bars.

Head coach Ruthann Ardizzoni admits she was concerned with how close to the Lady Skippers Hanover was. Ardizzoni was hoping Cohasset would come away from the opening event with at least a 1-1/2 point lead.



"This was the first meet in a long time where I felt the pressure," she said.

The Lady Skippers hadn't been in a truly close meet for some ers did not join the team, along with several role players; an already tough schedule was made even more difficult with the addition of Rockland to the league; the talent level this year is down because players were given little time to develop after graduating last year's class, fan support at home games, particularly in the student section, is dramatically diminished.

With a pair of tough games against Marshfield, another against Rockland, and one more against Carver, along with a cluster of other question mark games, the Skippers seem to be facing a daunting challenge. Can they carry on the tradition in the face of all this adversity? We wish them luck.

time. In their previous three outings they walked away with easy wins over Carver (119.7 — 116.3), non-league opponent Notre Dame (118.8 — 103.95) and Duxbury (119.6 — 112.6). Hanover, however, is the team to beat in the Pilgrim Conference — when not facing Cohasset.

Cohasset was up to the task of battling the Lady Indians. Tara Hettstrom placed second on the bars (7.5) and teammate Carlie Carter followed in third with a 7.0 score.

Hettstrom and Carolyn Pratt finished in a tie for third (7.6) on the balance beam, just behind Cohasset's Kristin Sheerin (7.8). By the halfway mark of the meet the Lady Skippers had made few mistakes, but with the score 57.7 to 56.4 Ardizzoni knew the win was still up for grabs.

"I was hoping to have at least a 2-1/2 point lead," she said. "The girls were doing a lot better than their scores' showed. I was wicked, wicked worried."

Cohasset, however, began to inch away over the second half. Sheerin put forth a splendid bar routine, finishing with an 8.25, good for first place and her highest score of the season. Hettstrom also performed well to finish third with a 7.85.

The Lady Skippers had a solid night on the floor with Hettstrom leading Sheerin to a 1-2 finish, 8.15 and 7.85, respectively. The pair went on to take second and third in the all around. Hettstrom recorded a 31.1 and Sheerin was right behind in 30.6.

The win was easily the biggest of the season for Cohasset, but the toughest test comes when the girls face Hanover in its home gym. Ardizzoni was very pleased with the win, but knows this isn't the time for the Lady Skippers to savor their victory.

"I was very relieved," she said, "but we do have to face them again."

Ardizzoni is as concerned now about the Lady Skippers avoiding sickness and injury as she has been all season. With seven girls, Cohasset can't afford for any one team member to go down with the flu or a sprained ankle.

Hettstrom is currently nursing a slight back injury. Thankfully, though, it is not serious and she should be ready for Cohasset's next meet.

"Her back is already feeling better," Ardizzoni said. "We'll just have to see what happens. She's just taking it easy at this point."

While Hanover doesn't have a huge team, it is big enough to make Cohasset's life difficult if the injury bug hits.

"They have 10 girls on their team," Ardizzoni said. "It's not a lot but it can make a big difference. It's all a matter of staying healthy at this point."

The "Magnificent Seven" doesn't intend to hold back now.

Icemen prepare for new league in the new year

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

One of the fastest skaters on the Cohasset High junior varsity hockey team has the smallest area of ice to cover on the team.

Prior to the start of the season, Coach Dennis Walsh was looking at freshman Danny Williams to play the role of a forward.

However, to go along with a number of other shortages on the team, including players, Cohasset needed a goalie.

Danny's brother, Jeremy, who had been an outstanding goalie at Cohasset, graduated last spring.

Along with Jeremy, a number of other senior hockey players graduated, leaving the Skippers with a shortage of players, forcing the team to play sub-varsity hockey this season.

Willing to help the team at any position, Danny jumped into the nets. According to his coach, Danny never played the position in his life.

With brother Jeremy taking a year off from hockey, he plans to go out for the UMass hockey team next year, it wasn't hard for Danny to find goalie equipment around the house.

"He just moved right into the position," said coach Walsh. "He's been doing a good job for us. He has made a number of solid saves for us and certainly doesn't look out of place in the goal.

"This is a kid who never went to goalie school or did any of the things kids do to become a fine goalie. I just can't get over how a kid who never played the position can look like he's been playing it for years.

"He's a special kind of kid. He gave up playing a position he knew he was good at, to take on a position that was a question mark for him.

"He has certainly been a life saver for us this season, as we try to bring the team back to varsity status."

The coach is certainly optimistic about the return to varsity play next season, especially with the evolution of a new league for small schools that will certainly help Cohasset.

Going into the week, Cohasset was sporting a record of two wins, three losses and one tie.

The young Skippers have defeated Hingham and North Quincy junior varsity teams, while losing to Hanover, South Boston and tying Sandwich.

The South Boston loss was to a varsity squad. "My kids played one heck of a game," said Walsh. "They were holding their own for two periods, trailing 2-1. It was in the third period, the kids ran out of steam, and the stronger more experienced Southie team opened the scoring gates."

The coach continued, "We eventually lost the game 5-1, but it was great to see us leading, 1-0, even for a brief period."

The Cohasset team was looking to even the slate Tuesday, when it was scheduled to play Sandwich at Sandwich.

Adam Donovan, the lone senior on the club, and also the team captain, has been making great strides this season and also playing a great role model for the kids, states the coach.

The leading scorer on the team has been Brad Powell, who has been running up goals and assists.

The center has been getting great support from his forwards, Ryan Hubley and Ken Portanova.

Helping out Donovan on defense has been Ted Goff, who according to Coach Walsh is really coming into his own.

While on the subject of players who have been coming along real well, Coach Walsh likes the play of Caitlin Donovan, a sophomore.

"She has been doing a great job for us on defense. She plays the position really well."

Asked if the opposing teams let up a bit on her, the coach commented, "No way. She's treated like any other player out there on the ice. She has taken some good hits and at the same time has dished out a few as well."

Asked if she could be playing varsity hockey next season, Coach Walsh exclaimed, "She sure can. If she keeps improving the way she has been, she will be on the team. She's becoming a real solid player.

Wrestling tourney on tap for Saturday

Cohasset will host a number of local towns Saturday in their seventh annual wrestling tournament. Preliminary rounds will start at 10 a.m. and the finals are expected to start somewhere near 6 p.m..

The Skippers won the tourney last year and will face some impressive competition this year, including teams from Rockland, Scituate, Hanover and Norwell. Cohasset comes into the tourney off a pair of impressive wins against Rockland (42-29) and Sharon (39-33) as well as an important clash Wednesday evening against the Carver Crusaders that will go mighty far in determining who is the top team in the South Shore League.

Winning by pin against Rockland were Craig Sheerin, Mike Baird, Liam O'Donnell, Mike Rossi, Justin Golden and Luke Caldwell. Winning on points were Chris Pratt and Ben Littauer.

The Skippers were down 27-6 to Sharon at one point but bounced back by scoring the next 33 points for the win.

Getting pins were Sheerin, Ben Littauer, Rossi, Golden, Calwell and J.P. Laugelle, while Kevin DeVito got the nod on points.

Locals picked for national lacrosse championships

Cohasset High School seniors Jamie Buick and Eric Moore have been selected as members of the Massachusetts all-star lacrosse team that will compete in the National High School Indoor Lacrosse Championships January 17-19.

Buick and Moore are among 20 high school juniors and seniors who were chosen from 250 players representing public and private schools across the state. The Massachusetts all-stars include players from Concord-Carlisle, Duxbury, Norwell, Sandwich, Boston College, Newton South, Medford, Lincoln-Sudbury, Needham, Middlesex, Rivers, St. Sebastian's, Belmont Hill and Phillips Academy high schools.

The tournament, in its eighth year, is hosted by the Peddie School of Hightstown, New Jersey.

"This event is one of the premier recruiting opportunities for college coaches," said Coach Burke Walker, president of Top Gun Lacrosse, the sponsor of the team. Last year, Massachusetts finished sixth in the tournament, with Jon Lacks and Ely Kahn representing the Skippers. Lacks now plays for Providence College, and Kahn for Harvard University.

Buick, the Skippers' 1998 co-captain, led all players in eastern Massachusetts in scoring last season and was a Pilgrim Conference all-star. Moore, a starter at attack, finished among the top ten scorers in the conference in 1997.

Last call for youth lacrosse players

The Cohasset Youth Lacrosse programs — for children in grades five through eight — is completing its spring registration by mail.

For the first time this year, Cohasset is adding a team for seventh and eighth graders to the junior program, which has featured a fifth and sixth grade team for the last two years.

The youth program is in addition to the middle school program; it starts before the school squad practices.

At a sign-up session on Dec. 20, 30 players registered for the fifth and sixth grade program, fewer than expected.

"Between the kids we had returning from last year and the kids who played at our summer camp, we expected at least 36 kids, which is the number we feel is necessary to field two teams this year," says Chuck Jaffee, who heads the youth program.

New youth task force to meet Saturday

Teen Center still open

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

A new task force on Youth Resources will meet Saturday to deal with some ongoing issues about the existing Teen Center housed inside Independence Hall. The building has been the focus of numerous rumors lately as information has gotten out the selectmen want the building to be sold. But the Teen Center is still open, according to board director Melinda Murray, though the hours have been scaled back to every other weekend.

Murray said the Teen Center has been under continuing financial pressure, and the scale back was done to save costs. Initially, the board had intended to close the operation entirely but then decided to stay open, at least through August while the youth activities are re-organized under the umbrella of the Recreation department.

Murray also confirmed director Cathy Mueller-Bell of Hingham has resigned, an action Murray said was also part of the effort to cut costs. Nonetheless, she said Bell would welcome to apply for a newly created position as youth center coordinator under recreation director Jack Worley.

Despite all the cutbacks, Murray said the Teen Center ultimately would be growing, although questions remained about the future of the Independence Building near St. Stephenís Church. Both selectwomen Diane Sullivan and Nan Roth have commented recently they believe the building, formerly the town jail, will be sold, although the final decision on the question has to be left up to the town meeting.

Murray also said when the Teen Centeris activities expand, the new focus would probably be on dances and trips, though the details were not yet decided.

During the interim, Rose Collins and Betsy Connolly are coordinating trips and events from the Independence Building. Collins said the new task force, which is now being formed with four adults and four teens, is getting ready to plan activities. Collins said about $15,000 has been appropriated to run the new programs through the Recreation Department. Collins said the sum would also be shared with the new Teen Center to serve older teenagers in the former town garage behind the Red Lion Inn.

Independence Building can be sold

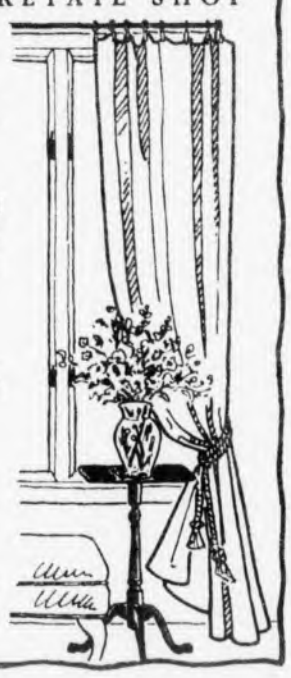
The town can sell the Independence Building which currently houses the teen center, Town Manager Mark Haddad said. Several years ago the town attempted to sell the building and was taken to court by a resident who felt it should be used for public housing. The case was dismissed by the court. The zoning board of appeals approved a variance and authorized a 2,000 square foot lot which was signed off by the planning board. Selectmen want to know the assessment of the building and at this point, have not discussed any future options for the site. The teen center, which leases the building from the town, may soon vacate the building, which is on South Main Street in front of St. Stephen's Church. Plans are in the works for a new teen center in the old DPW garage.

Teen Center activities planned

The Teen Center is expanding its weekend activities to include community events for the next month. This Friday, Jan. 23, teens will be admitted free to the Cohasset girls' varsity basketball game at 6:30 p.m. in the Cohasset High gym. There will be a shootout to benefit the Teen Center at intermission. Saturday, Jan. 24, teens will be cheering on the boys wrestling team as they compete all day in a South Shore Tournament at CHS. That evening the Teen Center will be open for a Rocky "Movie Night" from 7 to 10 p.m.

On Friday evening, Jan. 30, the teens will gather at the CHS gym to cheer on the boys' basketball teams against Abington. There will be a pool tournament at the Teen Center Saturday, Jan. 31, from 7 to 10 p.m. with snacks available.

Feb. 6 and 7 teens are invited to attend the Cohasset High School Drama Club's production of "Godspell" in the auditorium at 8 p.m. Friday night's performance will benefit the Appalachia Service Project. Tickets can be purchased in advance for $7.



Reservations for the Waterville Valley ski trip scheduled for Sunday, Feb. 8, are being accepted. This will be the third year that the Teen Center and the Recreation Department have co-sponsored this trip. Call Jack Worley at 383-6791 for reservations and additional information.

MAY I PRESENT

Sallyann Chatterton

I tried this recipe over the holidays, and everyone thought it to be the best pasta dish they had in some time! It is relatively simple, moderately priced and delicious! Guarantee that you will serve this more than once! May I present

Cheese-stuffed large shells (or manicotti)

Cook 1 package stuffing shells, slightly underdone; drain.

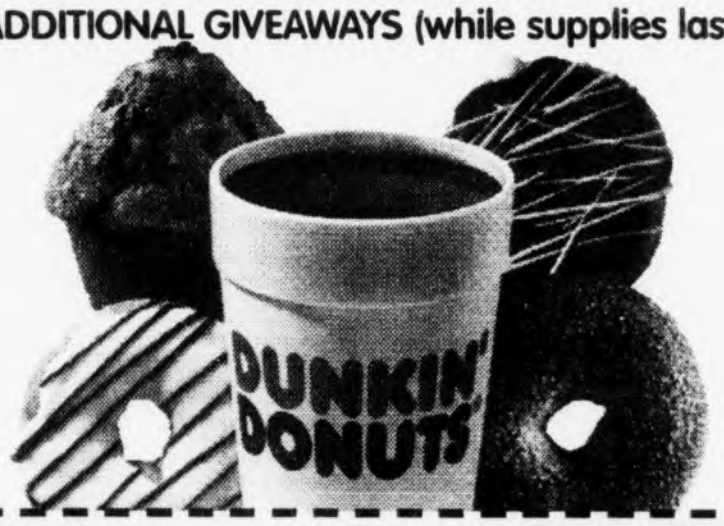
2 cups ricotta or small-curd cottage cheese
1 egg, slightly beaten
2 tablespoons minced parsley
4 tablespoons freshly grated Parmesan cheese
1 teaspoon basil, crumbled
1/4 teaspoon nutmeg
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon freshly ground pepper

Combine the ricotta or cottage cheese with remaining ingredients. Mix well and use it to stuff the shells.

SAUCE

1/4 pound butter
7 tablespoons flour
3 cups chicken broth
1 cup heavy cream
2 cups grated Monterey Jack cheese
1/4 teaspoon Tabasco, salt to taste

Melt the butter in a saucepan. Stir in the flour and cook, stirring constantly, for 3 minutes. Slowly stir in the broth and cream and cook 3 minutes more, until sauce is smooth and thickened. Add the cheese, Tabasco and salt and cook until the cheese melts.



To assemble the shells: Preheat the oven to 375 degrees. Film the bottom of an 11-1/2 x 7-1/2 x 1-3/4 inch baking pan with the sauce. Make a single layer of the stuffed shells. Cover with the remaining sauce, cover with foil, and bake 1 hour. This serves six people, or four very hungry ones!

IT'S HAPPENING

Wine dinner to benefit Carousel

The third annual Tosca Wine Dinner to benefit the Friends of the Paragon Carousel will be held Monday, Jan. 26, according to Susan Fleck, president of the Friends. The young but already very popular tradition is a gift to the Carousel from Ed Kane, owner of Tosca restaurant in Hingham.

Combining the best of the Tosca food offerings with a variety of fine wines, the evening provides a warm and festive respite from the mid-winter doldrums while providing financial support for the Carousel. Tickets are $100 and are available by calling the restaurant at 740-0080 or the Friends at 925-0472.

Concert to benefit Wellspring

In celebration of its 13th year, Wellspring is hosting the Broad Cove Chorale and the Unicorn Singers under the direction of Margo Euler, performing "Encore," a showcase of choral musical favorites. The concert will be held at 4 p.m., Sunday, Feb. 8, in the Walton Rogers Hall of St. Stephen's Church in Cohasset.

The renowned singers will perform a variety of classical, barbershop, folk, spirituals, Broadway, gospel, parody operetta, madrigals, jazz and sing-along tunes, and will feature medleys from "On a Clear Day" and "Guys and Dolls."

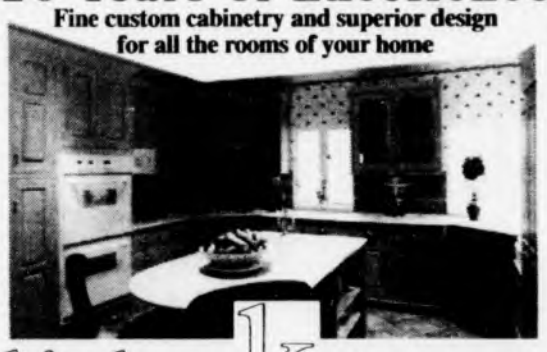
Tables for six at this festive "pops-concert" format event can be reserved by sending a check for $80 to Wellspring, 814 Nantasket Ave., Hull, MA 02045. Single seats are available at $15 each at Nobles Camera Stores in Hingham Square and Cohasset, at the Children's Exchange in Cohasset, and at all Brewed Awakenings (Hingham, Norwell and Weymouth), as well as at the Wellspring office in Hull. Refreshments will be available for sale prior to the concert.

Wellspring began in 1985 as the Hull Interfaith Thrift Shop and Fellowship Center and has grown from a drop-in center for people experiencing the stress of poverty, transition or isolation, to a multi-service center with diverse and helpful programs. These include the Food Pantry, the Wellspring Thrift Shop, the Intervention Project for Battered Women, and the Holiday Food Basket Program.

The concert will also be performed Saturday evening, Feb. 7, at Temple Sha' Aray Shalom. Call 749-6561 for information on the Saturday performance.

Wellspring will continue its 13th birthday celebration with an Open House Birthday Party and Volunteer Recognition Ceremony, from 2 to 4 p.m., at its offices at 814 Nantasket Ave., Sunday, Feb. 15. Community members are invited to come by, meet the board of directors and staff of Wellspring, and learn about its programs. For more information about Wellspring, the Sunday concert or the open house, call (781) 925-3211.

'Godspell' to debut at C.H.S.



The Cohasset High School Drama Workshop will present the musical "Godspell" under the direction of Ron Emmons and choreography of Margaret Barlow, Feb. 5, 6 and 7. The show will be in the high school auditorium, at 8 p.m., Thursday and Friday; and at 7 p.m., Saturday. Tickets can be purchased ahead of time through the high school or through cast members for $7 or $10 at the door. Friday's performance benefits the Appalachia Service Project.

Please come to support the arts at C.H.S. and to have a "Godspell" binding time! The cast and band include high school students Katie Buckley, Jen Chastain, Grace Gardner, Liz Hassan, Linda Holway, Morgan Hurley, Bill Kearney, Ali Kinchla, Julia Lovallo, Dan Morse, Meredith O'Hayre, Jim O'Sullivan, Steve Reynolds, Kelly Tufts, Ashley Ulmer, Jessica Zerendow and Rev. Gary Ritts on keyboard. Also in the band is Derby Academy student Barry Tufts.

On Tuesday, Feb. 3, a photo night for parents will be held, starting at 7 p.m. Those interested should call the high school if they would like to have a photographer come to take pictures.

Youth arrested at party

Police arrested Benjamin M. Roine, 17, of 67 Lamberts Lane, Saturday night at an unsupervised party at his home, Sgt. Robert Jackson said.

As police arrived at about 9:30 p.m. most of the youths at the party fled into the woods, Jackson said. Roine was in charge of the house in his parents' absence, police said. He was charged with minor in possession of alcohol and keeping a disorderly house.

Jackson said police called the parents of the teens who left about six cars in the driveway and they came down to retrieve the cars.

"If we hadn't found the parents, those cars would have been towed," he said.

Super Bowl snacks aid Appalachian rebuilding effort

By Jennifer R. Horan
STAFF WRITER

Many Super Bowl Sunday celebrants in Cohasset will be supporting a worthy cause while watching the big game this Jan. 25.

Once again, the Cohasset Youth Project will be raising money for its annual participation in the Appalachia Service Project by making and delivering subs, soup, salad, chili and brownies this Sunday. Last year, the group supplied 110 sandwiches, 24 salads and 30 bowls of chili to hungry football fans in town.

"It's great because it gets the kids to work together and that's the first priority," said the Rev. Gary Ritts, founder of the Cohasset chapter of the Appalachia Service Project. "This is not the big fundraiser for the trip." The group holds three other fundraisers throughout the year to pay for the trip — pie and bread making in November, the Village Fair in December and car washes in May.

The Cohasset Youth Group will be taking its largest contingent to Appalachia this summer. Eighty-four students and 36 adults will be lending a hand repairing homes in the four-state region known as Appalachia — Virginia, West Virginia, Kentucky and Tennessee. That's double the number of volunteers that have gone in past years, said Ritts.

"It's so beneficial for the kids," Ritts said of the project. "It's a message that they can participate in and they aren't just told. They're doing it. And there's nothing like being with people who need you and appreciate you."

To travel to Appalachia and participate in the home repair projects, the Cohasset Youth Project — now in its tenth year — must raise about $40,000, he said. For two years, the group worked on projects outside of the Appalachian region.

This summer, volunteers will travel by bus to Winchester, Virginia, where they will board 18 rented vans that will take them to the sites they will be working at. They will stay in churches during the one-week trip.

The Cohasset group sent its application for the program in November and has not yet received a response. In the past, the group has worked on projects in all four states.

Every year for almost 30 years, more than 8,000 volunteers from across the country pitch in to make substandard housing in Appalachia warmer, safer and drier.

Work that the Cohasset Youth Group does repairing roofs and porches, building outhouses and drainage ditches as well as insulating homes helps 300 families in need each summer. Unskilled students and adults undergo a construction workshop that teaches them basic safety skills. They also receive a manual, illustrating construction tasks. Upon arrival at their work sites, volunteers will receive instructions with sketches explaining the projects they will be working on. Construction consultants will also be on hand to monitor the crews' progress.

"It isn't a retreat. It's work. They're taking what they're doing seriously," Ritts said.

Food order forms for the Super Bowl fundraiser have been out in town for two weeks. The deadline for placing orders is Friday at noon.

This year, the menu includes chicken salad, roast beef, turkey and italian cold cut subs ($4.50 each) with choice of toppings, Greek salad ($4.50 each), one-pint containers of chili ($4.50 each) and homemade brownies ($3.00 per plate of six). Drivers will be available for delivery from 3 p.m. to 5 p.m. for an additional $1 charge. Food can also be picked up at the Second Congregational Church at 43 Highland Ave. Between 2 p.m. and 4 p.m.

Orders can be faxed to the Cohasset Youth Group at 383-7005 or by phone at 383-0345.

Conservation declaration might get T's attention

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Members of the town's Greenbush Mitigation Committee are tired of the MBTA's failure to address the most important environmental and physical impacts of restoring commuter rail service in town. The consensus among some officials is that the MBTA does whatever it wants, regardless of town concerns.

The mitigation committee is taking notice. The committee is prepared to use whatever tools are available to persuade the MBTA to properly mitigate the town's areas of concern. The latest strategy under discussion by the mitigation committee is declaring the entire rail bed protected conservation land.

Mitigation committee member Michael Dick felt the time had come to force the MBTA to address key environmental issues.

"Our key issues — flooding, wetlands, noise, vibrations, air quality — have not been addressed by the MBTA," Dick said. "My suggestion is that we declare the land conservation and see if it is possible to get a town meeting article framing that land as such."

Mitigation committee member Marty Corey agreed that the MBTA has not adequately mitigated Cohasset's issues. Corey pointed to the MBTA's decision to calculate noise impacts over a 24-hour period even though the train will operate for only 18 hours per day.

Corey said he wanted the MBTA to understand that Cohasset is not adopting the obstructionist stance of Hingham. But he also wants some leverage to induce the MBTA to mitigate the effects of noise, vibrations and diesel pollutants.

This latest development came after the MBTA sent the town inadequate drainage data about rainfall and flooding in the James Brook basin. Dick said the MBTA merely pulled figures from state and federal tracking agencies rather than sending engineers out to take accurate measurements.

Cohasset consultant Dominic Tutela informed the town that the MBTA's data was incomplete and didn't reflect actual rainfall and flooding data for the town.

The MBTA claims it has enabling legislation in place allowing it to take land for Greenbush by eminent domain. But conservation land is protected from development by the state constitution. The MBTA can take conservation land only with a two-thirds override in both the House and

The Army Corps of Engineers is overseeing the effects of the Greenbush rail line on wetlands in Cohasset and other communities. As part of its review, the Army Corps solicits opinions from other regulatory agencies such as the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA).

Last August the EPA found that the MBTA's planned station at Nantasket junction in Hingham would cause major disruptions to wetlands. EPA recommended two alternatives: relocate Nantasket junction to the Hingham Lumber Yard, or eliminate the Nantasket Junction station and build a 300-car parking garage at the MBTA's

Building inspector shuts down CHL

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Building Inspector Bob Egan has ordered the Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill to cease all operations because of a permit violation.

In a notice dated Jan. 26, Egan has issued a cease and desist order forcing CHL to stop land filling immediately.

Massachusetts General Laws state that no special permit shall take effect until the permit has been filed with the Registry of Deeds. The failure to file the permit raises questions about

Reaction mixed on principal's decision

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

School rules on drinking came under new scrutiny this week after the Cohasset High principal and three student athletes turned up at the center of a controversy. The dissension came to a head after one student's father protested at a recent school board meeting that Curtis Collins, the principal, singled out his son for punishment.

William Good, a member of the planning board, complained to the school committee Jan. 22 about the way his son was treated at school, after police over Christmas vacation caught Good's son and six other Cohasset High students carrying beer.

All seven youths were taken into custody Dec. 29 and got identical treatment in the Norfolk Superior Court juvenile diversion program.

But Good's son, also William, a 15-year-old sophomore at Cohasset High, got different treatment than the others when he returned to school. He is off the hockey team for the rest of the season because he admitted guilt during the principal's inquiry that followed the arrest.

The father raised questions

COHASSET WEEK

Title V, loans and credits

Selectmen want townspeople to know there are low-interest loans and state income tax credits available to residents who have upgraded a septic system that was in failure.

Selectman Diane Sullivan raised the issue this week and said the information about the programs is available at the selectmen's office or health board and will be posted on the bulletin board downstairs at town hall.

The loans — which can range from $1,000 to $25,000, at an interest rate of zero, three or five percent depending on the homeowner's income and market area — are available at various banks throughout the state.

The maximum tax credit is $6,000 and is limited to $1,500 in any tax year.

Chiropractic for HEALTH

PATIENTS' PAINED EXPRESSIONS

Approximately 30 million American adults experience back pain at any given moment, making back pain the second most common reason (after the common cold) for patients visiting doctors. Explanations for this very common symptom vary from muscle spasms and strains to bulging discs, pinched nerves, sciatica, and arthritis. Poor posture, tight muscles, and abnormal alignment of the spine are also frequently cited. Another list includes osteoporosis, compression fractures, tumors, vascular disease, and disorders of the abdomen, pelvis, and hips that produce transferred pain in the back. Surprisingly, however, the vast majority of episodes cannot be explained scientifically, and pain can be resolved despite the persistence of long-term abnormalities.

Are you suffering from back pain? Maybe it's time to visit us at SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC for safe and gentle chiropractic care. Chiropractic is a natural method of health care that treats the causes of physical problems, such as low-back, hip, and leg pain, rather than just the symptoms. We're located at 80 Front Street, Scituate Harbor, where we work to restore your health and guide you in a personalized approach to overall wellness. Stop suffering needlessly, call us at 545-7388 today to schedule an appointment. Chiropractic works!

P.S. The chiropractor will want to rule out more serious causes of back pain (which would spur a referral to a specialist) before treating symptoms that are more likely to respond to chiropractic care.

Consultant will examine St. Anthony's drainage

The zoning board of appeals has closed the public hearing on the application of St. Anthony's Church to build 10,400-square-foot parish center next to the church. Church leaders say the parish center is needed to cope with rapid growth in parish enrollment. Neighbors are worried that the new building, if approved, would exacerbate drainage problems in the area. The zoning board has retained an engineer to examine the drainage patterns at the site and determine what effect the new building would have on existing flooding problems. Zoning board Chairman Mark DeGiacomo said he expects the report back in a couple of weeks. Once the report is finished, zoning board members will review the data and render a decision.

Ten minutes for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their weekly meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-9900 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. Mondays.

Drama coach reflects on British, American theater

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

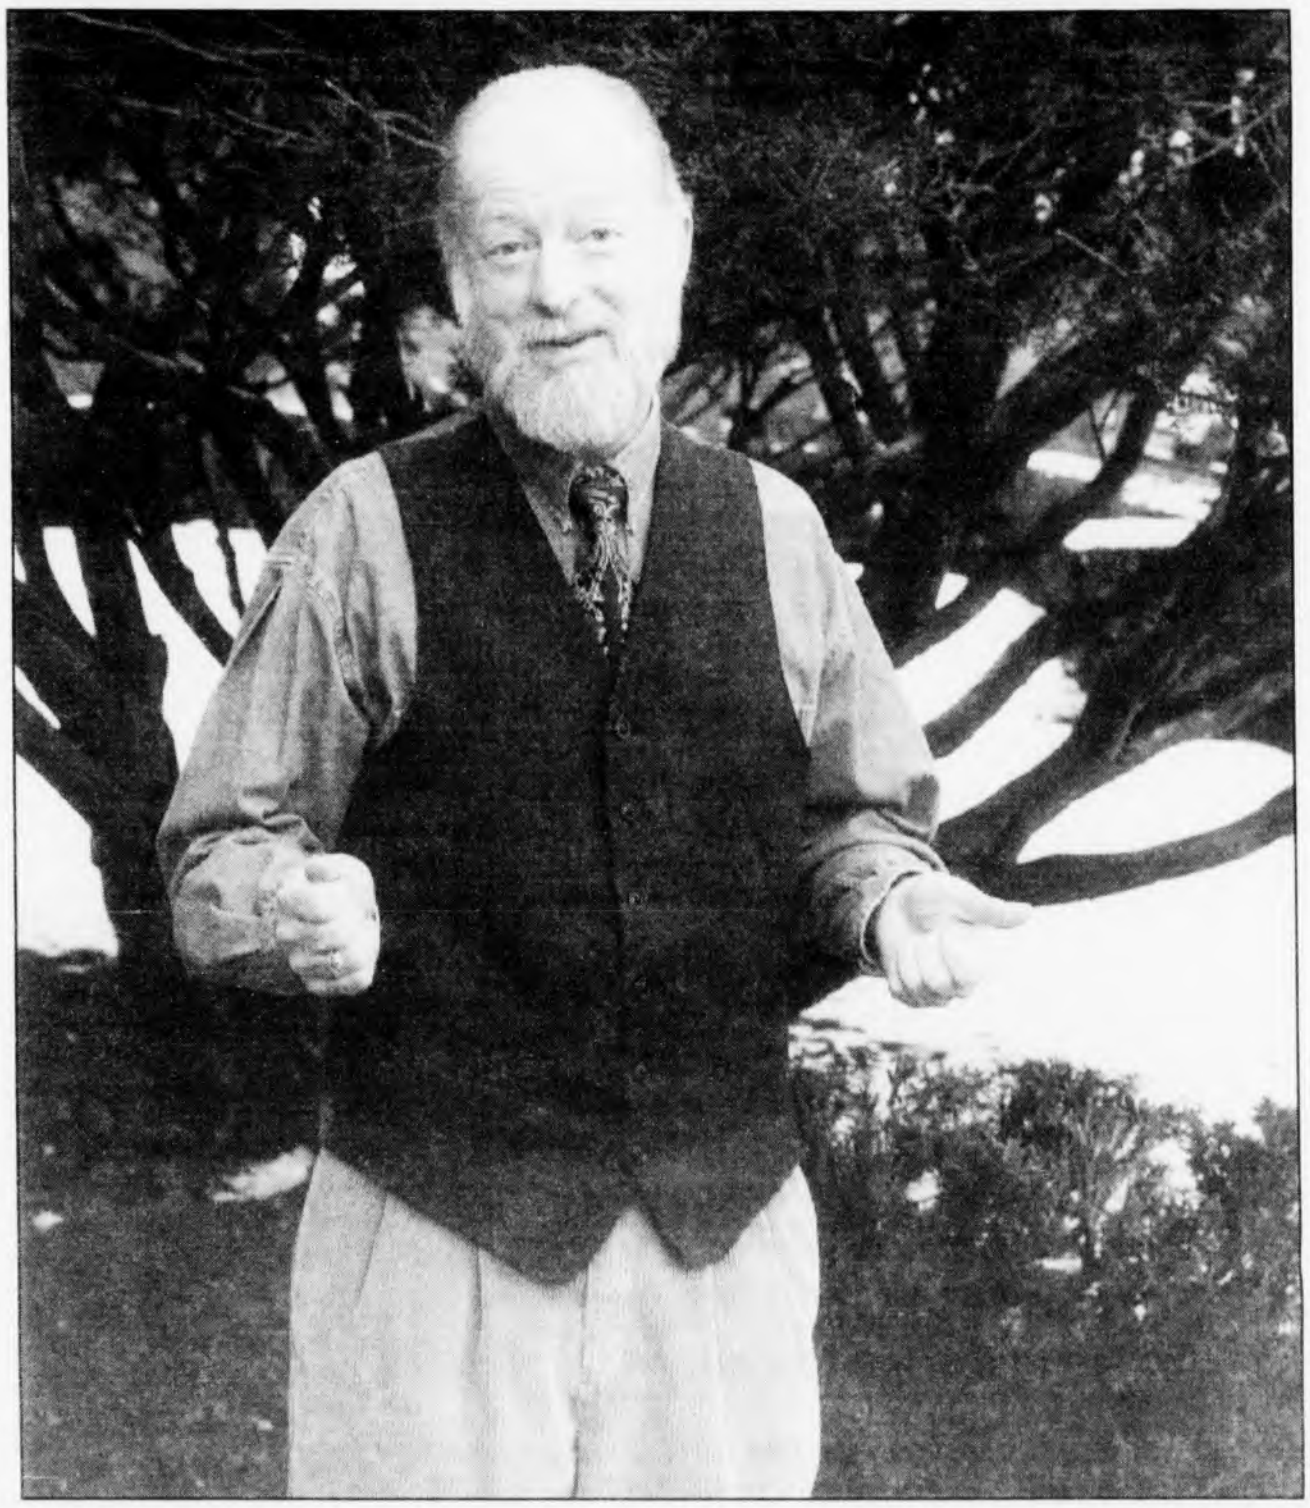
It's been said many times that Shakespeare is a better playwright when the lines he penned are spoken by a British actor.

But Ron Emmons doesn't see the American actor's occasional struggles with the bard as a question of birthright or mother tongue. It's more a question of training and opportunity, he said.

"I don't look at it as a national difference," he said. "Theater is better in England because people have more opportunities to do theater there. It's in the national curriculum."

While theater is taught in every British high school, in contrast, there is no theater course at Cohasset High.

"No theater course here. Yet," Emmons said emphatically, apparently a bit reluctant to give up the idea after 36 years on the Cohasset High faculty, he might someday start such a program, despite the obstacles now posed by state mandated curriculum. The teacher said he has little doubt such steps would at least begin to bridge the gap between the skills of American and British thespians.



Cohasset High drama coach Ron Emmons took time out from "Godspell" rehearsals recently to talk about a somewhat different subject— namely, his views on the local theater scene and how regional American theater compares to its British counterpart. After a year spent as an exchange teacher in an Essex town called Southend on Sea, the Cohasset High teacher has formed some opinions about the difference training and opportunity has made in the craftsmanship of actors on the English stage. Ultimately, he said, his year abroad might inspire him to start a summer stock company in Cohasset.

"Given the size of the country, there are an amazing number of regional theaters in England," he said. "Yes, we've got the ART."

But overall, he said, there are fewer chances for American actors to work on the craft and a discouraging tendency to not type cast actors but limit the range of their roles.

Emmons, who grew up in New Jersey within a ride of the Great White Way, said the New York emphasis on sure-fire revivals and dependence on newspaper theater reviews had resulted in a net loss for the theater.

"You can't compare London and New York anymore in terms of theater. There is not a lot of real theater going on in New York anymore."

Teacher Ron Emmons, drama coach at Cohasset High.

Emmons deepened his respect for the English sock and buskin during the last school year when he taught in England as a Fullbright Exchange teacher, he said. Living less than an hour away from London in the village of White Notley, Emmons took in as much theater as he could manage, sampling productions of the Royal Shakespeare Company about once a week, as well as performances at the National Theater. The good thing about queuing up for the half-price seats in London, he said, was the "cheap seats" tended to be the front row seats.

"It gives the opportunity to watch the craft as well as the play," he said, citing a particularly wonderful performance by Lynn Redgrave in "Shakespeare from my Father." His only disappointment — a production of Edward Albee's "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf" — surprisingly one that starred one of his favorite actresses Diana Rigg.

"It might just have been a bad night," Emmons said, allowing Rigg is a brilliant actress, particularly of Shakespeare.

Cohasset/English joint production possible

Now that he's back in Cohasset, Ron Emmons has a number of plans. This spring, he plans a new April trip to England with five students who will probably visit his former English school and perform some speeches from a play "Through Our Eyes." Emmons said the Cohasset teens would be working on the speeches, with perhaps an eye to another joint production in England in April. The monologues and small scenes were written over the last two years by students at both Cohasset High and at the Southend School, and a shortened version of the play will be entered in the state drama festival in Massachusetts this year, though Emmons has his doubts about competitive theater.

"The kids want to do it," he said.

As for "Through Our Eyes," Emmons said the play was rich with pieces he feels very proud about. They were written in kind of a workshop with two ground rules. The stories had to be told through the teenager's eyes, with no adult viewpoint characters. The second requirement was a bit more stylistic.

"Nothing whiny," he said was the dictum.

Emmons, who directed his first high school play back in 1961, said productions written by teens tend to deal with the theme that life is overwhelming. While this script deals with powerful subjects such as AIDS and suicide, the writing is kept imaginative.

""We'd talk about the possibilities of things that might be dramatic," he said. After the students got a cut on the script, the group would read the lines and critique them. For instance, the suicide piece was developed in workshop and told from the point of view of people left behind, such as a girl friend, a best friend and a brother, since all had to be teenagers.

"All three of them work brilliantly," Emmons said. "But one, in particular, just stops me."

'Godspell' is back for another encore

(Editor's note: drama coach Ron Emmons provided the Mariner with the following press release on the upcoming production of 'Godspell.')

It's music, laughter, and tears happen only once every four years, and they will happen next Feb. 5, 6, and 7 at Cohasset High School. "Godspell" will again be presented.

Director Ron Emmons attempts to give members of the drama workshop an opportunity to perform in this, the group's most popular production, once during their high school theatre career, so approximately every four years Cohasset audiences are given the opportunity to enjoy this humorous, melodic and touching musical. "The show lends itself to so many different production styles that it is the only play that I can direct over and over again. The play will always be nearest to my heart. I've lived with this show in my head and heart for more than two decades," he says. "That's a bit frightening in terms of the passage of time, but it says something about the staying quality of the work. Every time I do the show it is different, and yet we always have the constant of the great music.

"There are two reasons why this seemed to be the year to present Godspell again; the first is the amazingly talented musicians in this year's senior class, and the second is the availability of a brilliant choreographer, Margaret Barlow, who loves the show as much as I do," Emmons said.

"Margaret was in my first production of 'Godspell' in 1977. It's always fulfilling to see graduates of the Cohasset drama program find success in the arts either as a career or as an avocation. Past cast members of Cohasset Godspell productions have gone on to find success teaching drama and literature at Cornell and Providence, singing and dancing in musical theatre in New York City, performing popular music in New York and London, being featured on network television, doing comedy and acting professionally in Boston, writing and appearing daily on one of Boston's most popular morning radio shows, acting in films, and so on.

"However, it is especially gratifying when one of our former cast members comes home to make our own productions better. Margaret Barlow has done that with Godspell' '98. Audiences are going to be astounded by her choreography in this production," Emmons adds.

Featured in this year's "Godspell" are three seniors — Lindy Holway, Ali Kinchla and Kelly Tufts; four juniors — Alexandra D'Urso, Meredith O'Hayre (who appeared in the 1994 production while only in eighth grade), Jim O'Sullivan and Steve Reynolds; three sophomores — Jen Chas-

Lamberts Lane mothers lobby for school bus stop

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

A group of Lamberts Lane mothers tried to enlist the school board recently in their campaign to get a school bus stop on their street. Dorian Brady, the group's spokeswoman, painted an ominous picture as she recited tales of kindergarten children trudging on a narrow road without sidewalks for almost a mile, sometimes through snow, sometimes in darkness and twilight, past woods where coyotes have been spotted. As Brady itemized all the reasons why the parents need better bus service, she pointed to a display in black magic marker scrawl covering three large white poster boards.

"It is unsafe for children to be walking there," Brady said.

But the school board held off on a commitment to grant the mothers' wishes since state law does not mandate school bus service on private ways, according to schools superintendent Stephen Hart who earlier turned down the women's request.

Hart has maintained the narrow dead-end road is dangerous for a school bus, and furthermore, said there is no place to turn the vehicle around safely.

The superintendent rode a school bus down Lamberts Lane Monday.

"I did take a ride down there with one of the other bus drivers," Hart said opting to keep his conclusions private until he has an opportunity to confer with the school committee.

While Hart agreed to take a fresh look at the Lamberts Lane question, the mothers won the support of school board member Joseph McElroy. Dismissing worries the board would be setting a precedent that would ultimately force it to service all the town's other private ways, McElroy said he was convinced Lamberts Lane posed a more dangerous walk for children than any other street in Cohasset. He favored making an exception to the school department's bus policy, he said.

McElroy also favored taking a look at the service private bus companies could provide.

The school board agreed to study the benefits and the potential downside, should they turn the school bus operation over to a private company.

Bus vandalism

Issues about the school buses have been an ongoing question for the school board. But Thursday there was special urgency, due to the vandalism the previous night that caused about $4,000 in damages to buses parked at the high school and at the town garage. Police said they were investigating the incident but reported no progress by Wednesday.

tain, Grace Gardner and Jessica Zerendow; and three freshmen — Morgan Hurley, Julia Lovallo and Ashley Unger.

Musicians for this production of "Godspell" are Katie Buckley and Gary Ritts on keyboards, Liz Hassan on bass, Dan Morse and Bill Kearney on guitars, and Barry Tufts on drums. Other cast members will lend a hand to the musicians; Grace Gardner will be on piano for the rollicking "Turn Back, Oh Man," and Ashley Unger will play flute on "All Good Gifts."

"Again I'm very thankful to Gary Ritts for his time and support," Emmons says. "In addition, I should not fail to point out the work done on the musical end of "Godspell" by two seniors — Ali Kinchla, who did the vocal direction, and Katie Buckley, who did the instrumental direction. They have accepted and succeeded in dealing with one of the most difficult of challenges — directing their peers. Finally, I want to acknowledge the creative costumes designed by Cindi Fletcher, who came to a rehearsal with my choreographer and asked if she could help."

All seats for this production are reserved and may be purchased at the main office of Cohasset High School or from any cast member. In advance tickets are only $7, but door price will be $10.

"I wish we could do the show for less, but because of its continuing popularity, royalty charges continue to rise. We are a self-sustaining activity and have to at least break even to be able to afford the next show," Emmons says. "We also wanted to offer some support to the outstanding Appalachia Service Project, a program that sends about 80 young people from Cohasset under the direction of this production's musical advisor and keyboard player, Gary Ritts, to help with living conditions for the people of Appalachia. I have been amazed by the effect that participation in the program has on our students. The cast has decided that all profits from the Friday night performance should go to help this program."

Audiences are requested to be aware of performance times; because of the nature of this show, latecomers will miss the first two songs in the show. On Thursday (Feb. 5) and Friday (Feb. 6), performances of "Godspell" will begin at 8 p.m. to allow commuters time to negotiate the journey from Boston. Saturday's show time on Feb. 7 will be 7 p.m. to encourage parents to bring their children to enjoy the fun and beauty of "Godspell."

Zoning board rejects DPW sign — again

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Give DPW officials and Building Inspector Bob Egan credit for being persistent. Egan re-submitted a plan last month to place a larger than allowed sign on the new DPW garage after the zoning board rejected it a month earlier.

But the zoning board has rejected the sign once again because it does not meet the criteria for a variance.

But the DPW is not about to give up now. Selectmen are sponsoring an article for the annual town meeting that would grant the town an exception from the bylaws and allow municipal signs in residential zones.

"The DPW sign was rejected again because they simply didn't meet the criteria for a variance, and it's our job to apply the facts of the law," said zoning board Chairman Mark DeGiacomo.

And the facts of the law are simple. The sign is meant to go over the front entrance of the new town garage, which is located in a residential zone. There is a six-square-foot restriction on all signs located in residential zones.

DPW officials have been trying to get approval from the zoning board to install a 30-square-foot sign over the main entrance.

The zoning board rejected the sign last November, ruling it would violate the town's bylaws.

Last November, zoning board members ruled that the size of the building and its proximity to the transfer facility left no question as to the garage's purpose. The building is also visible from both directions on Cedar Street.

In its original ruling, the zoning board said a smaller sign would serve the same function just as effectively as a larger sign.

Applicants must usually wait two years to re-submit a plan that the zoning board has rejected, but the planning board gave the DPW permission to submit the plan again.

Egan re-submitted the sign proposal in December.

The front of the garage contains several doors and truck bays. DPW officials want a large, noticeable sign so residents know which door is for public use.

The DPW sign, which has already been purchased, is a hand-carved, 12-by-three foot sign for the front of the garage.

The planning board and the design review board have supported the proposal for the sign. Selectmen Merle Brown spoke in favor of the sign at the hearing.

DeGiacomo said it is very difficult to obtain any kind of variance unless all criteria contained in the bylaws are met.

"We suggested that the board of selectmen amend the bylaw to permit this type of sign," DeGiacomo said. "Merle Brown was at the hearing and he understood that our hands are tied by the language in the bylaw. The best remedy would be to change that language."

Firm hired for school chief search

A consultant will help the school board in its search for a new schools superintendent to replace Stephen Hart who is stepping down at the end of the school year. Thursday, the school committee voted to hire an adviser from the Massachusetts Association of School Committees, the low bidder of the three consulting services which presented bids. MASC quoted a $5,500 estimate that did not include advertising and other incidental expenses.

The decision to bring on the consultant was not made without a debate. School board member Joseph McElroy suggested the board could handle the hiring on its own. But board member Ralph Kidder, also the head of the search sub-committee, disagreed.

"I don't know of any company in the world that would hire a $100,000 employee without a search firm," Kidder said.

Reaction mixed on principal's decision

about the principal's fairness when he learned only William lost his berth on the team. The six others, also arrested with William Dec. 29, did not receive any punishment at school, and Good questioned if his son was being punished for telling the truth.

The school board vowed to look into the question about the rules and referred the issue to the school council.

"This seems to me to fly in the face of common sense," said school board member Ralph Kidder. "The bottom line may be I'm questioning Curt's decision."

The principal stood by his decision.

"Athletes are held to a higher standard," Collins said, because they represent the school in high-profile events and also because of rules established by the state school athletics association, the Massachusetts Interscholastic Athletic Association. The rules are in play during the athlete's entire season, regardless of school vacations.

Collins was backed up Monday by an official at the state school athletics association, Virginia Anderson, the associate executive director of the Massachusetts Interscholastic Athletics Association.

> "Athletes are held to a higher standard,"
> CURTIS COLLINS, PRINCIPAL

Anderson also said she had not been made aware the case was about students carrying beer when she passed judgment on the principal's decision.

"At the time, I did not know what it was," Anderson said, since the MIAA's rule also deals with tobacco and drugs. "As we walked through the procedures, I concluded the principal went by the book."

But the MIAA executive also said the Cohasset school board could certainly toughen the MIAA rules and make the sanctions for student athletes consistent with local police enforcement. "The MIAA rules are always the minimum. The local community can go to a higher standard," Anderson said, citing higher academic eligibility requirements imposed by some school districts as well as "guilt by association" rules to govern conduct.

Moreover, the MIAA revises its rules every two years, according to Anderson, and parent and school committee members can propose changes.

"We're actually in that cycle now where rules changes are being proposed," the official said but doubted it would be practical for the state organization, which governs 347 public and private schools, to go to strict policies.

"Zero tolerance is wonderful," Anderson said but noted it might not be possible to enforce such a rule in a city like Boston.

Monday, Collins said he would not favor a zero tolerance rule at school though he acknowledged the school council would review the student handbook in the spring and a change in the rules might not be out of the question.

"There'll be some discussion in this area," Collins predicted but still maintained the MIAA has a fair rule.

"I think the rules—the MIAA policy, as is— frankly causes far fewer problems than zero tolerance would cause. The intent of the MIAA philosophy is—if the school errs, it should err on the student's side," Collins said.

The principal also stressed the fact he suspended William for the season, not because of the police arrest but because the student athlete admitted he broke the association's "chemical health" rule during the principal's inquiry.

Two other student athletes, a juvenile and a 17-year-old, did not admit guilt during the school investigation and were allowed to stay on the wrestling team. (The three other Cohasset High students, not athletes, were not questioned by school officials about their role in the incident, and Collins said there was no rule in the student handbook that would have allowed him to discipline them since they were not carrying the beer at a school event or during a school day.)

"We can only apply rules to students if the rules are contained in the handbook," he said.

Collins said he was not comfortable discussing the specifics of the Dec. 29 episode but nonetheless found reason to doubt the other two athletes should be punished. Moreover, he was confident the driver of the car did not break the MIAA rule.

"One kid with beer jumped in his car. The MIAA rule is not intended to be guilt by association,," the principal said, even though under "the constructive possession" law used by police, the driver was also taken into custody.

Collins was not present at the school board meeting and was unhappy no one there was able to explain the issues. He also said the fact a community enforced a zero tolerance law did not mean the principal would not have to follow the MIAA rule and conduct his own investigation.

"Someone there should have been able to explain the MIAA rule," Collins said. "The rule is very clear."

The principal said the student athlete must be fully aware of the character of the prohibited substance before he can be found in violation of the MIAA rule.

Collins said the MIAA penalty only calls for a two-week or two-event suspension, but Good will miss the rest of the hockey season due to a Cohasset High rule which dates back some 25 years, according to the athletics director.

BEST WISHES, HAROLD!

Let's begin by saying a big HELLO to Harold Litchfield — everyone knows that Harold is the head of the highway department, but did you know that he recently had to undergo knee surgery? Well, he is at home now, and we certainly hope that he is back at work very soon, before another big storm hits! Seriously, Harold, get well soon!

GET WELL SOON

While we are on the subject of surgery, that is what Susan Piepenbrink underwent a while ago. We are happy to report that she is at home recovering this week, and should be up and around in no time! Here's hoping it is sooner than you think, Susan!

BELATED BIRTHDAY GREETINGS

Happy belated birthday greetings go to Julie Litchfield this week! Julie's family and friends surprised her with a 30th birthday party last week — her sister Peg, niece Tricia and friend Steve Borland planned the whole evening to honor her and the "big event." We are glad that your birthday was such a great one, you are a wonderful gal who deserves the best!

BYE TO ZINNIA'S

By now you only have a couple of days left to say good bye to Lynn — "Zinnia's" Lynn McVay that is! Lynn was the owner, cook, everything there, and so many loved to go — whether you wanted a "High Tea," a good bowl of turkey soup, a yummy dinner or just a good chat, that was the place to go and Lynn was the one to see. We will all miss you and Zinnia's Lynn, and wish you nothing but great things as you go on with the next step in your career and your life. One thing is for sure, we'll be seeing you "around town!"

LEADERSHIP AWARD

Jane Flaherty has been nominated to compete in the national Principal's Leadership Award Scholarship Program, sponsored by the National Association of Secondary School Principals, and we commend her!

GEOGRAPHY BEE

Mark Chapman, a student at the Cohasset Middle School, won the school-level competition of the National Geography Bee. Watch for his name in the future, it is sure to appear again soon!

HAM & BEAN SUPPER

Before we forget, you don't have to cook this Saturday because you can attend the ham and bean supper at the Beechwood Congregational Church! It starts at 6:30 p.m., is at the church, and a good meal is guaranteed. Enjoy!

NEWS FROM THE FONES

Heard from Sue and Ken Fone last week, they were without power for 11 days after that dreadful ice storm hit Maine! They were fortunate enough to have a generator, but told of all of those who didn't — the whole town of Denmark emptied their pantries to help the elderly, the people without generators and the linemen who came from all over the country to help restore service. You can only imagine how cold everyone was, much less the men who came from the South to help — we should never complain about a little snow, right? Glad to hear that everything is getting back to normal, folks! Oh, did you say you were going to Florida for the next couple of months?

LIBRARY EXHIBIT

Hope that you have been to the Paul Pratt Library to see the works of Nancy Connolly — Nancy is an award-winning artist and her exhibit includes a selection of her collages and monoprints. This is sponsored by the Friends of the Library, and really is quite an exhibit! It will continue through March 13, so you have time to see all of the Cohasset artist's works. By the way, all of the art work is for sale.

RAVES FOR 'ANNIE!'

The reviews are in, and everyone raved about the Cohasset Plays by the Sea production of "Annie" last weekend. Hopefully enough money was raised to fulfill the dreams of the teen center being moved to the old town garage — it is such a good idea to utilize that building for such a worthy cause. See what you can do to help the kiddos make their dream come true!

SUPER BOWL STAR

As this is being written, the Super Bowl is only a few days away. By now, many listened to the voice of Cohasset's own Ron Hobson as he reported the before-game stats, the players' stats, the whole picture was presented by him. We are so lucky to have a man of his knowledge and writer's renown in our own town. Did you know that his knowledge is respected all over the states? His columns are read by young and old, near and far, by spectators, players, coaches ... as you watched the Super Bowl, I hope you thought about the Super Man in our midst. COHASSET MARINER

EDITORIALS & OPINIONS

Wilson and Antoine

Joseph Wilson and Joseph Antoine were young men in their 20s when they lost their lives as the first Minot's Light toppled in a gale nearly 150 years ago.

But thanks to Cohasset's own Herb Jason, the men haven't been forgotten. Mr. Jason has designed a memorial for Government Island which will include a brick compass rose with a black granite stone inscribed with a picture of the first lighthouse and the story of what happened that fateful night.

Selectmen liked what they saw when Mr. Jason and a group of enthusiastic friends presented their proposal recently.

Selectmen agreed the memorial would be a nice addition to Government Island and help educate townspeople and visitors about an important part of the town's history.

That approval came over the objections of the Government Island Study Committee and a majority of the Historical Commission which thought a plaque would be more subtle and fitting.

We don't doubt for a moment the dedication the GISC and Historical Commission and know they recommended what they think is best for the popular site which includes the Minot Light Replica.

But we agree with selectmen that Mr. Jason's design is attractive and exciting and would be a nice addition to the island.

The Wilson/Antoine Memorial committee consists of a group of volunteers who will be working diligently in the months ahead to solicit grants and donations for the project which is estimated to cost about $38,000.

A special display is featured at the Hingham Institution of Savings on Elm Street. If you're in the neighborhood, stop by and see it.

Donations may be sent to the Wilson/Antoine Memorial Fund, in care of the Hingham Institution for Savings.

Computer glitches

We apologize to our readers for the strange symbols that have appeared in several stories over the past few weeks. The symbols usually replace quotation marks and apostrophes and can make the text difficult to read. What's happened is that reporters at the Mariner are writing on "PCs" while the paper is being laid out on MacIntosh computers. Sometimes in the translation, those funny symbols get through. We are addressing the situation and think we have a solution. We thank you for your patience.

Library planning process clarified

To the Editor:

In response to the discussion of the possible use of the Joseph Osgood School by the library, we would like to clarify the long range planning project that the library trustees have begun, and the steps which must precede any serious consideration of this possibility.

Two major issues at the library are basic to the current long-range planning project. The first relates to the need for more computer work stations for public use and the second to the requirements of the American Disabilities Act. Since significant construction costs may be associated with the solution to these problems, the trustees are proceeding in the manner required to apply for state funding assistance.

Computer work stations. For several years Cohasset's trustees and library staff have been able to juggle public space in the library to provide room for increasing numbers of computer terminals, without relinquishing any space for books and magazines. These eight terminals are used for circulation, access to the Old Colony Library network catalog, information stored on CDROMs, and an Internet connection.

We know that more computer equipment is going to be needed, but it is not at all clear how this should best be done, if indeed it is even possible without sacrificing parts of our book collection. It is possible that an architect/space planner can provide alternative solutions for the library.

American Disabilities Act. The second space problem that needs attention is compliance with the American Disabilities Act (ADA). With only cursory knowledge of the complex requirements of the act, it is obvious that it will be very difficult to conform to it in the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, without significant structural renovations. What is possible? And how much would it cost?

State construction funds. The Massachusetts Board of Library Commissioners administers state funds to help cities and towns with library construction costs, but they have established a detailed, sequential, time-consuming process for applicant libraries to follow in order to be eligible for funds. The application process ensures that the applicant library has soundly analyzed its problems and identified the best solution. Step 1 of this process is a "Mission Statement," which the trustees have completed.

Step 2 is a "Long Range Plan for Library Services." As of this date, we have funds and are in the process of hiring a library consultant to work with us to create a long-range library services plan. Our hope is that this plan will be completed by June of this year. Having established which library services the Cohasset library wants to provide over time, the trustees would ordinarily then proceed directly to Step 3 of the state mandated process, a "Needs Assessment" or a Space Planning Study. This study would be made by an architect/space planner and would address the space needed to provide the library services agreed upon, and the ability of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library to house these services and comply with the ADA requirements. It could also be designed to include evaluation of Joseph Osgood as a possible library site.

Cohasset, however, is about to undertake a facilities study of all town-owned buildings. Its conclusions will provide helpful information regarding the ADA requirements for the library building, which will be valuable not only for the design of the space planning study, but will be analysis which does not need to be repeated in the space plan.

While the trustees have voted to explore the potential of using part of the Osgood School for Cohasset's Library, it will be impossible to establish the advantages and disadvantages of such a move until a space planning study has been designed and completed. It is likely that the trustees will seek funds for such a study at the fall 1998 town meeting.

Library Trustees

Dramatic club praised

To the Editor:

The Cohasset Dramatic Club is one worthy group. I had the privilege of working with them in their last presentation. I knew no one, and was on my own. They took me in and treated me royally and even better, as an old time friend. I will never forget them and their kindnesses.

Ask The School Committe

The private school question is addressed

The Cohasset School Committee periodically receives questions from parents and other community members about the number of Cohasset students leaving the system for "private" schools. Specifically, we are asking the following: How many students leave, and what are their reasons for leaving? Because these questions are important for evaluative purposes from both a School Committee and a community standpoint, we thought it would be helpful and informative to address this issue at this time.

In terms of numbers, Cohasset has historically seen approximately eight percent of its students and their families make "other than public" choices for their educational needs. This percentage includes private schools, parochial schools and charter schools. The most recent information (1996/1997) from the Massachusetts Department of Education website, indicates that Cohasset is about average for the South Shore, and below average for the state (state average is 10.8 percent).

Anecdotally, we would note that private school attendance typically increases in cities and towns with higher socioeconomic profiles. For example, the towns of Weston and Wellesley show private school attendance rates of 14.5 percent and 19.5 percent respectively. In addition, the presence of private, parochial or charter schools within or proximal to a community is also a factor affecting private school attendance rates.

If we look specifically at movement in Cohasset from grade 8 to grade 9, a time that many school systems acknowledge is the time of greatest migration, we find that these numbers remain relatively consistent on average. From 1989 through 1997, the percentages of Cohasset students going from grade 8 to grade 9 making the switch to private schools has fluctuated from 2.7 to 14 percent (average over this time span = 8 percent). In terms of actual numbers, these percentages represent between 2 and 14 students choosing private schools in any given year over that time span.

Town	Percent students to private schools
Hingham	12.2 percent
Cohasset	8.4 percent
Duxbury	7.8 percent
Hanover	7.6 percent
Norwell	5.6 percent
Scituate	4.8 percent

The reasons that families make these choices are many and varied and reflect various social and economic factors. Because the School Committee felt that knowledge of the reasons for choosing non-public over public schools might be of value to us in evaluating our program, we distributed a survey in September of 1995. That survey asked parents to identify the factors that were most important in their selection of another educational program. The two most important factors indicated at that time were "high expectations and/or standards" and "accelerated and/or individualized courses." Other factors cited included family history of private school attendance, social/peer group issues, and religious affiliation. We have used this survey information in a variety of ways. This year, for example, one of the School Committee's goals involves exploring ways to individualize for all students. Individualization allows us to set high expectations and maximize potential for each student.

While the data presented in this article gives us a cursory idea of trends in this area, a more detailed analysis would be helpful. The Deer Hill School Council is in the process of compiling that information. They will be taking a more in depth look at historical trends over the past 15 years and are hoping to conduct further exit surveys in the future. The School Committee looks forward to working with the Council on this, hearing their report and utilizing its contents to continually develop and improve the Cohasset Public Schools.

Informative new column debuts

As members of the community and the town's Drug and Alcohol Committee, we are beginning a monthly column on health and safety issues regarding drugs and alcohol. This is part of our charge from the town to communicate efforts at changing patterns of drug and alcohol abuse. The emphasis is on change and safety. We have taken great efforts to build trust among various town groups, all of whom have the best interests of their constituencies at heart. Our aim is to build a safer, healthier community.

Patterns of drug and alcohol abuse affect productivity in the workplace, quality of home life, the safety of young people and as we have seen in recent studies, the likelihood of future addiction. In addition to individual and institutional (families, schools, workplaces) accountability, a change in cultural values is also needed. We hope that this monthly column will be just one more voice countering images from many sectors (entertainment, advertising) that may promote the excessive or unhealthy use of drugs and alcohol. Readers can expect to see columns on parenting questions, current legal issues, family relationships, abuse of controlled substances such as steroids, in addition to those that are more familiar, informative pieces on programs such as CASA: Cohasset Against Substance Abuse — A Network For Parents and more.

In addition to promoting the CASA program that seeks to prevent illegal use of drugs and alcohol in homes and at parties and disseminate accurate information, the committee worked with the P.S.O. to achieve a safe Halloween last fall. A drunk driver simulator was brought to town in October to help educate young people about the dangers of drinking and driving. The excellent middle school program for seventh-graders, called "Project Safeguard," received the committee's support and assistance. The committee has called together various town groups to meet on issues of drugs and alcohol in order to foster communication, to build trust and to work cooperatively. The committee has taken an active role in supporting safe alternatives for teenage fun, raising money by collecting Christmas trees and supporting a dinner fund-raiser for the renovation of the old public works garage as a place for dances. We have also played a part in consolidating youth services under the town recreation department. In the future, one evening a week, we hope to make available confidential telephone access to a drug and alcoholism counselor for information, answers to questions, and where to go for help. On June 7, the committee plans to sponsor a car show to benefit drug and alcohol education, to emphasize again safe driving, and as just one more way to communicate our message of a healthy Cohasset.

Any citizen concerns regarding drug and alcohol questions may be forwarded to the Drug and Alcohol Committee at the Cohasset Town Hall. The committee meets on the second Wednesday of each month at 7:30 p.m. The purpose of the Drug and Alcohol Committee is to bring about a new order of consciousness concerning the use and abuse of chemical substance in the community. Its principle tenets include the following: to educate the community about physical, emotional and spiritual consequences of substance abuse; to expand awareness of the impact of such use on the individual, the family and the community; to enlist the community's active participation and cooperation in developing new attitudes toward substance abuse.

Sale of Osgood urged

Board of Selectmen:

At the 1996 Town Meeting, when the new grammar school project was discussed and approved, I believe there was clear public sentiment to sell the Joseph Osgood School to a private party to help defray the cost of the new school. Also, private ownership of the Osgood building would generate additional tax revenue for the town year after year.

Apparently, the sale of Osgood has been forgotten in light of the other proposals (library, elderly housing) which are being brought forward. However meritorious these new proposals are, they do not address the original objective of providing Cohasset a much-needed new grammar school at the lowest cost, which the sale of Osgood would obviously contribute to.

As various proposals are evaluated for the disposition of the Osgood School, I feel its sale must be given top priority in light of the implicit commitment given to the community at the Town Meeting.

Let's not have another Hagerty property fiasco.

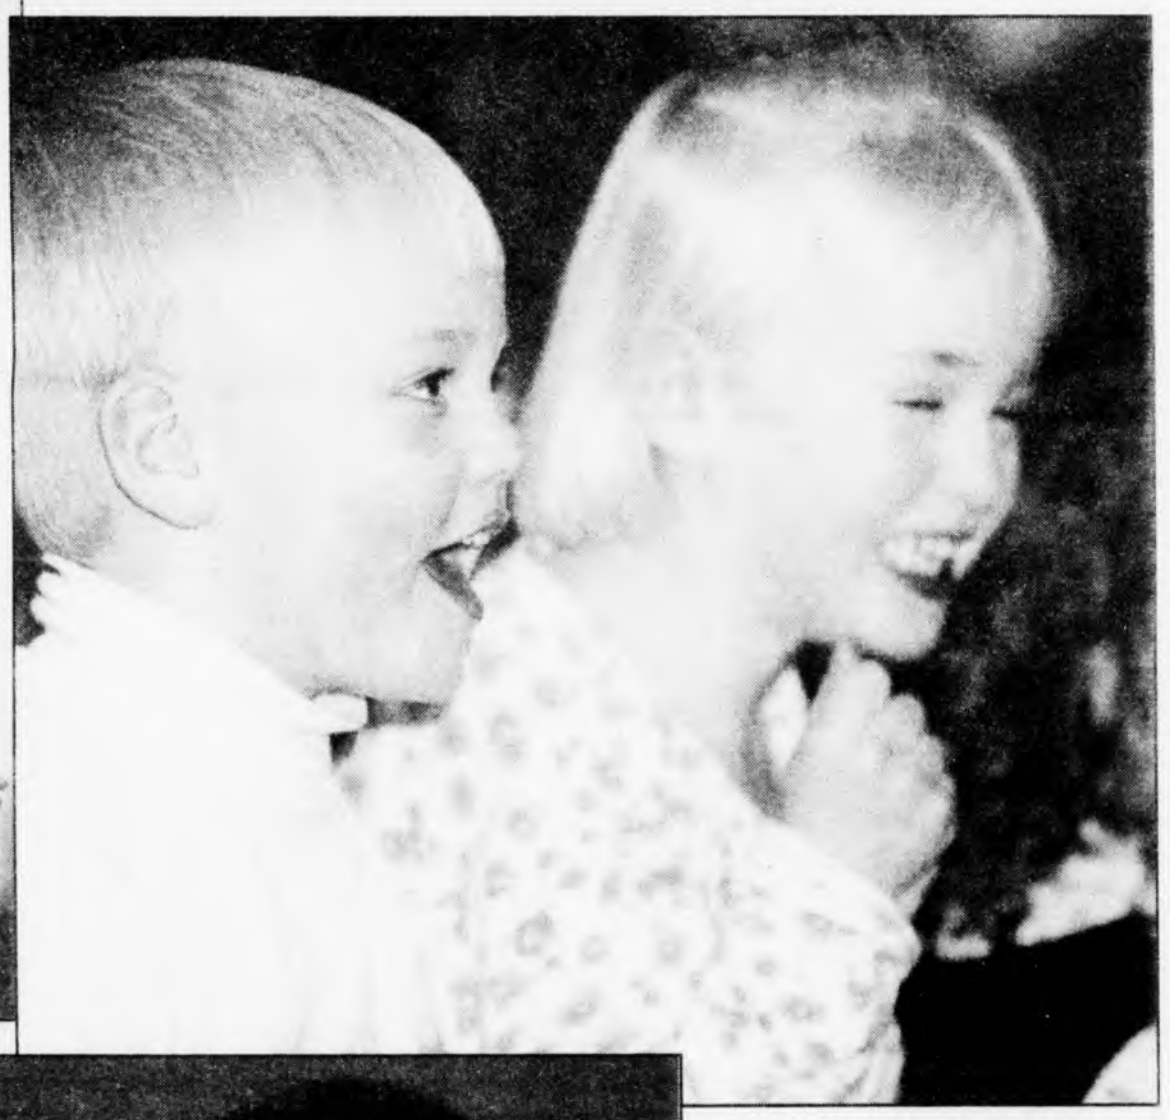
Garrett Bradley releases campaign finance report

Assistant District Attorney Garrett Bradley, candidate for State Representative in the Third Plymouth District, released his campaign finance report this week. The Bradley Committee raised $26,426.96 in the last half of 1997, outdistancing both of the other candidates in the field. Bradley attributes his fundraising success to hard work from a number of dedicated volunteers in the district and widespread support for his campaign for State Representative. His fundraising committee has been able to raise more than $26,000 before his official campaign kick-off party, which will take place March 7.

"The financial contributions I have received so far are a good indication of the support for my candidacy," Bradley said. "My committee has been able to raise a significant amount of money so that I can talk to the people of the district about the issues I care deeply about — providing a quality education for our children, protecting the hard-working taxpayers in our district, and preventing crime in our neighborhoods."



Garrett Bradley and Josh Cutler, who are both democrats running for the Third Plymouth District seat held by state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset, attend a brunch last weekend with democratic candidates for statewide office.

The curse of the Crusaders continues

Grapplers can't break Carver's hold on SSL title

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

For the last seven years running, CHS wrestling has done everything in their power to overtake Carver for South Shore League supremacy only to fall in the end and have to accept a second place finish.

Make that eight years in a row.

Cohasset and Carver got together recently to renew acquaintances and once again the Crusaders come out on top 37-31 in an exciting back and forth affair that had the fans on their feet from beginning to end.

"The place was just filled with students and faculty and they were really into the matches," said coach Torin Sweeney. "The gym was just electric. It was the most exciting meet we've had here in five or six years."

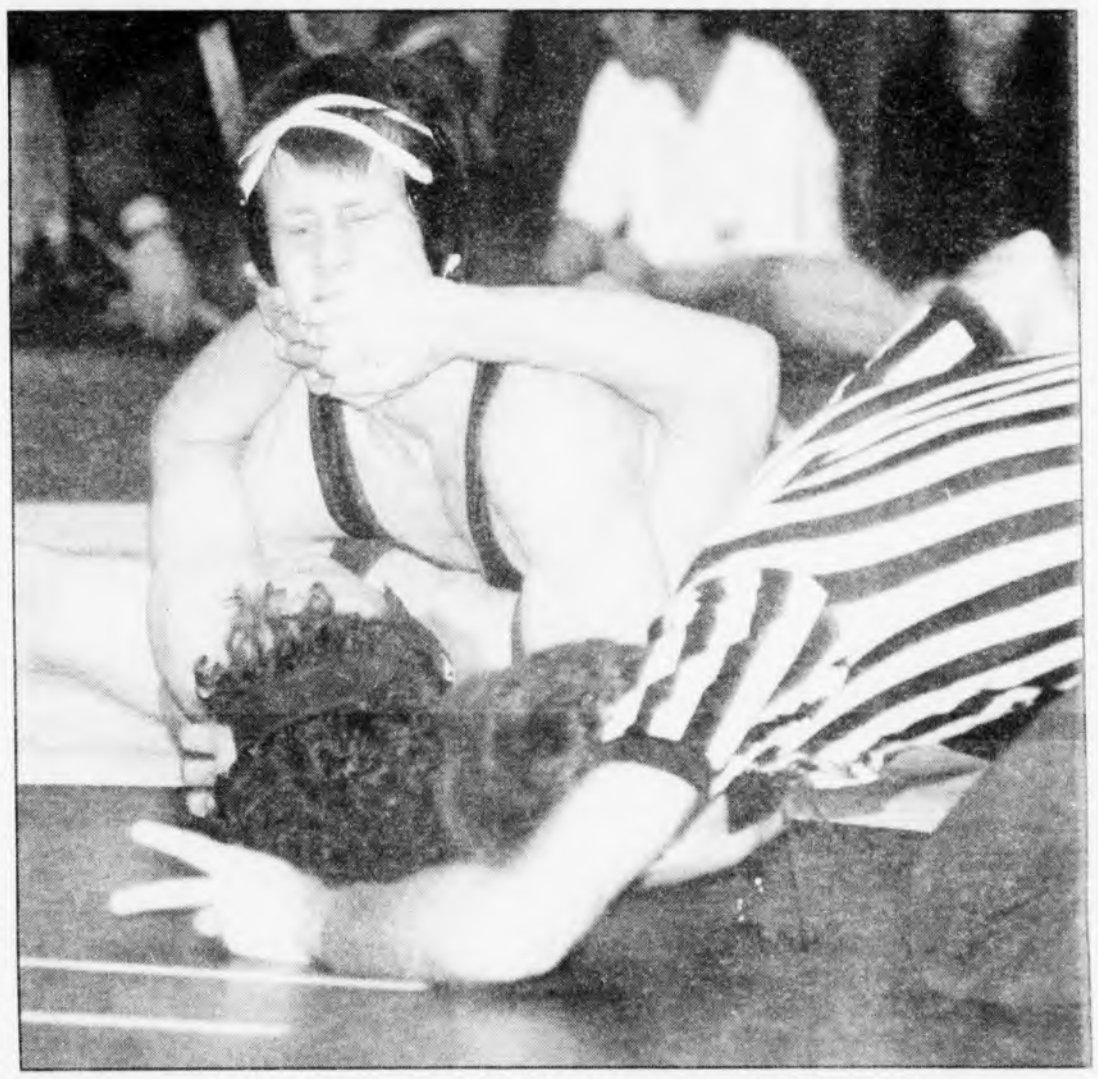
The action on the mats warranted the excitement. Carver jumped out to an early lead and the teams battled back and forth until Cohasset went ahead 24-21 after wins by Mike Rossi and Ben Littauer.

Carver came back with a pin to take the lead back at 27-24, but clutch wins from Justin Golden and Luke Caldwell put the Skippers back in the drivers seat at 31-27.

Those would be the last points for the home team as the Crusaders took a win to tie the match at 31-31 and then won the deciding heavyweight division via forfeit because Carver had nobody to fill the weight class.

"To forfeit a weight class is the absolute worst way to lose a match, especially one for a the league title," said Sweeney. "Unfortunately we just don't have anyone for the heavyweight division. I've tried recruiting kids but nobody seems to want to make the effort. Frankly, I think it's a little embarrassing for the school."

The forfeit was frustrating for the Skippers, but it could not spoil what had been a tremendous team effort.



"Carver was the best match that we've wrestled all year," said Sweeney. "The team really came together and did a great job."

Sweeney was just as proud of his team's performance over the weekend when they hosted nine other squads in their seventh annual Cohasset Invitational Tourney.

The Skippers were gracious hosts, placing a number of grapplers in the finals while taking a second spot behind Marshfield in overall team points.

Also making it to the finals rounds were Chris Pratt (third place at 112 lb.), Dan Littauer (third place at 119 lb.), Liam O'Donnell (third place at 135 lb.), Justin Golden (fourth place in the 160 lb. class), Luke Caldwell (third in the 172 lb. class) and J.P. Laugelle took fourth in the 275 lb. class.

CHS wrestler Luke Caldwell (on top) tries to get Marshfield's Jon Arouca's shoulders on the mat for a pin at the Cohasset Invitational wrestling tourney. The Skippers were not able to defend their team title, falling into second place this year behind Marshfield.

Skippers searching for late season heroics

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

Despite a record which is less impressive when compared to those of the past few years, the Cohasset boys' basketball team has ample reason to hold their heads high.

One thing which is apparent to anyone who has watched the team this year is that this year's edition has heart. With their backs to the wall these last few weeks, the Skippers have come out swinging. Led by senior superstar Paul-Michael Quintin and Jamie DeMichele, Cohasset has begun to mount a late season charge.

With a victory over the East Bridgewater Vikings, a team they lost to earlier in the year, and a tough loss at the hands of the carver Crusaders, Coach Ford's team has played with the pride that stems from being in a class program.

Last Saturday's game against the Vikings was originally scheduled for Friday, but the storm pushed it back. The boys in blue came out sluggishly, playing a subpar first half, but got the job done in the second. DeMichele tossed in his nearly automatic 14 points; freshman future star Daniel Trowers finished with a career high 13; Quintin chipped in 11; and senior point guard Justin tallied 10.

Ford pointed to this balanced scoring attack as vital to the Skipper win. Teams have been keying in on Quintin this year, freeing up his teammates, and forcing Quintin himself to take fewer shots. This strategy has reduced his point total, but probably helped the team develop as a unit.

Despite a loss to Carver Monday, the Skippers played what Ford called "undoubtedly, our best game of the year." Cohasset was hampered by the snowstorm Friday, which eliminated their Saturday practice, allowing them no time to prepare for their opponent.

On their home court, the Crusaders ranked second in the South Shore League, had their hands full with feisty Cohasset, with the visitors even clutching a three-point lead at the half. Ford pointed to Cohasset's hustle as a factor in his squad's half-time edge.

Carver found itself in trouble early in the second half, but big man Tim Hart came off the bench late in the game, leading the home team to a narrow victory.

Quinton hoisted a key shot in the waning seconds and appeared to be fouled, but the violation went uncalled, yet another example of the fact that the Skippers have had a hard time catching

At what price success?

Wrestlers, coaches talk about the issue of cutting weight

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

Wrestlers and their coaches alike will tell you that cutting a couple of pounds before a meet is sometimes is just a part of the game.

Attempting to be at your leanest, strongest and quickest on game day may be a part of what makes the great wrestlers great, but the three recent deaths of amateur wrestlers trying to get down to a target weight through drastic weight reduction in a short period of time has given people in the business some pause to think.

Coming into the weigh-in's for the meets, some wrestlers may be forced to extreme measures such as dehydration or drastic caloric restrictions to get to their goal weight. Saunas, rubber workout suits and even induced vomiting have also been used to do the trick in some circles.

Some local coaches questioned say it's up to them and the wrestlers themselves to not cross that line between proper training for the big match and potentially endangering the physical well being of the athlete.

According to Cohasset wrestling coach Torin Sweeney, a waiver signed at the beginning of each season by the athlete, their parents, the coach, the team doctor as well as the school's athletic director seem to go a long way in defining that line.

The waiver, which has been mandated by the state for all competitors in the sport, sets the level of weight limits at which the wrestler can compete.

"There is a fine balance that both the kids and the adults are working under when it comes to setting a weight to wrestle at," said Sweeney. "Where a kid is wrestling should be as much an issue with all of the adults involved as with the kid, if not more. It's our responsibility to be on top of these things and to make sure nobody is doing anything that is going to hurt them."

At Hingham High, all wrestlers have their body fat level tested by the school trainer before the season starts to determine what weight levels each wrestler can safely compete in. In addition, the coach, the parents, the player and a doctor all sign waiver forms before the season.

Two years ago Hingham won the Division II South Sectional championship. This year the Harbormen are 10-4 and the fourth-ranked team in EMass.

"We've always been safety first as is the case with most high schools around here," said HHS coach and athletic director Bill Barges. "Wrestling is a great sport but if the proper checks and balances aren't in place, that can lead to problems as we've seen in the news lately."

Barges said colleges need to get their act together.

"You can't lose ten pounds in a day, it's not healthy for the body and it leads to poor wrestling," he said. "The colleges need to get their act together on this or the sport is going to have a permanent black eye."

Rockland High School head wrestling coach Ken Leer said the ultimate decision always should be up to the individual wrestler as to at what weight he is most comfortable competing.

"Some wrestlers like to go into competition a little bit below their regular weight, feeling they can come in a little bit leaner and stronger at a lower body fat content. Others are more comfortable wrestling at a level closer to or even over their regular weight," said Leer. "It's not something that you can just push someone into. It's a decision to be left up to the individual."

"It really is a fine line," said Sweeney. "You want to go in there strong in lean, but you've also got to be healthy enough to be able to compete."

As for taking a couple of pounds as the weigh-in comes closer, Leer said that decreasing caloric and fat intake and increased exercise can shave off a needed 2 lb. or 3 lb. in the days before a big match.

However, Leer stressed that trying to take off a great deal of weight in a short period of time is not something that should be done or ever encouraged.

"Trying to take weight off, like seven or 10 pounds in a single day or two, is going to hurt you," he said, adding that such efforts will not only physically harm you but can also cause nausea, lightheadedness, irritability and may also play havoc with your thought process.

"When you're taking that much weight off, you are just draining the fluids right out of your body," said Leer, adding that he doesn't recommend the use of rubber or plastic running suits while exercising, either.

"There is a fine balance that both the kids and the adults are working under when it comes to setting a weight to wrestle at," said Sweeney. "Where a kid is wrestling should be as much an issue with all of the adults involved as with the kid, if not more. It's our responsibility to be on top of these things and to make sure nobody is doing anything that is going to hurt them."

COHASSET WRESTLING COACH TORIN SWEENEY

Overall, Sweeney said that things in wrestling circles have greatly improved since he hit the mats for Cohasset nearly 20 years ago.

"We know so much more about proper training than we did back then," said Sweeney. "There is a lot more information out there now about the right ways to train."

The pressure to "make weight" is not limited to a wrestler of a particular talent or a weight class. It's something that all in the sport struggle with in their own way, including three-time Division III defending state champion Mark Laramee.

Checking in at just a shade under 5'6 and wrestling in the 130 lb. weight class, the Rockland High School senior admits there are days where even he has to really work to get to where he needs to be.

"Naturally, I go up to about 146 lb. in the off-season," said Laramee. "But if I wrestled in that class I don't think I'd be as successful as I have been where I am now. I wouldn't be as strong or as quick as I am at 130 lb."

Added musculature to his frame as well as some growth in height since his freshman year have caused Laramee to move up a weight class each year.

Laramee wrestled as a freshman at 112 lb., as a sophomore at 119 lb. and moved his junior year to 125 lb.

With the natural changes going on in his body as well as he hea[vy] training he was going throu[gh] Laramee said there was no way he could have ever stayed at the lower weights.

"As you grow and get older, you just have to do what your body allows you to do," said Laramee. "There's some pressure because you don't want to disappoint your team or your coaches. You just need to do the best you can."

As for the dangers of cutting weight to reach your mark, Laramee said the three deaths recently surrounding the amateur wrestling community do make you think about what you are doing.

"This is really the first time we've had people die while attempting to cut weight, so that does put something in the back of your mind," said Laramee. "There's a line between training for competion and doing something that is really going to endanger your physical health. You've got to know where that is."

Snow Row contest set for Feb. 28 in Hull

The Snow Row has gained a well-deserved reputation as Hull Lifesaving Museum's signature race. We've had snow squalls and shirt-sleeves, and everything in between on race day, but nothing tempers the excitement of this hard-working winter event or the enthusiasm of the athletes.

The race starts Saturday, Feb. 28, at 11 a.m., with all boats on the beach at the museum's Pemberton Point Boathouse in Hull. Then, at the shot of the starting gun, the competitors race into their boats LeMans style, creating a whirlwind of disorganized havoc ashore and afloat.

The 3-3/4 mile triangular course starts through Hull and Hingham bays, continues around Sheep Island, past the Peddocks Island Day Marker, and back to the beach. The whole event is within view of the Boathouse, so this is a particularly good event for spectators. It is also a rare opportunity to see an amazing array of wooden pulling boats on the beach and in action — peapods, dories, wherries, whitehalls, ocean shells, pilot gigs, captain's gigs and Irish curraghs.

The race has five boat categories, workboats, livery boats, coxed boats, ocean kayaks and ocean shells.

A few notes to all race participants:

- all racers must be members of the USRA or the HLMI Rowing Association
- all boats must carry PFDs, bailers and whistles
- all coxed boats must begin the race bow on the beach and
- the HLMI Race Committee reserves the right to cancel the race or keep individual boats from setting forth due to weather conditions or rower skill level

After watching the excitement of the Snow Row's one-of-a-kind LeMans start, come inside the boathouse to warm up with a cup of hot coffee or cocoa. The Station Museum, one mile down the beach from the boathouse, will be open following the race with free admission for all.

For more information about the Snow Row, call Ed McCabe at 925-5433 or Box 221, Hull, MA 02045.

The Lady Skippers are still in the running for a Pilgrim Conference gymnastics title. That road to the championship, however, became a whole lot tougher thanks to Hanover's 122.5 — 118.5 Monday night win over Cohasset in a packed Hanover Middle School gymnasium.

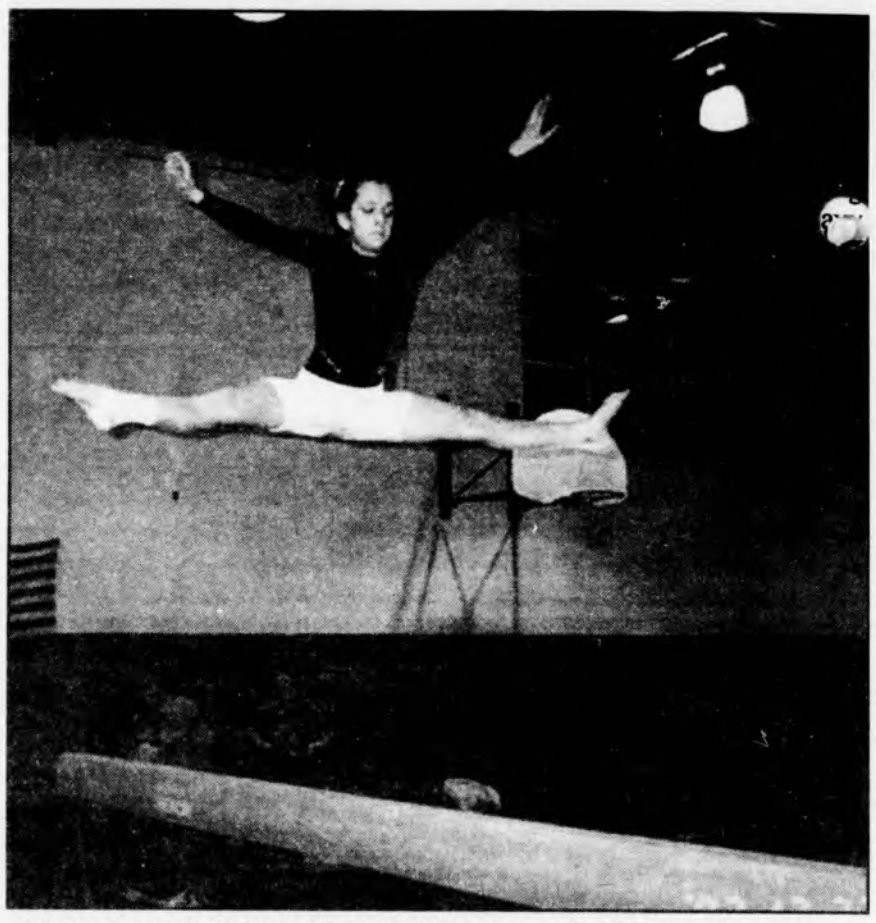
The Lady Indians' win pulled them in a first-place tie with Cohasset and made up for their lone loss of the season against the Lady Skippers.

Cohasset got pair of outstanding performances from eighth-grader Kristin Sheerin. The pint-size gymnast won both the floor routine and vault with impressive scores of 8.45 and 8.2, respectively. Sheerin's floor mark was a new personal best.

It was the balance beam, however, that proved to be the beginning of the end for Cohasset on this night. The Lady Skippers lost a devastating three points on the apparatus as the squad had its problems with six falls.

Head coach Ruthann Ardizzoni knew pretty early that it wasn't going to be Cohasset's night when the Lady Skippers began piling up the uncharacteristic falls.

"That killed us," said Ardizzoni. "I knew halfway through the beam that it was over. They (Cohasset) wanted to win bad and have nothing to be ashamed about."



Ardizzoni had little doubt the Lady Indians would be a tough opponent to get by on the way to tonight's (Thursday) tri-meet against Scituate and Carver.

"Hanover improved since the first meet, which I expected at this point in the season," she said.

The Lady Skippers are going to need strong performances from the entire team against Scituate and Carver. With just seven girls on the squad, there is nothing to fall back on in case someone has an off night.

When the numbers are low, every gymnast is as important as the next. "There's no MVP on our team," Ardizzoni said, "because we need everybody."

Hopefully, "everybody" will be ready for strong performances on Thursday.

CHS gymnast Kristin Sheerin flies through the air with the greatest of ease as part of her balance beam routine. The eighth grader was a top performer for the Skippers in their battle Monday night against Hanover, setting a new personal high with a 8.45 for her floor routine.

Caitlin Flint goes through her balance beam routine.

Season heroics

a break this year, a plight which has swayed a game on more than one occasion.

Nonetheless, Quintin lit it up with 32 to lead all scorers, DeMichele popped in 15 and senior center Pat Hurley chalked up 11 in the losing effort.

Coach Ford has this to offer when asked about the remainder of the season.

"At this point, we can only lose one more game to make the tournament, and we still have to play Rockland. I'm not really concerned about the tournament; I'd just like to see us play good basketball down the stretch. It's giving guys like DeMichel and Trowers the chance to get more minutes, and really develop. We've played really hard the last couple of games, and we're not going to quit. We've been playing our best ball of the year. Alex Russell coming back will help us a little bit. He'll be a good addition."

Cohasset squared off against the Harwich Roughriders Wednesday night and will play Abington Friday night. With only one more loss at their disposal, watch for the Skippers to be scrapping and hustling for a tourney berth.

Conservation declaration might get T's attention

Senate, and with the governor's signature.

"The MBTA specifies Cohasset as a town they can take land from, and our attorney said we can challenge them on constitutional grounds," Dick said. "At this late date we have no recourse but to use this technique to get what we want."

Dick consulted with attorneys from Town Counsel Paul DeRensis' firm to see if declaring the rail bed conservation land is a viable strategy. Dick said one of DeRensis' colleagues believes the town could designate the land for conservation use because it has been used for recreation since 1960.

The town bought the land for recreation use after the Old Colony Rail Road ceased operations in 1959. In 1995, the land was listed as municipal open space in the town's open space plan. The Executive Office of Environmental Affairs approved the open space plan.

Some mitigation committee members worried that changing the land to conservation would inflame negotiations with the MBTA. Another concern was that the changing the land's designation would be seen as a transparent attempt to block the rail project.

Other members of the mitigation committee worried that making the rail bed conservation land would be too confrontational with the MBTA.

"We seem to be backing up here," said selectman and mitigation committee member Diane Sullivan. "I thought we settled the question of vibrations when we did the walk-through with the MBTA."

But Dick wasn't satisfied with the MBTA's performance after the walk-through.

"It was settled to the MBTA's satisfaction," Dick said. "I think we need to protect the interests of more residents than the MBTA has done. They picked one house for mitigation but not another one in similar circumstances. If the idea is to use ownership of the line as leverage, then let's use what we've got."

Sullivan was also worried that the MBTA could easily gather support in the legislature to override the state constitution's protection of conservation land.

Chairman Tom Gruber pointed out that the MBTA could easily slip a bill into other legislation overriding the conservation designation. Gruber said he wanted to develop less confrontational ways to leverage the MBTA for the benefit of residents.

Dick agreed that the state would probably override the conservation designation. But Dick said declaring the land conservation could be a powerful tool for the town.

"This is not nice, but what they're doing is not nice," Dick said. "They'll have to spend more time and more money, and any delay is anathema to them."

The Greenbush project, originally slated for completion in late 1998, has been pushed back to 2002. The cost of the project has soared from an initial cost of $144 million to a current estimate of $285 million.

Committee members agreed to consult with DeRensis on the viability of the strategy and whether it would hold up to litigation.

Building inspector Bob Egan shuts down CHL

whether CHL can file the permit now and continue operations.

John K. McNabb Jr. of the anti-CHL group, Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE), said the failure to file the special permit means CHL has been operating unlawfully for most of its existence.

McNabb also pointed out the Department of Environmental Protection recently placed CHL's vertical expansion request on hold indefinitely.

Former landfill owner James Tyeryar received the special permit in 1976 but did not file it with the Registry of Deeds. In 1982, Paul Barry purchased the landfill, but did not file the special permit. According to McNabb, the permit still had not been filed as recently as last week. Neither Barry nor his attorney, Anton Moerhke could be reached by press time.

McNabb said the violation raises some serious legal questions about the landfill.

"Three-fourths of the landfill is in the Water Resources District, which became effective in 1986,Ó McNabb said. "Landfills are not permitted in the Water Resources District. Everyone thought CHL could operate in the District because it was a pre-existing, nonconforming use. But pre-existing exemptions apply only to lawful operations. If CHL files the permit tomorrow, it becomes a lawful operation beginning tomorrow."

Egan's letter states that CHL will be fined $100 a day for every day it does not comply with the building inspector's order.

McNabb said he expects CHL to defy the order just as it has defied other cease and desist orders in the past.

"They defied the building inspector's order to cease and desist from placing general refuse in the landfill from 1986 to 1988 until a judge made them stop," McNabb said.

McNabb said it was up to CHL to make the next move, but the landfill cannot legally stay open for the present.

This latest development comes on the heels of a decision by the zoning board on Jan. 23 to remand Egan's decision to take no enforcement action against CHL for a recent violation for land filling in an unauthorized area.

The zoning board of appeals (ZBA) is not satisfied that Egan took adequate action against CHL landfill for dumping refuse in an unauthorized section of the property, Area IV-B. Barry admitted that he had dumped more than 1,000 tons of material in Area IV-B. But Barry said the violation was inadvertent and caused by an employee who placed the liner in the wrong place. Barry filled up to the edge of the liner, thinking that was the legal boundary of the landfill.

As the town's zoning enforcement officer, Egan has the authority to assess fines, halt operations and order the immediate removal of violations.

But because of the environmental nature of CHL's violation, Egan decided to postpone immediate enforcement to work with the Department of Environmental Protection and the health board.

The zoning board disagreed with Egan's decision, and said he should have focused on the violation of zoning bylaws. In its decision, the zoning board said the violation was very serious and Egan should have taken immediate enforcement action.

By remanding the decision back to the building inspector, the ZBA is leaving it up to Egan to take action against CHL.

MBTA parking garage answers wanted proposed Route 3A commuter rail station in Cohasset.

Members of the Cohasset Mitigation Committee want to know how serious the MBTA is about building a parking garage in Cohasset.

"The EPA has expressed its concerns that Nantasket Junction is improperly sited," member Michael Dick said. "We need to ask the MBTA what the story is and how likely is it that the 'T' will build a garage on Route 3A."

But Andrew Brennan, director of Environmental Affairs for MBTA, said there are no definite plans to build a garage in Cohasset or eliminate the Nantasket Junction station.

"All we're trying to do is satisfy the administrative process of the EPA," Brennan said. "EPA wants us to make sure there are no less damaging alternatives. That does not mean we cannot build Nantasket Junction or that we are going to build a garage in Cohasset."

Brennan said there are many difficult wetlands issues that would have to be overcome to build a garage at the Cohasset station site. He added that any changes in the project would be discussed with selectmen.

"We are only exploring all alternatives, including others not recommended by EPA," Brennan said. "We will analyze, look at, review, and discuss all alternatives and consult with the town first."

In its environmental review, EPA said the MBTA seriously understated the amount of wetlands impacted by Nantasket Junction. EPA said the MBTA's plan has boardwalks crossing wetlands and disrupting wildlife habitats on the site.

Since Nantasket Junction is only 1.5 miles away from the Cohasset station, the EPA feels that the site would be better served without a train station.

The Cohasset parking garage proposal is intended to provide parking for the 300 commuters that would have parked at Nantasket Junction.

Dick said the garage would greatly increase traffic problems at the Route 3A station site. Dick said adding 300 parking spots could convince the MBTA to revisit its former plan to build a North Main Street drop off site.

Selectman Diane Sullivan, who sits on the mitigation committee, said she would fight the MBTA if it tried to revisit the North Main Street drop off.

The MBTA has had problems convincing the Army Corps that the wetlands impacts of Greenbush are minimal and easily mitigated. The Army Corps seems particularly unconvinced that the MBTA has adequately explored alternatives to the train, like commuter boats and buses.

The MBTA is required to replicate wetlands affected by Greenbush on a one-to-one basis in towns, and a two-to-one basis along the entire line. At a recent meeting, the MBTA indicated that it might be willing to provide towns with cash in exchange for an easing of wetlands replication rules.

FLOOD RELIEF

Dick said this new development could be a way for the town to negotiate with the MBTA for money to complete the James Brook Flood Relief Project.

But the MBTA has failed to provide the town with adequate flood and rainfall data about the basin and the effects of the rail on James Brook flooding. Dick said it would be difficult to get money from the MBTA without accurate estimates of the impact of the train on the flood plain.

"Kerasiotes promised us money if there was any impact on the flood plain," Dick said. "They have to calculate the impact before and after the train. They are supposed to look at the whole flood plain."

Mitigation Committee Chairman Tom Gruber cited the effects of the train on the James Brook Flood Relief Project as his number one concern about Greenbush. Gruber said he wanted any leverage possible to convince the MBTA to help the town pay for the $1.5 million project.

The town's consultant, Dominic Tutela, informed the MBTA that its recent data collection on the flood plain was inadequate. The MBTA was supposed to calculate the water level for the whole Greenbush corridor. But the MBTA's calculations were merely numbers culled from the Federal Emergency Management A[illegible] not data that matched recei[illegible] phenomena.

The MBTA's engineer, Sverdrup, is planning to collect comprehensive data on the entire flood plain and transmit the information to the town by Feb. 11.

Conservation Commission Chairman Veneta Roebuck said the MBTA's latest wetlands mitigation plans call for the replication of 87,120 square feet of wetlands at the town gravel pit.

The MBTA has also been busy with other wetlands and water issues, including the Sohier Street wells. The town wants to rehabilitate the Sohier Street wells for use as emergency water sources.

But the Department of Environmental Protection said the well heads were too close to the train tracks. Town officials told the MBTA to relocate the well heads. But the MBTA asked for a delay to examine the problem.

Now, DEP has indicated to the town that it may approve permits for the wells without forcing the MBTA to relocate the well heads.

Kidder won't run, Jerz undecided

As expected, Ralph Kidder announced Thursday he will not seek another term on the school committee. "I'm hanging up the spikes," Kidder said during the school board meeting. "It's time to go find something else to do."

Kidder served on the school committee for nine years and said during his last run for office "Ralph has been a motivating force," according to school committee Chairwoman Maureen Jerz. "It's hard to imagine this committee without him."

Jerz, whose term also expires in April, has yet to announce if she will seek a new term on the school board. The chairwoman said she has not yet decided about another run for office. Jerz has until Feb. 12 to return nomination papers with the signatures of 50 registered voters to the town clerk's office. So far, two candidates are officially in the Apr. 4 annual election. Henry Rattenbury, running for sewer commission, was first to get his papers in. Barbara Power, a candidate for library trustee, will also be on the ballot.

Anna Abbruzzese: a model citizen

Selected for annual Mariner award

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

You'll very likely find Anna Abbruzzese around town casually attired in a sweater, slacks and sneakers to facilitate all the running around she does.

"Like the Energizer bunny on TV, she just keeps going, going and going," said a friend, Shirley Kehoe of Black Horse Lane.

Whether it's driving for the senior shuttle, preparing and delivering meals for the Pine Street Inn, coordinating the Gourmet Cooking Club through the Council on Elder Affairs, or organizing the Village Farmers' Market — Abbruzzese does it all with a warm smile and an abundance of enthusiasm.

> "To know Anna is to love her."
> KATHY BRYANTON, CEA DIRECTOR.

For her kindness, caring and love for the town and all its residents, the Cohasset Mariner has named Abbruzzese the 1997 Citizen of the Year.

The six-member selection committee — consisting of Judy Volungis of Forest Avenue; Wigmore Pierson of Atlantic Avenue.; JoAnne Chittick of South Main Street; Dean Rizzo of Spring Street; Louis Eaton of Beach Street; and Cohasset Mariner editor Mary Ford — chose Abbruzzese from 19 nominees submitted by 69 local citizens and families.

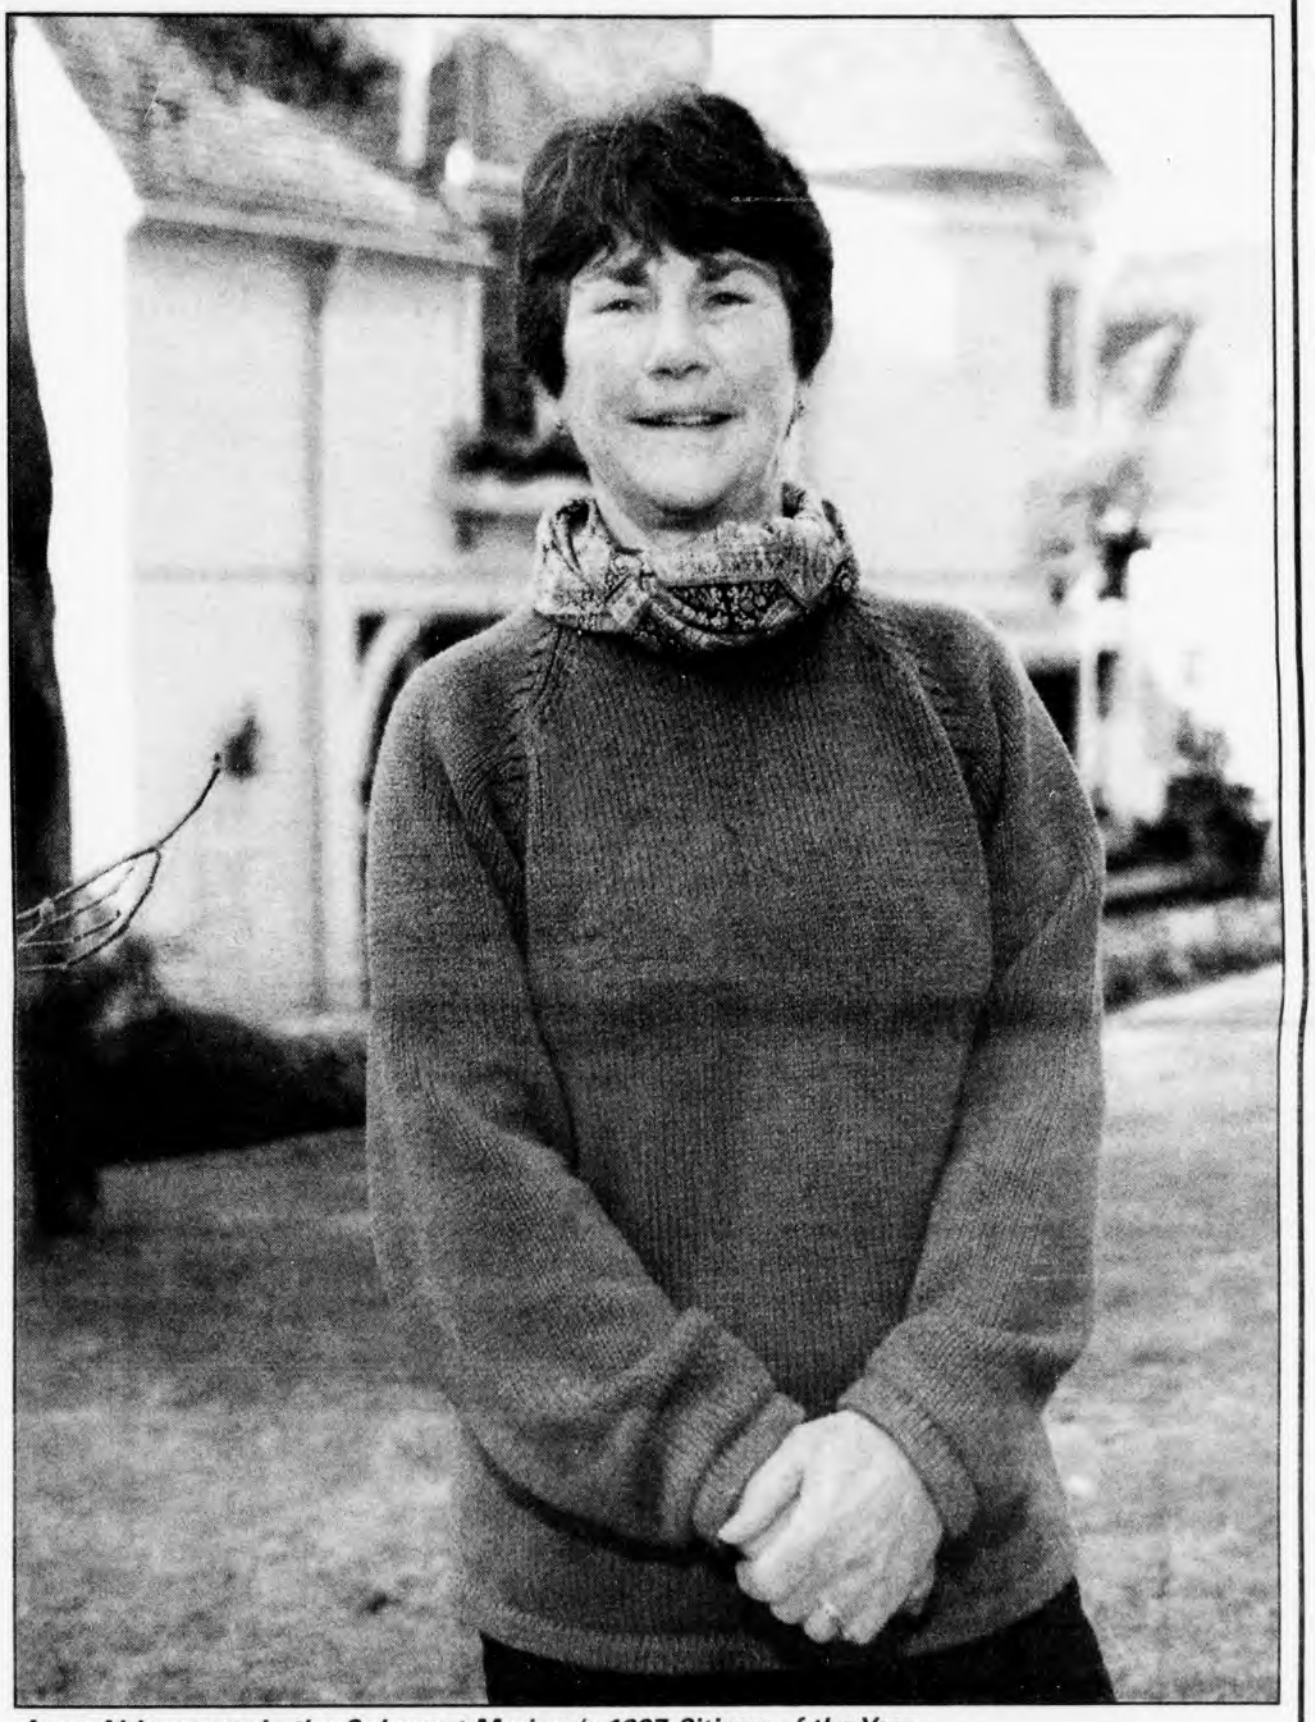
In her nomination, Cohasset Elder Affairs Director Kathy Bryanton said Abbruzzese is an inspiration.

"To know Anna is to love her," she wrote. "For me it has been an experience of knowing a wonderful individual and a great teacher in my life."

A Cohasset native, Abbruzzese was born 63 years ago at 31 South Main St. in the village.

Her grandfather came to town in the early 1900s and fell in love with Cohasset, which reminded him of his home, Gaeta, Italy, and opened a fruit market here. That started a family tradition of living and working in town.

Her father, Nicholas Simeone, and her uncle eventually took over the family business. After Prohibition ended, Simeone opened Simeone's Liquor Store in the village. When he passed away, his son Louis Simeone, who is also familiar figure in town, ran the store until he retired.



A 1953 Cohasset High School graduate, Abbruzzese grew up playing scrub baseball where the town parking lot now is.

Even then she was a standout, Kehoe said.

"She hasn't changed at all over the years. From playing in the sandbox with her in kindergarten to playing basketball and being a cheerleader in high school, she always gave of herself," she said.

Abbruzzese met her husband, Michael Abbruzzese, at the St. Patrick's Day parade in Boston and they were married in 1956. The military and later Michael's career took the Abbruzzeses away from town for a few years. After returning to Cohasset,

CHL to remain open during appeal

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The owners of Cohasset Heights Limited landfill say they are not about to close up shop, despite a cease and desist order from the town's building inspector.

CHL's attorney, Anton Moehrke, said owner Paul Barry will appeal the building inspector's decision to the zoning board of appeals. In the meantime, CHL will remain open until all legal avenues have been exhausted, Moehrke said.

A few months ago, John K. McNabb Jr. of the anti-landfill group SAFE (Stop Any Further Expansion) discovered that CHL had placed more than 1,000 tons of refuse in a portion of the landfill not approved for filling.

Then the state Department of Environmental Protection placed CHL's proposed 15-20 foot vertical expansion on hold.

And just two weeks ago, McNabb discovered that a former owner of the landfill never filed a special permit to operate with the Registry of Deeds. That development called into question whether CHL ever had the right to operate the landfill in that part of town. In response to the permit violation, Building Inspector Bob Egan issued a cease and desist order on Jan. 26 forcing CHL to stop all land filling immediately.

Moehrke said CHL is ready to go to court to fight the town's decision if necessary.

An attorney for CHL, John D. Beling, reported to the town in a letter dated Jan. 28 that the special permit had been filed on Jan. 21, 1998. Records from The Registry of Deeds confirm that action.

McNabb and other members of SAFE contend that Massachusetts General Laws prevent special permits from taking effect until the permit has been filed with the Registry of Deeds.

According to McNabb, landfills are prohibited from the

Call firefighter service resuscitated

By Mary Ford

The call fire-fighters have won a reprieve.

Selectmen said last week they wanted to hear their side before backing a proposal from Town Manager Mark Haddad to eliminate the positions.

So the town's call firefighters rallied the troops and met with selectmen over the weekend to explain what they do. It paid off. Selectmen have become their biggest fans.

Haddad and Selectman Ronnie McMorris, who is liaison to the fire department, said last week that the service is obsolete and serves no purpose. McMorris said the fire chief felt the same way.

But other selectmen weren't so sure that call fire-fighters didn't provide a valuable service at fires.

And Selectman Diane Sullivan worried that once call fire-

COHASSET'S WEEK

No left turn signs to be tested

Last week on the recommendation of the Traffic Study Committee, selectmen agreed to install the universal "no left turn" signs in Cohasset Village. They hope the signs will help prevent drivers from making illegal left turns into the angled parking spaces along South Main Street.

Selectman Nan Roth said she thought the new signs would confuse people.

But Selectman Merle Brown, who sits on the traffic committee, disagreed.

"It is certainly confusing now, the way it is," Brown said. Currently there are small "no U-turn signs" that are difficult to see, he said.

Robert V. Davenport, a regular at selectmen's meetings, suggested more police enforcement might be the answer.

But police say there is a police presence in the village. Seventeen percent of all citations in 1997 were issued in the village area, Town Manager Mark Haddad said.

Haddad said Monday the signs had been ordered and that Police Chief Brian Noonan and DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield will work together to determine the best location for the new signs which will be tried for six months. If they don't work, the signs will be taken down, selectmen said.

Lobster Lab clears hurdle

Last week, selectmen accepted the proposal for the Lobster Lab submitted by Kevin Ulmer, 30 Margin St.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said Ulmer's proposal, which was the only one submitted, met the points criteria for an "advantageous proposal" set forth the Request for Proposal issued by selectmen and recommended they vote to accept.

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan, who continues to oppose the project, cast the sole dissenting vote.

Selectmen Ronnie McMorris and Nan Roth will work with Haddad to negotiate the lease. Ulmer plans to renovate the Hagerty House off Parker Avenue and turn it into a marine research educational facility.

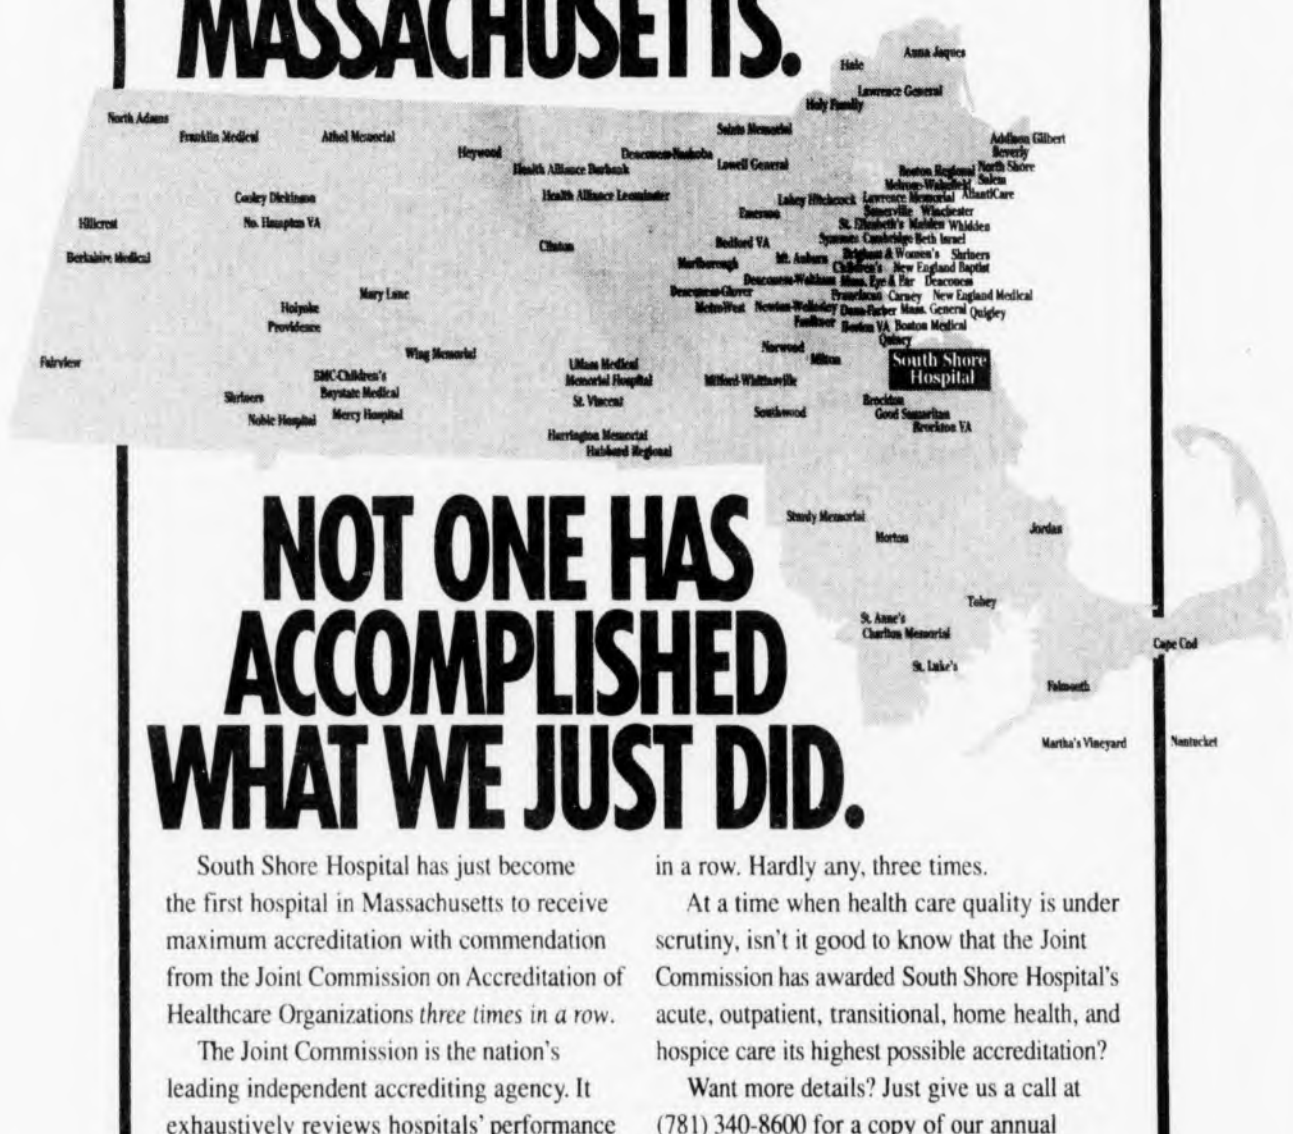
Green crosswalks possible

To enhance pedestrian safety, DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield will determine how much it will cost to paint the crosswalks in the village green and to install signs to alert motorists that there is a crosswalk ahead, Town Manager Mark Haddad said.

Hingham Square has green-painted crosswalks.

Cohasset tried portable crosswalk signs that were placed in the middle of the road to draw attention to crosswalks about five years ago. That effort was abandoned after the signs were damaged and the daily placement and removal of the signs became a problem.

Associate members for Conservation Commission



Two volunteers are being sought to serve as associate members of the Conservation Commission. Interested citizens should contact Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105.

THERE ARE 93 HOSPITALS IN MASSACHUSETTS.

NOT ONE HAS ACCOMPLISHED WHAT WE JUST DID.

South Shore Hospital has just become the first hospital in Massachusetts to receive maximum accreditation with commendation from the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations three times in a row.

The Joint Commission is the nation's leading independent accrediting agency. It exhaustively reviews hospitals' performance –from patient care to facilities, clinical staff to management. Only twelve percent of US hospitals receive maximum accreditation with commendation. Fewer still receive it twice in a row. Hardly any, three times.

At a time when health care quality is under scrutiny, isn't it good to know that the Joint Commission has awarded South Shore Hospital's acute, outpatient, transitional, home health, and hospice care its highest possible accreditation?

Police officer speeds toward retirement

Started career as a part-time photographer

Cliff Jones directs traffic on Rt 3A in Cohasset

After 33 years with the police force, safety officer Clifton Jones is to retire Feb. 11.

"Thirty-three years and two months was enough," said Jones who nonetheless will continue to work details as a special police officer.

Jones said the chance to help people was the part he liked most about his work in the police department.

"Being there when somebody was in need," he said gave him the most satisfaction.

Jones has been best known for the past 15 years as the community's safety officer, but police work was a second career for the Dorchester native who was formerly an award-winning news photographer with the Boston Herald-Traveler. He began his association with the Cohasset P.D. as a part-time photographer. When the Traveler folded, Jones asked Chief Hector Pelletier if he could have a job as a full time police officer. The chief sent him to the police academy in Brockton and Jones had a job as a patrol officer within a week's time, though he still was in charge of police photography.

"There's a lot of evidence in photographs," said Jones who was called on to shoot scenes of burglaries and suicides.

Jones was somewhat steeled to the grisly scenes, due to his experience as a photojournalist. His assignments were mostly fatal car accidents, he said.

"It doesn't bother me at the time," he said, due to his ability to concentrate on the job, although he acknowledged he did find the experiences disturbing afterwards, especially if young children were involved.

"I had young children at the time," he said.

Though Jones also did some sports photography and followed the professional ball clubs around the country, his best work was in spot news. The spot news reporter was called a rover, he said. He worked from a car equipped with radios and would rush to the scene of breaking news as the emergency calls went over the police scanner.

"There was no time to focus," he said. "We just set the camera to a 12 to 15 foot setting and took what was there."

There is no second chance to capture breaking news, he said.

Jones won an award for valor from the Boston Press Photographers Association for his shot of the murder of city police officer John Gallagher. It is his best photograph, he said.

"It shows the bullet holes and the blood on his shirt. It was just as it happened," he said.

Though Jones is more interested in police work than in photography today, he continued to win citations for valor with the Cohasset P.D. In 1993, he saved five people from a house fire. In 1991 he was responsible for apprehending a burglar who had been rifling houses near Jerusalem Road.

Jones said he hopes to continue his fine record of service as a special officer. The work will keep him in Cohasset where he came to live because it was his first wife's home town. (She died in 1988, and he remarried two years ago.)

> "I love the town and I have all the respect in the world for the people."
> — OFFICER CLIFFTON JONES.

"I love the town and I have all the respect in the world for the people," he said.

Jones said he enjoyed the good relationship between the public and the Cohasset P.D.

"I don't have to hide my car because I'm afraid my tires are going to get sliced," he said.

The former Marine also said Chief Brian Noonan is the finest he has ever worked for and is a man who is there for the people of the town.

"He'll solve your problem. Chief Noonan should have been a Marine," said Jones. "He would have made a fine platoon leader."

The chief said he worked with Jones on the midnight shift and formed a friendship with the safety officer which he hopes will "last into his retirement." Noonan also said Jones "certainly was a dedicated police officer."

Seven still on list to pen town history

It would take a whole newspaper to list all the things that happened in Cohasset over the past 50 years, the chairman of a year old committee on town history said last week.

It will also take a good author to write the book about Cohasset between the years 1950 and 2000, he maintained.

Wigmore Pierson said the town history board has narrowed the search for an author to seven candidates and is eyeing a Mar. 1 deadline for their proposals. Pierson also said 2001 was the tentative publication date for the third volume of the town history, and the committee is still looking for suggestions and comments. So far, the book is likely to be organized around topics such as the changing geography of Cohasset, people and politics, the issues of the day, town laws and traditions, world and national events affecting Cohasset and a chronology of the late Twentieth Century.

"That's what our current thinking is. We anticipate concluding the suggested table of contents at our Feb. 18 meeting," Pierson said.

Nonetheless, the book will be more than text. Clark Chatterton has taken charge of the sub-committee on photographs, cartoons and memorabilia, Pierson said.

"We encourage people to contact Clark, especially if they have photographs."

The writers vying for the right to pen the Cohasset tome are (in alphabetical order):

•Sarah Boyer of Cambridge, an author with a new book about her North Cambridge neighborhood and a connection to Cohasset where her father lives.

• Jacqueline Dormitzer, a 30-year resident of the town and also a member of the new downtown revitalization task force.

•Mary Sheppard Earon, a 10-year town resident and a correspondent for the Mariner newspapers.

•Nancy Garrison, the daughter of the first Massachusetts selectwoman and also a long-term resident of town.

•James Ryan of Brookline, an author.

•Virginia Wood of Swanzey, N.H., a former town resident.

•Robert Ziff, a correspondent for the Mariner newspapers.

CHL Landfill will remain open during appeal

Water Resources District, which became effective in 1986. McNabb said CHL was allowed to operate because it was a non-conforming, pre-existing use exempt from the bylaw. But without a registered permit, CHL could not claim the exemption, McNabb said.

Former landfill owner James Tyeryar received the special permit in 1976 but did not file it with the Registry of Deeds.

In 1982, Barry purchased the landfill, but did not file the special permit.

Moehrke did not agree with SAFE's contention.

"That interpretation is a hypertechnicality that has been concocted by a group that has sworn to close the landfill,"Moehrke said. "This group (SAFE) has had members elected or appointed to the board of health and the water commission in an attempt to be in the position of judge and jury. They are a small, but vocal minority that have pushed responsible town authorities so those authorities defer to their every statement and demand."

Former SAFE president Alix White serves on the board of health, and McNabb is a water commissioner and member of the water resources authority.

Moehrke said the failure to file the permit was a housekeeping matter, and no more than a technical nuisance. He also refuted SAFE's position that the landfill has been operating illegally in the water resource district since 1986 because the special permit was not filed on time.

"The statute says the permit must be recorded, but not when,"Moehrke said. "The statute says the special permit becomes effective when it is issued, not on the recording date. The doctrine of non-conforming use does not say you have to cover every technicality. You have to be in general, lawful compliance."

In an interview last week, McNabb said the violation raises some serious legal questions about the landfill.

Moehrke said the latest attempts by SAFE to shut down CHL were part of a carefully orchestrated campaign to seize on every minor technicality and make it look like a huge violation.

"The courts say they are not going to deal with every trivial case when people are dying,"Moehrke said. "This is a landfill that everyone has known about for a long time. It's like an elephant in a living room."

Moehrke said using the failure to file the special permit as a reason to close down the landfill was hypocritical.

He pointed out that the town has gone to land court on two occasions in the past trying to use the same special permit to force CHL to comply with another cease and desist order. In a third case, the special permit was raised as a peripheral issue to oppose the proposed Area V expansion.

"In three separate court cases, no one ever raised the issue of the special permit,"Moehrke said. "Now after three court cases in which they could have and should have raised any issues about the special permit, they are trying to have it both ways."

Ten years ago, the town tried to enforce the special permit in court as a way of stopping CHL from accepting general refuse and garbage. CHL's permit allows it to accept only construction and building debris.

CHL continued to accept the general refuse during appeals and court proceedings until a judge ordered the landfill to stop.

Moehrke said CHL will use the same strategy and stay in business during hearings despite the building inspector's stop order.

"The law is you go forward and maintain the status quo until a court issues a final adjudication,"Moehrke said. "We will comply with the law."

Moehrke said there are at least three separate issues in this latest complaint. The failure of the town to raise any problems with the permit in court, the fact that CHL has now filed the permit, and the town's attempts to enforce the special permit in court, then say outside court that the permit is invalid.

"McNabb can't argue that he didn't know about the un-filed permit when he argued against the landfill in court for SAFE,"Moehrke said. "He complained that town counsel wasn't aggressive enough, but he missed it. We will argue that technical non-compliance is not non-conforming after 21 years of legal operation."

Moehrke said he expects CHL to appeal to the courts if the zoning board upholds the building inspector's cease and desist order.

Call firefighter service resuscitated fighters were eliminated, the fire department would ask for more permanent fire-fighters to perform the back-up duties such as laying hose — tasks she thought were currently performed by the call force.

Haddad hoped to use the money to start training paramedics — a program backed by the fire chief. The town spends about $30,000 a year for call fire-fighters.

But this week, selectmen were unanimous that call fire-fighters are valuable and rather than see the service eliminated, they want it beefed up.

Monday, they blamed their prior stance on "miscommunication" and were unable to explain how Fire Chief Roger Lincoln feels about their turnaround. Since the call fire-fighters had already met with selectmen, they did not attend Monday's meeting as scheduled. As a result, Lincoln was called and told there was no need for him to come.

Reached by telephone, Lincoln said he watched the selectmen's meeting on television and had no comment on the issue.

McMorris said she would take the blame for her about face.

"I didn't find out the other side and have them explain to us what role they really are playing," she said.

Selectman Diane Sullivan stressed that the call firefighters get along well with the full-time force and don't want a wedge created between the two groups.

The way call firefighters are paid is somewhat confusing. The pot of money, about $30,000 a year, is divided up among them annually depending on the number of incidents each reports to.

Selectmen say are a dedicated group that provides much of their own training. All are certified firefighters.

Laugelle takes out papers for selectman

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

School board Chairwoman Maureen Jerz says she will not try for a new term on the school committee. But two more candidates have announced they will seek other offices in April's annual town election.

With a week left before the candidates are officially nominated, former selectman Rocco Laugelle of 38 Smith Place will go after a seat on the board of selectmen. Also, Patrick Plante of 798 Jerusalem Road will test incumbent Henry Rattenbury's strength. A three-year term as sewer commissioner is at stake in that race.

Both Laugelle and Plante took out nomination papers this week.

Laugelle, a selectman for 15 years before he lost the election to Peter Pratt, said he would like to see the town cut down on spending.

"There are lots of controversial issues—the schools wanting more money, the sewer commission wanting more money, the landfill. I just hate to see us spend so much money," Laugelle said.

The former selectman also said he was running because he has time to serve the town since he has retired from work.

The nomination papers with signatures of 50 registered voters must be returned to the Town Clerk's office by 5 p.m. Feb. 12. So far, five of the candidates have returned papers and are on the ballot. They are:

Richard Barrow, an incumbent running unopposed for recreation commission.

"I'm retired now from my regular job. I was hoping I could add something to the board after being there for 15 years. I always enjoyed it. It's a great challenge."

– ROCCO LAUGELLE, POTENTIAL CANDIDATE FOR SELECTMAN

"I'm retired now from my regular job. I was hoping I could add something to the board after being there for 15 years. I always enjoyed it. It's a great challenge."

Plante was not reached for comment before the Mariner's deadline.

Steve Bobo, a political newcomer running unopposed for health board.

Barbara Power, an incumbent running unopposed for library trustee.

Henry Rattenbury, an incumbent who might face Plante in the sewer commissioner's election.

Robert Sturdy, an incumbent running unopposed for planning board.

Jerz's decision means there will be no incumbents running for the two seats on the school board. (School board member Ralph Kidder confirmed earlier he would not try for another term.)

The school committee chairwoman said she made the decision because it was time for her to pursue career and personal goals.

"After eight years of involvement with the schools, the time has come for me to follow some personal and professional interests," said Jerz.

Jerz served one three-year term on the school board. She was also a former president of the Parent Student Organization and a member of the Deer Hill School Council.

Grant to fund harbor patrols

The Cohasset police department has received an $11,000 grant to launch a harbor patrol this summer.

"It's a first-time thing," according to Chief Brian Noonan who said the grant money was awarded by the Department of Public Safety. "We're excited about this."

Noonan also said he met Wednesday with two Coast Guard petty officer from Point Allerton in Hull to talk about a joint training session to prepare for the marine patrol.

The chief said he expected to have a cadre of six police officers in the harbor patrol in two boats. The boats belong to the harbor master, and the harbor patrol will assist the harbor master but also have a number of other duties.

"It'll be anything from problems with boaters under the influence to vandalism in the harbor to rescues at sea," Noonan said and stressed the program would be operated at "no cost to the town," due to the grant award.

Future sewer users still seek fairness

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Although plans are to have users absorb the entire increased cost of the North Cohasset sewer project through betterments — one local woman says there are no guarantees that will happen.

Maria Plante, 798 Jerusalem Road, says she will offer an amendment from town meeting floor asking for the 50/50 town-user shared payment plan voted a year ago.

At the 1997 annual town meeting, voters appropriated $6.6 million for the project. A subsequent Prop. 2-1/2 override passed at the ballot box meaning half the cost of the project — which will hook up about 330 homes in the north section of town to the sewer treatment plan in Hull — was to be picked up by all taxpayers.

But bids for the project came in $2.7 million higher than expected leaving sewer commissioners scrambling for ways to cover the extra cost without getting mired in another legal battle with the state.

The town is under a court order to clean up its septic problems or face hefty state fines.

As it stands now, those in the North Cohasset sewer district will pay about 63 percent of the cost of the project. The increase which would be assessed though betterments will add about $340 more a year for 20 years to each affected homeowner. Officials don't expect town meeting to reject the additional appropriation because the money would not come from the tax base.

But Plante hopes the voters will come down on the side of fairness. She is outraged that the bids came in 45 percent higher than planned.

"This amount of money is totally unacceptable," she said. "We're being held hostage to very greedy contractors who look at Cohasset and think all our pockets are lined with gold."

If Plante's amendment passes, another Prop. 2-1/2 override would be required to pick up half the cost of the increase, about $1.3 million. If successful, the override would add about $17 a year to the annual tax bill of a home assessed at $330,000.

Sewer commissioners say the bids are high because the North Cohasset project involves installing a pump at each house. That means contractors have to go onto private property which opens them up to liability issues and therefore increases their costs.

Plante polled selectmen this week to gauge their support for the amendment. Selectmen Diane Sullivan, Nan Roth, Michael Sullivan and Merle Brown said they would support it.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said she would have difficulty asking the 60 percent of town which is not on the sewers to pick up more of the cost of the sewer project.

Hydrant rental fees sunk

The town will not pay the water department upwards of $100,000 in hydrant rental fees in fiscal year 1998, which starts July 1.

The water commissioners said they would have to raise rates to make up for the loss of revenue costing the typical homeowner $50 more a year.

But Town Manager Mark Haddad said according to the town accountant's estimates, the water department will have a surplus of more than $360,000 and will not have to raise rates to cover the loss of hydrant fees.

Hydrant money is not only used to repair hydrants but to maintain fire-flow capacity in town and is calculated on a per-hydrant basis, water commissioners said.

Selectmen agreed to recommend the hydrant rental fee be deleted from the budget.

Water Commissioner John McNabb said he thought the town accountant's numbers were optimistic and nevertheless, the water department had plenty to use the surplus on.

Haddad said $15,000 would be set aside in the budget to pay hydrant rental fees in North Cohasset. The hydrants in that part of town are owned by Mass-American Water Company, a private water company, that supplies water to North Cohasset, Hingham and Hull.

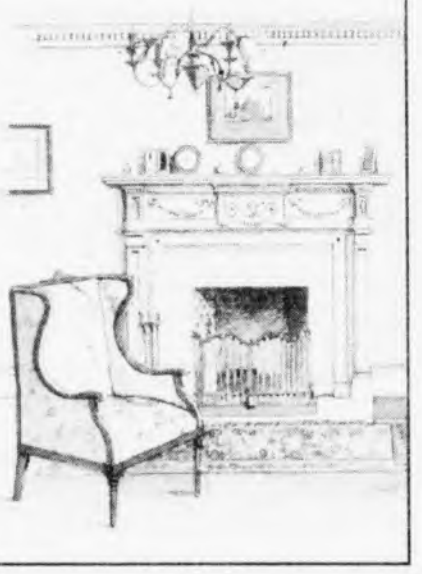
Paramedic service to be studied

Selectmen said they like the idea of paramedics but want more study before allocating funds to the program.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said the majority of the fire department's incidents involve providing ambulance service.

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan wants a five-year budget estimate on the proposed paramedic service including salaries and training costs to see what impact it will have.

Selectman Nan Roth wants a complete analysis including how they maintain certification and what effect the availability local paramedics would have on the advanced life support service provided by South Shore Hospital.



Town Manager Haddad said he is leery of using free cash for the paramedic program.

"My plan was to take the money used for the call firefighters. That didn't happen, so I have no plan," he said. (See related story, page one).

Osgood School reuse process speeds up

Possible library use unlikely

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Selectmen said Monday they want to get moving right away on possible reuse options for the Osgood School.

The discussion followed news that the Osgood Reuse Committee chairman Joanne Adkins had resigned effective immediately.

They had asked the committee last week to meet with the Design Review Board and Planning Board and come back in three weeks with their input. They insisted that the reuse committee tap the talent in town before they'd consider hiring a consultant to help determine the value of the elementary school.

But that point appeared to be moot this week as selectmen moved the process forward.

The 75-year-old school, which is being replaced with a new elementary school currently under construction, is due to close in June.

Selectmen have now asked Town Manager Mark Haddad to work with the reuse committee to draft a Request for Proposal with points' criteria for different options for the building. They hope to have proposals back by the end of the summer so October's town meeting can decide on the fate of the structure.

Unable to get funding from the advisory committee for a town-wide mailing, the reuse committee circulated a survey at last fall's special town meeting to gauge public sentiment for a range of possible uses.

Based on those results, the group ruled out single-family use for the site which would involve razing the venerable old building.

There was a fair amount of interest in doing something for seniors whether that be with condominiums, rental units or assisted living, the committee said.

In addition to uses for seniors, the committee left the door open for possible institutional use but was not specific on what that might be.

A new wrinkle in the plans was the library's interest in possibly building a 16,000-square foot library in the center of the building. Osgood is 29,000 square feet.

Library trustees chairman Patience Towle said the trustees are not adverse to sharing the building with a revenue producing entity and hoped that mixed use for the site might be considered.

But Monday, selectmen all but ruled the library use out. They said it makes the issue more complicated and didn't think they could wait until the trustees came up with more definitive plans.

Adkins could not be reached by comment by press time. But at last week's meeting she explained that economics is not the only consideration when discussing value. She urged selectmen to support funding a consultant to help compare the value of 50 condominiums versus 200 rental units, for example.

"If economics is the only consideration, then you don't need a committee. Just put a for sale sign on the building," she said.

Some residents feel strongly that adding the building to the tax rolls was a promise made at town meeting to garner support for the $10 million new school project.

Random selection article nixed

Selectmen backed off asking for a by-law change to have town meeting articles come up through random selection last week.

They had proposed placing an article (which is an item of business before town meeting) on the warrant that if adopted would force the moderator to take the articles up at random and not in the order they appear on the warrant.

Town Moderator George Marlette vehemently opposed the proposal and threatened to temporarily step down and debate against it at town meeting. He said selectmen were overstepping their bounds.

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan said there were pros and cons to both sides and said the matter should not be cast in concrete.

As it stands now, town meeting can ask the moderator to take the articles up randomly and he can put it to a vote.

Selectman Merle Brown was upset that the board wasn't going to go through with recommending the by-law change.

"I thought you had more guts," he said. "You can't handle George."

QUILT SHOW & LUNCHEON

Here's some news that will enable you to "Think Spring" — a quilt show! The Second Congregational Church will be holding its fifth annual Quilt Show/Luncheon Saturday, March 7, from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. It will be held at the church, and it is quite an event, indeed! Why am I telling you this so early? Because they are looking for more quilts to show! Do you have an old quilt with an interesting history behind it? Or do you have one that you made yourself and you would like others to see and appreciate? If so, call the church study at 383-0345 or Carol at 383-1812. Be on the lookout for updates on the show! P.S. There is a Feb. 12 deadline for you to get in touch if you want to have your quilt in the show. They will need that much time to get everything together!

THANKS, RALPH

It was sad to see that Ralph Kidder won't be a member of the school committee after this term — he has done an outstanding job during his nine years in office. He has been as fair and honest as anyone can be. One wonders how he will cope being able to watch a television show or reading a book without several interruptions! We're sure he will enjoy it! Meanwhile, thanks for all of your time and efforts, Ralph!

Registration is open to all children who will be at least 5 years old by Aug. 1, 1998; and, parents are required to provide a copy of the player's birth certificate if one was not given last year.

CHART HOUSE QUESTION

How many times did you go to the phone in the past month to call the Chart House to see if they were open for dinner, to make a party plan, etc.? It is hard to believe that it is closed, it is one of the prettiest spots in Cohasset! It will be interesting to see what becomes of it, we'll keep you informed as we hear!

GRANDPARENTS AGAIN

Ann Pompeo is busy filling in another branch on the family tree, she and Roger are grandparents again! On Feb. 28, their daughter Jeannine gave birth to Julia Ann Coburn! Julia Ann joins her big brother Tommy and big sister Emily, who are thrilled to have her join the ranks! Their Dad, Tom, and Jeannine are just so happy to have her here, and have plenty of love to give to her, just as they have to the others! By the way, it appears all four will have to help with feedings, Julia weighed more than 10 pounds at birth! She will be one hungry baby! Congrats to all of you!

MRS. PRICE LOOKS WONDERFUL

Spotted Marie Price around town a few days ago, she looks wonderful! Retirement certainly must agree with her, although she still misses her students like the dickens! And the whole school misses Marie, too! Marie said that all of her former students still have to have a hug when they see her — isn't that special?!

MAY I PRESENT

Sallyann Chatterton

Has it arrived at your house yet? The "What can we do now, Mom," or the "I'm hungry!"? These often heard statements and questions can really get to one by the end of the winter, and I have the perfect solution for you (and them, too). Why not get everyone together to make some bread!

The warm aroma of bread baking in the oven, so legend says, has "magic power to dispel the doldrums and lift the spirits." Bread can be made in several different, interesting and delightful forms. This recipe is a quick-to-mix bread. It will disappear even faster! May I present:

Carol's Raisin Bread

1/2 cup milk
1/4 cup sugar
2 tablespoons butter
1/2 teaspoon salt
1 package yeast
1/4 cup warm water
1 egg
2-1/4 cups flour
1/2 cup raisins

Scald 1/2 cup milk and add 1/4 cup sugar, 2 Tbsp. butter, 1/2 tsp. salt. Cool.

In mixing bowl, put 1 package of yeast and 1/4 cup warm water.

Stir well. Add cooled milk mixture and 1 egg. Add 2-1/4 cups flour gradually and beat well.

Cover with towel and let rise one hour in a warm place. When double, add 1/2 cup of raisins and beat for at least one minute. Put into a well-greased pan and bake at 375 for 30-45 minutes, or until crust is well browned. (If a softer crust is desired, brush lightly with melted butter while bread is warm. Remove from pan and cool on rack.

ENJOY!

Concert to benefit Wellspring at St. Stephen's Church

Walton Rogers Hall of St. Stephen's Church in Cohasset is the setting for the Broad Cove Chorale and the Unicorn Singers' second performance of "Encore," a pops-style concert with a showcase of choral musical favorites. The concert will be held Sunday, Feb. 8, at 4 p.m., to benefit Wellspring Multiservice Center, located in Hull but serving those in need throughout the South Shore. Audiences familiar with the annual "Encore" performance say it is always "a lot of fun." What makes a group of local folk rush off to rehearsals, dress up in long skirts or tuxedos, take risks and work so hard for the pure pleasure of singing?

"It's for the joy it," says director Margo Euler, who will conduct both a Saturday and a Sunday performance of the program. "Encore" does promise to be a good deal of fun. A wide array of musical styles, including classical, barbershop, folk songs, spirituals, Broadway, gospel, parody, operetta, sing-along, madrigals and jazz, will be sung to a piano, bass and drum accompaniment. From within the ranks of the singers, a violinist and a flutist will appear. There's always audience participation, this year in the singing of rounds, but there's a rumor that someone in the audience will add his instrumental flourish to a medley from "Guys and Dolls."

Tables for six at this festive event can be reserved by sending a check for $80 to Wellspring, 814 Nantasket Avenue, Hull, MA 02045. Single seats are available at $15 each at Nobles Camera Stores in Hingham Square and Cohasset, at the Children's Exchange in Cohasset, and at all Brewed Awakenings, (Hingham, Norwell and Weymouth), as well as at the Wellspring office in Hull. Refreshments will be available for sale prior to the concert. The concert promises to be the perfect lift for mid-winter blues. The concert will also be performed Saturday evening, Feb. 7, at Temple Sha'aray Shalom. Call 749-6561 for information on the Saturday performance.

Citizen of the Year

As editor of the Cohasset Mariner, it's my pleasure to announce that Anna Abbruzzese has been selected as the 1997 Citizen of the Year.

Mrs. Abbruzzese gives innumerable hours to a myriad of causes and activities. She is loved for her quiet enthusiasm that inspires all who know her.

While nominations were open, a total of 69 individuals and families took the time to nominate a citizen, detailing his or her contributions to help make this town one we all love.

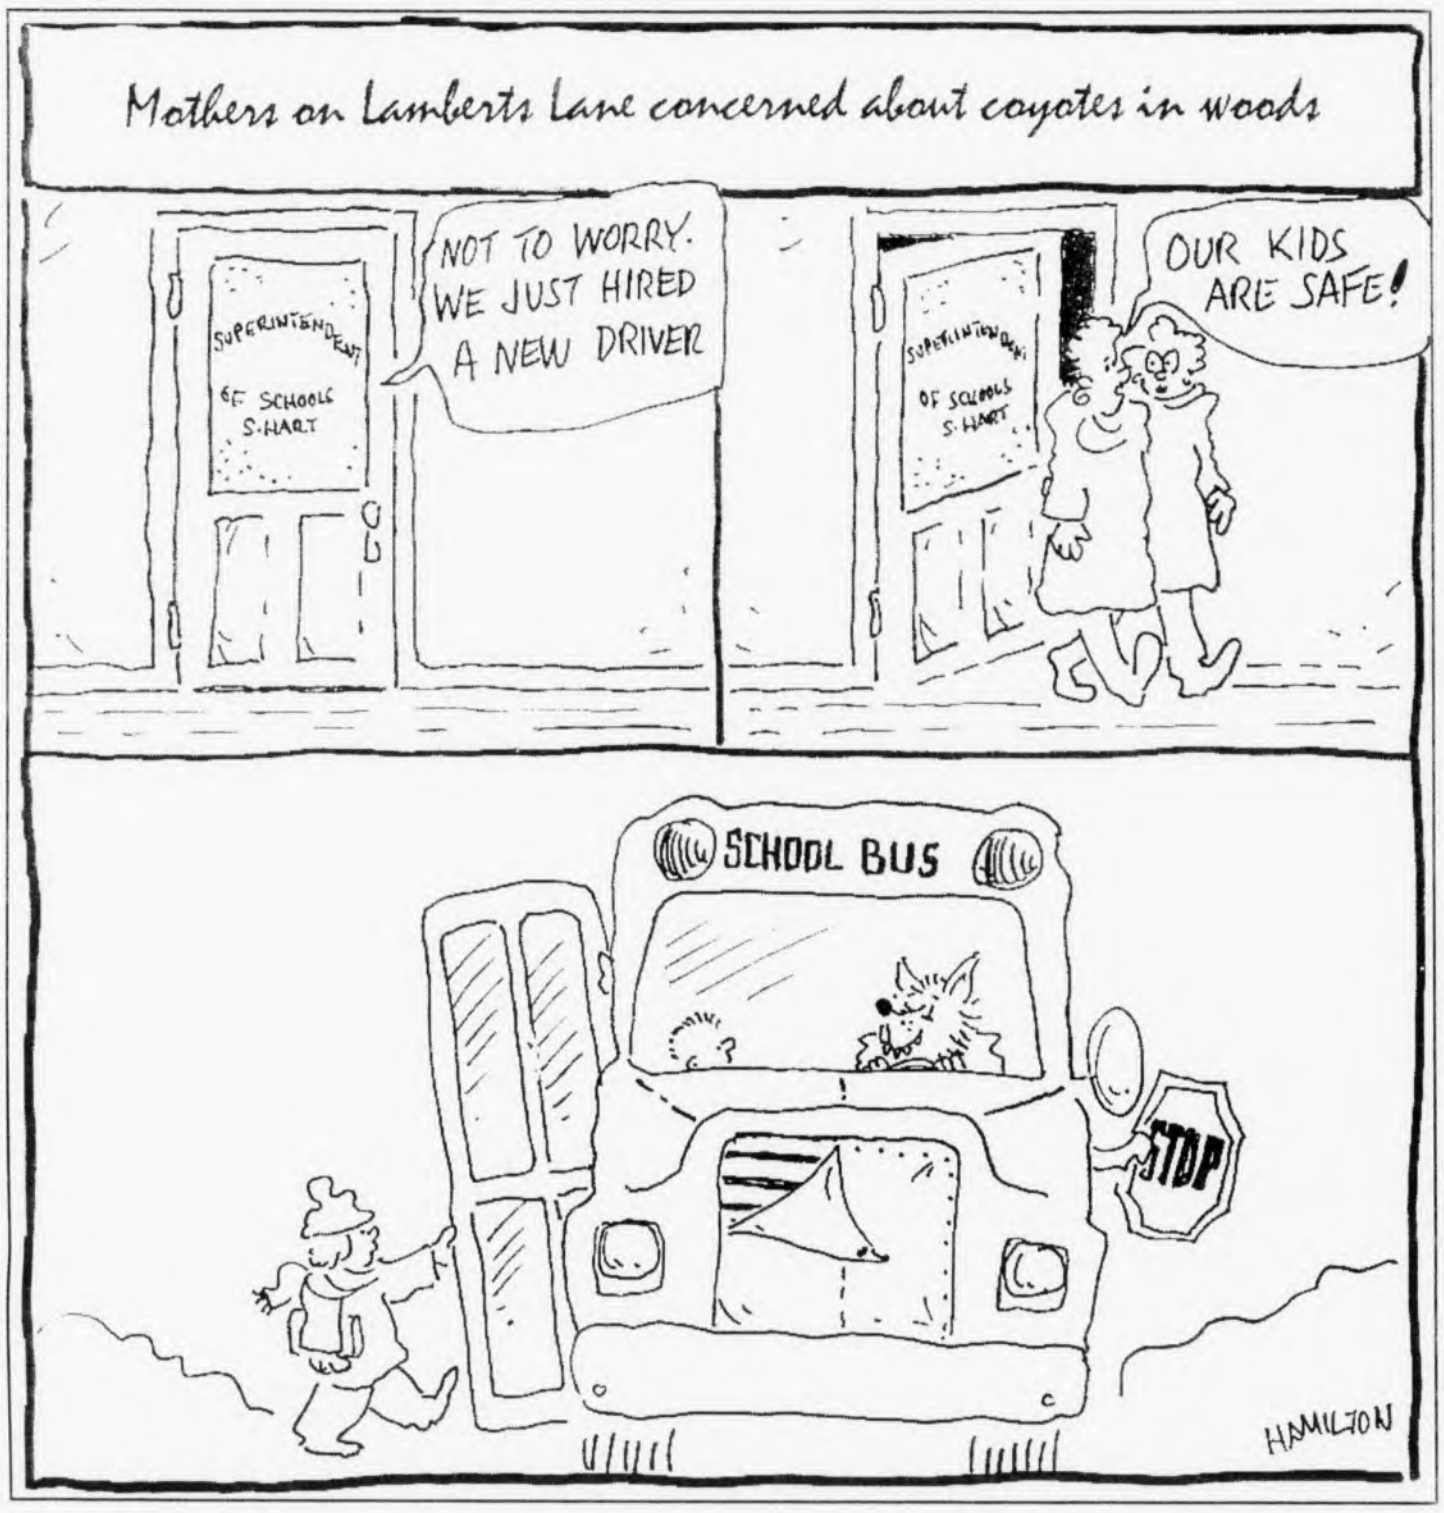
Our thanks go to Judy Volungis, 234 Forest Ave.; Louis Easton, 30 Beach St.; JoAnne Chittick, 98 S. Main St.; Wigmore Pierson, 123 Atlantic Ave.; and Dean Rizzo, 56 Spring St. for joining me at the Cohasset Mariner office in Hingham Square for the challenging and pleasurable task of poring over the nominations.

Regrettably we can't recognize each of the 19 separate nominees with the Citizen of the Year Award. And we thank all those who wrote such thoughtful letters and notes nominating their fellow citizens.

The selection committee narrowed the field down to nine, five and finally three. The final decision — although not reached without considerable discussion — was unanimous.

So we extend our heartfelt congratulations to Anna Abbruzzese — a sister, wife, mother, grandmother and native of Cohasset — who has found the time to devote to a number of volunteer roles.

As Shirley Kehoe, 28 Bayberry Lane, said in her nomination:



"Whether she's driving the shuttle or having a conversation with one of our elders, she lights up their life.

"She has more energy than anyone I know and is happiest when doing for others less fortunate than we are."

With this award, we offer recognition for making a difference. In our society too many roles models go unrecognized. Too often people today look to the sports, rock or movie star with envy, when the real hero is the local police officer, fire-fighter, parent, teacher, church leader or government official.

The annual Citizen of the Year Award is our way of taking our hats off to a person among us who goes that extra mile without asking for anything in return but the intrinsic reward of helping to make Cohasset a better place.

Call firefighters deserve respect

Selectmen:

I am writing in response to comments made at last week's Selectmen's meeting, dated Jan. 26, regarding the call firefighters.

As the wife of a man who was a call firefighter for more than 15 years, I was appalled by the comment that the call force was of "no value" to the fire department. I feel it is insulting to all those men over the years who worked very hard to help this town and were proud to do it. They certainly did more than roll hoses! They helped fight those fires and worked side by side with the permanent men. They did go through training, on their own time, and were of great value to the fire department.

Maybe things are different now, and some changes need to be made, but at least a thank you would be called for, and let them go out with the dignity and respect they deserve, to say the least, an apology. Today, there are only 10 call firefighters left on the force, and you wonder why? I say, shame on you!

Objects to lobster lab site

Selectmen:

You know my feeling about this subject — it hasn't changed. I'm wholeheartedly for the idea but not this location. I'm wholeheartedly for the idea if it is a part of the town's school curriculum — part of the science department's program.

For the life of me I can't see putting a million dollars into this building with little or nor land to go with it — unless we lease them the whole of the Hagerty Property. (Yes the plot consists of two acres plus but only a half acre or less is buildable — useful for buildings and parking.)

Suggestion/proposal — Put this effort that is to be expended on creating this lobster lab into some honest and sincere actions in building up the existing Science Dept. into a complete and comprehensive program that will give Cohasset students what they should receive from a first class school system.

Briefly the following are some of the other objections I have mentioned before and what has been said by others who feel this is not the route to go with this lab idea on the property.

- Parking will be a problem on Parker Ave. unless no one uses the lab.
- The two activities — access to the harbor and the lab cannot co-exist on this small plot of land.
- The property was bought for access to the harbor — sadly, oddly enough the town has no other entrance to the harbor — for Cohasset, a seacoast town, that's serious.
- What will the town do with the building if the idea doesn't work?

Thank you for reading my thoughts, ideas and suggestions. Use your common sense wisely they built a house on Old Pasture Road where they lived for 25 years before moving to Border Street. Mike befriended another young man, Roger Porter, who was also tired of traveling, and they formed Target Industries on Ripley Road.

Abbruzzese said her penchant for service to others may have taken root helping people put packages together for servicemen in World War II. Her father was a member of the Sons of Italy and she recalls her house being full of people packaging cookies, bandages and other items to send overseas.

In her datebook, Abbruzzese keeps a favorite quotation which epitomizes her generosity of spirit and reflects her philosophy of life.

"Do all the good you can
By all the means you can
In all the ways you can
To all the people you can
As long as you can."
— John Wesley.

"I like being with people," she says. "Sitting and curling up with a book is not one of my favorite things to do. I'd rather be seeing someone, talking with someone or cooking with someone."

Abbruzzese became involved with the "senior center" when her mother started to go there in her later years.

That was the beginning of a long relationship that includes coordinating the "Gourmet Cooking Club", being a shuttle bus driver, special events worker and chairwoman of the Board of the Council of Elder Affairs.

Abbruzzese said while she is a little "embarrassed" at all the attention that goes with being selected as the Citizen of Year, she said she feels honored to be in such distinguished company. Prior year recipients are the Rev. Gary Ritts, Dr. Robert Sceery, Joseph Buckley and Gerard Keating.

For her, there is no special formula to helping others.

"I just do things because they're there and they need to be done," Abbruzzese said.

Her activities also include serving on the Village Renaissance Committee, which works to beautify the village, and on the Village Revitalization Committee, which hopes to help rejuvenate the downtown area, and volunteering at her church, St. Anthony's. She helped coordinate the first ecumenical service for homebound, frail elders at St. Anthony's, a program which has expanded since its inception five years ago.

The Abbruzzeses have two sons: Michael, who lives in Hingham and Christopher who lives in Peoria, Illinois; and three daughters, Michele Abbruzzese and Sarah Murphy of Cohasset; and Annie Abbruzzese of Charlestown.

They have eight grandchildren.

In her nomination, Kelsey Abbruzzese summed up why she thinks her grandmother deserves to be Citizen of the Year:

"A wonderful person is a wonderful person no matter what," she said. "My grandma is one of the people in the world that can be called a wonderful person, and I love her a lot."

Random article selection backed

To the Editor:

The town meeting has had a long tradition in New England. Voters used to spend the day doing the town's financial and legal business. Since we have become more mobile many have lost the importance of this form of government. We should, therefore, have a random selection of articles. This will ensure that the citizens vote for the entire warrant and not limit their concerns of special interests. (We eat the whole cookie and not just a bite.)

Cohasset man receives break in sentencing from judge in U.S. court

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

A Cohasset man has been sentenced in Boston federal court after he admitted buying child pornography.

John H. Fraser, 58, of 50 Norman Todd Road received five years of probation Jan. 28 from U.S. District Court Judge William G. Young.

The probation was part of a plea agreement. The minimum penalty for the crime by a first-offender under federal court sentencing guidelines is 15 months in prison and $4,000 in fines.

Judge Young has previously said he seldom departs from the federal guidelines under Truth in Sentencing. But the judge lowered the penalty after Fraser agreed to undergo counseling, according to Amy Rindskopf of the U.S. Attorney's office.

The Cohasset man pled guilty earlier to unlawful possession of child pornography.

Rindskopf said Fraser was caught through a "sting" operation conducted by the U.S. Postal Inspection Service last year after his name turned up on a Florida company's mailing list. The company, Cine International, ran a business in mail-order pornography. Its mailing lists were seized by postal inspectors during a raid.

Fraser then was sent an advertisement for tapes that contained child pornography. The advertisement came from a fake company. It was actually the front for the undercover operation. Fraser ordered three videos.

On June 5, 1997, after the tapes were delivered to his home, federal inspectors got a search warrant and found the tapes. Fraser was charged with possession of child pornography.

State, towns have tug of war over tower power

Bill would overturn DTE's latest ruling

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

The spread of cellular towers has been a big issue on the South Shore where local communities have tried to battle giant companies and limit the sometimes ugly towers to "appropriate" parts of town. Now two South Shore lawmakers have joined forces to help the local authorities keep the right to enforce their own zoning laws.

"It's a simple issue of Home Rule," according to state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, and state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset. Their bill to put the location of cellular towers back under the control of the community was admitted Monday to the House of Representative and to the Senate Tuesday.

"I'm a strong Home Rule person," Murray said Wednesday and explained she had the bill drafted in reaction to a Jan. 9 decision by the state Department of Telecommunications and Energy (DTE) to give favorable treatment to the businesses.

"I was absolutely infuriated," Murray said when she heard about the state agency's action. She got 50 co-sponsors to sign the new legislation which is one of several new bills dealing with the cell tower issue.

Murray said she will also support the main bill, H.1894, which was introduced last June by Rep. Angelo Scaccia, D-Boston. The Scaccia bill calls for special permits to be issued before cell towers can be erected in a city or town. Murray said during the second hearing on the Scaccia bill Tuesday, she called for two amendments to the bill. The first amendment would take the cellular radio companies out of the DTE's jurisdiction and make the issue of siting towers subject to local authority. The second would call for local governments to notify abutting cities and towns about pending cellular tower projects.

The legislator also said she saw the situation as one more case of the big bureaucracy in state government giving the local communities a bad deal.

> "The DTE, through an administrative ruling, took control away from the cities and towns."
> —STATE SEN. ROBERT L. HEDLUND

The DTE made it harder for local governments to control the spread of cellular towers. The state agency decided businesses could apply directly to the state for an exemption from local bylaws.

Generally, the DTE decision made it easier for cellular telephone companies to build towers anywhere, even in communities with strict zoning laws. However, it did not say the firms would be automatically allowed to skirt the community authority.

Hedlund also said the DTE took action without holding any public hearings on the question or talking the issues over with lawmakers.

"The DTE, through an administrative ruling, took control away from the cities and towns," Hedlund said.

Hedlund cited two disputes in Scituate and Duxbury over plans to erect towers on Amy's Way and Maple Pond Lane respectively. The senator also said he believes the control over local land use rightfully belongs to the local zoning board.

Though the new bill is being viewed as the best chance to overturn the DTE, Hanover and the City of Marlborough might also mount an appeal directly to the state agency.

Lawmakers were slated to meet this week on the question with industry leaders and representative of the Massachusetts Municipal Association, the lobbyist for the cities and towns.

The MMA has opposed the DTE ruling on the grounds it put local governments at an unfair disadvantage.

Pratt excels as captain of Skippers ship

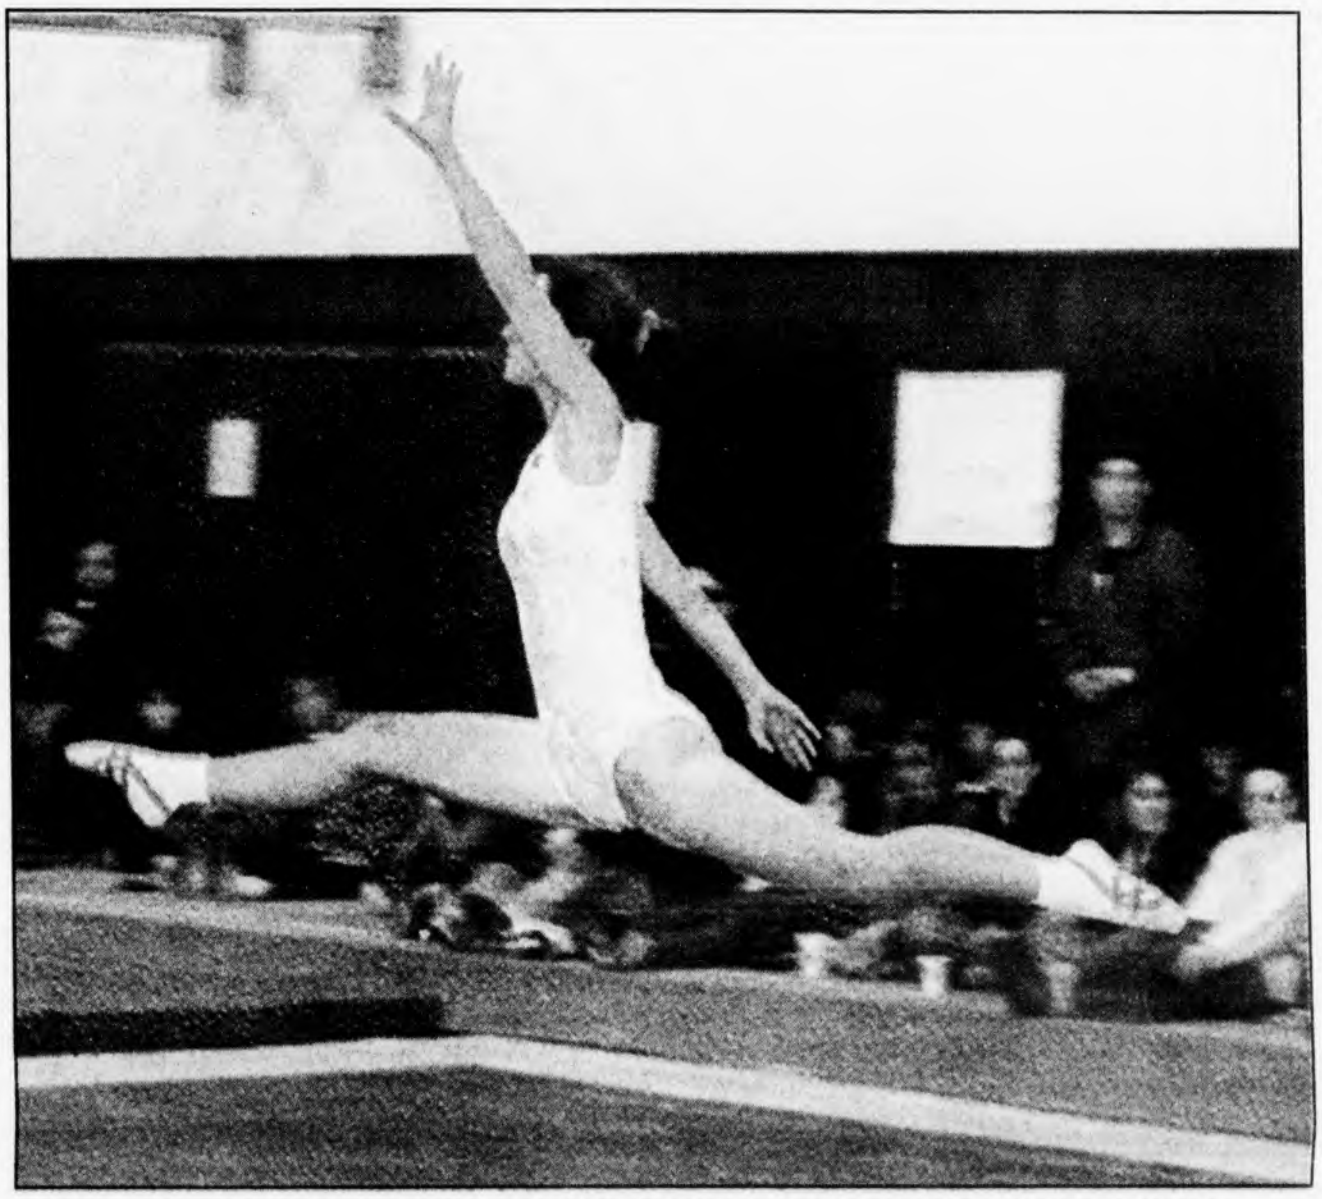
By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

What more could you ask from a team captain?

Carolyn Pratt, for example, was excused from a recent Cohasset High gymnastics team's practice with a slight touch of the flu. But head coach Ruthann Ardizzoni had little doubt her senior captain would be present.

Ardizzoni, after all, has known Pratt since she first started her gymnastics career and has never questioned her character or desire to help the team in any way she could.

"As a captain, on a scale of one to ten, I'd give her a ten," said Ardizzoni, as she kept a close eye on a young gymnast working through her balance beam routine. "In six years Carolyn has probably missed about two practices.



"She's responsible and dependable. Carolyn's just a real good kid. She's Miss Reliable. You can rely on her a consistent score. She's better than she'd ever lead you to believe."

Though Pratt was feeling lousy, Ardizzoni wasn't surprised just how upbeat she was in front of they young gymnasts.

"Carolyn would never let on to any of these kids that anything is going to stop her from competing in a meet."

Pratt is the lone senior on this year's Lady Skippers squad. The 17-year-old has been a member of the varsity team since the seventh grade and has improved steadily, both as a gymnast and team leader.

So far this winter, Pratt's scores on the beam have hovered consistently in the high 7's, after finishing third in the event and making the All-League team last season. On the floor routine earlier this season, Pratt set a personal best of 7.8.

CHS gymnast Carolyn Pratt moves gracefully through her floor exercise routine. Pratt, the senior captain of the team, has been a leader this season both on and off the mats.

Pratt maintains her routines haven't changed much, but rather, she is performing them crisper. Ardizzoni, though, said Pratt's routine are more involved and she has been consistently landing them.

"Carolyn has really developed in maturity, form, grace and style," Ardizzoni said. "There is a higher degree of difficulty in her routines and she is more consistent."

> "Carolyn has really developed in maturity, form, grace and style. There is a higher degree of difficulty in her routines and she is more consistent."

> RUTHANN ARDIZZONI

Gymnastics was the natural sport for Pratt to take up. She first hit the mats as a 6 year old when her older sister, Megan, a former team captain, began taking lessons at the South Shore Community Center. Pratt credits Megan for making a smooth transition to team captain and she relishes working with her younger teammates.

"I always knew what I had to do because I watched Megan and learned from her," Pratt said. "I have so much fun with the younger kids. It can be tough when you have to do your captain stuff and take charge."

Pratt, though, leads more by example than words, but she constantly encourages the younger gymnasts who are more than willing to soak in the tips she gives them.

Eighth-grader Amanda Watts, a second-year member of the varsity squad, said the entire team has a great deal of respect for Pratt and that she has helped her on several occasions.

"Carolyn is talented and very easy to talk to," Watts said. "Sometimes if my form is off she'll help me and show me what I'm doing wrong. After you finish an event, Carolyn gives you a hug and congratulates you. If you don't do well, she tells you always have another chance and not to get upset.

"We all know how much she has done for the team and everyone likes her."

One of the keys to Pratt's success is her positive attitude. She doesn't let herself get too high or low after an event and has the always-important ability to concentrate and focus solely on the event and block out any distractions around her. If she does well, fine. If not, Pratt listens to her own advice and doesn't dwell on it.

"I don't get discouraged, but I do get frustrated when I don't do well," Pratt said. "I try not to put pressure on myself because it just makes things harder that way."

She does admit she'd love to win a fourth team title in five years. The Lady Skippers are currently tied with Hanover in first

Hoopsters drop a tough one to Norwell

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

In a home game last Friday, the Cohasset Skippers (6-11) trounced the Abington Green Waves 77-53. Paced by Paul-Michael Quintin, who popped in 21, the Skippers' balanced scoring attack included Pat Hurley, who totaled 16, and Jamie DeMichele with 15.

Cohasset played very well as a unit, passing and shooting at the right time. Excellent point play from Justin McNamara and Daniel Trowers steered the Skippers to victory.

With a pair of Quintin trifectas and some nifty offense from DeMichele, the home team jumped out to a 21-9 edge. DeMichele was huge at both ends of the floor, rebounding work by Hurley helped Cohasset start their running offense, and wet-blanket defense by Andy Hamilton slowed the Green Wave. A three-point play by Quintin just before the half pushed the Skippers out in front 40-29.

Quintin and Hurley put on a two-man show to start the second half, and Cohasset got help from the bench. Alex Russell, playing only his second game back after a knee injury, forced a prolonged stay on the disabled list, threw himself literally into the game, scoring, rebounding and diving into stands, violently sending a water cooler over backwards.

Eric Wenmark helped the Skippers with their crisp ball movement, and junior guard Paul Hussey got to show his ball handling skills and floor vision, twice feeding Hamilton for baskets. Hamilton had the hot hand, as he netted four points from the Hussey assists and three more from behind the arc. Wenmark tossed in four points and Hussey tallied three to bring the final score to 77-53.

Every activated Cohasset player scored in the game, and Quintin edged

Wrestlers eye Top 20 ranking

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

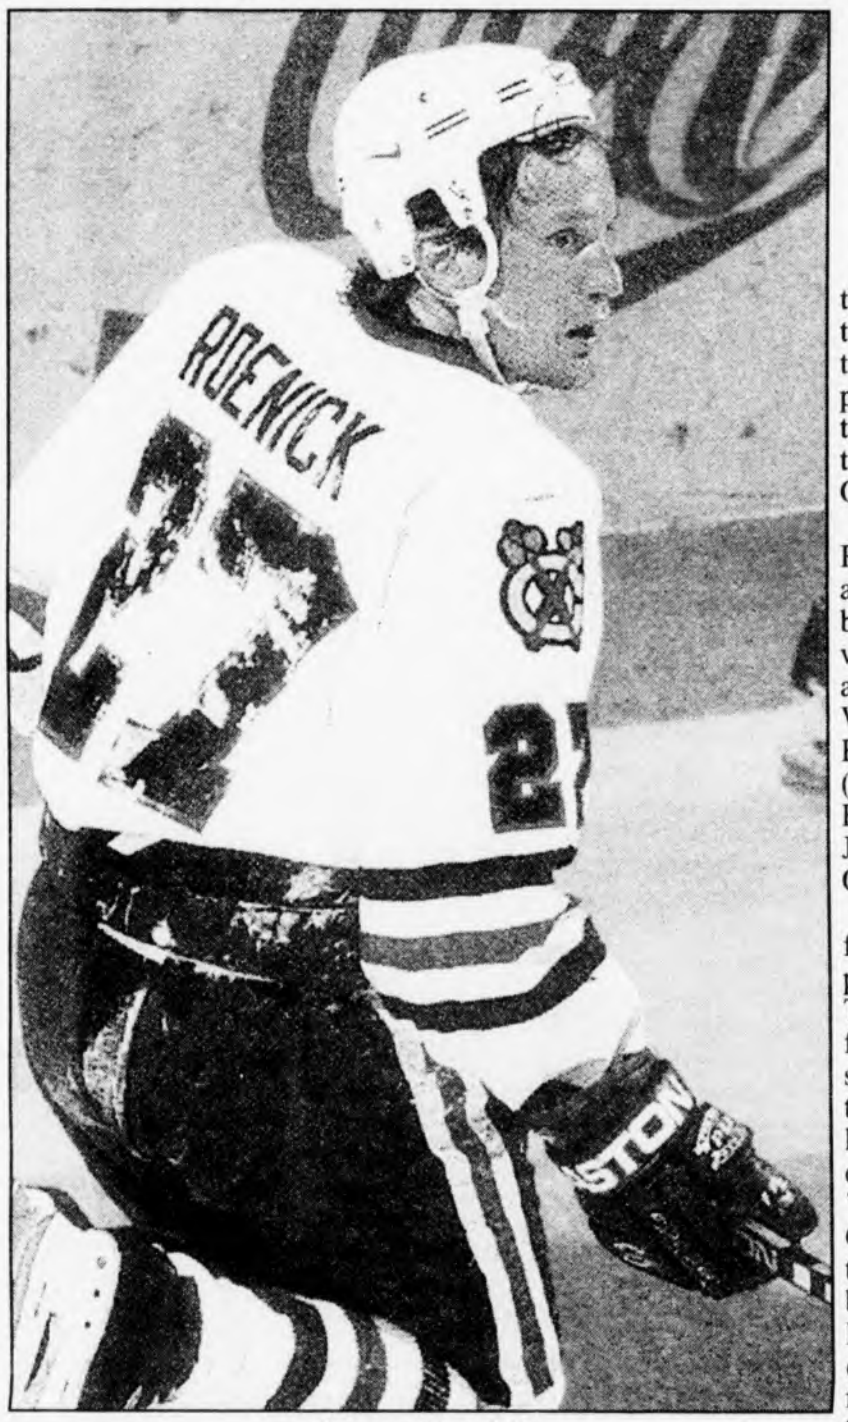
At the beginning of the year CHS wrestling coach Torin Sweeney insisted that the only way his squad would improve on last year's great record was to take an even tougher level of competition this year.

Sitting pretty with a 14-3 record, Sweeney has a reason to smile this week as his squad went up against three teams ranked in the Top 10 in the state and knocked off two, falling only six points away from the triple crown.

Although they are one of the smallest wrestling teams in the state, the grapplers added to their growing reputation as the little team that could by beating #6 Bridgewater-Raynham (40-33) and #10 Winchester by a 32-31 score.

They would fall to #5 Hingham by a score of 36-28.

"This week should move us up some notches in the poll, at least into the top 20 I'd have to think," said Sweeney, who team was ranked 26th out of 144 teams in the state last week.



Sweeney said the victory over Bridgewater-Raynham, a perrenial powerhouse of the mats, was one of the biggest wins in recent memory.

"They are one heck of a strong team, but I though we matched up pretty well against them," said Sweeney. After one of his better wrestlers, Mike Baird, went down to the flu virus at the beginning of the week Sweeney admitted that he didn't expect to take the match.

Team USA dominated by local stars

Amonte, Roenick among ten Mass hockey players in Nagano Olympics

Jeremy Roenick

Tony Amonte

By David McKee
STAFF WRITER

There will be a distinctive Massachusetts accent at the '98 Winter Olympic Games.

Ten Massachusetts men and women hockey players, including Marshfield's Jeremy Roenick of the Phoenix Coyotes and Hingham's Tony Amonte of the Chicago Blackhawks, will skate for Team USA in men's and women's ice hockey when the international competition begins on Feb. 6 in Nagano, Japan.

Roenick, 28, a four-time NHL all-star during the '90s, will pair up with Amonte, 27, an NHL all-star in '98, to lead a talent-laden Team USA as it goes for go for the gold in men's ice hockey against top teams like Canada, Russia, Sweden and Finland.

In addition to Roenick and Amonte, who were once high school linemates at Thayer Academy in Braintree, Team USA also has Waltham's Shawn McEachern (Ottawa Senators), Melrose's Keith Tkachuk (Coyotes) and Wilbraham's Bill Guerin (Edmonton Oilers) on the roster.

In women's ice hockey, the 20-player Team USA has five Massachusetts players, Colleen Coyne of East Falmouth, Vicki Mousessian of Lexington, Laurie Baker of Concord, Sandra Whyte of Saugus and A.J. Mleczko of Nantucket. (Women's ice hockey joins snowboarding and curling as first-time events at the '98 Winter Olympics.)

And while figure skating tends to draw the highest TV ratings in the USA, men's ice hockey will be the most intriguing event for sports fans because professional players are competing in the Olympics for the first time.

NHL officials, following the lead of the NBA and its success with the '92 Olympics "Dream Team," is taking a three-week break in the regular season to allow its top players to skate for their home countries in the Olympics.

That means Roenick, Amonte and the other members of Team USA will go for the gold against players like Wayne Gretzky and Eric Lindros (Canada), Pavel Bure (Russia) and Jaromir Jagr (the Czech team).

As it turned out, five of the 23 NHL players chosen for Team USA hail from Massachusetts. State-wide, there are 17 athletes who have qualified for the '98 Olympic Games. Included in that group is Pembroke speed skater Eric Flaim, who is competing in his fourth Olympic Games. Both Roenick and Amonte are competing in their first Olympics. However, each has vast experience in international hockey.

Roenick starred for the silver medal winning USA team in the '91 Canada Cup while Amonte scored the game-winning goal for the USA in the '96 World Cup.

In that '96 World Cup final, the underdog Team USA and coach Ron Wilson upset highly favored Canada in the finals. That international win has led to speculation that Team USA could repeat the gold medal performance of the '80 "Miracle on Ice" USA hockey team.

Amonte cannot wait for the Olympics to begin later this week. He is especially pleased that Wilson is coaching.

"It was a lot of fun playing for Ron (at the World Cup)," Amonte told ESPN. "We had such great guys and the whole team really seemed close. Ron was a players coach and a lot of fun to play for."

Last summer Amonte was asked by the Mariner why so many talented hockey players come from Eastern Mass.

"There are so many great youth programs in the area and kids learn to play the sport the right way at an early age," he said. "It's just a great hockey area."

In that same interview, Amonte expressed interest in playing for the '98 Olympic USA Olympic team. (At the time, NHL officials were still debating the issue.)

"It would be great if the NHL could work out something with the schedule because it would be great for the sport if all the top players could compete against each other with the whole world watching," he said. "Could you imagine the level of play? It would be incredible."

Apparently, NHL officials listened to Amonte and other players and hammered out an Olympian arrangement to promote the game on the international stage.

Roenick is expected to be one of the top guns for Team USA in Nagano. He leads the team with three 100-point NHL seasons and joins Brett Hull as the only players with more than one 50-goal season.

Several years ago, Roenick, who was then playing for the Chicago Blackhawks, expressed some concerns in an interview with the Mariner about playing the Olympics during the NHL season.

"I think it's a great idea in theory, but it's a long enough hockey season already," he said. "But if something could be worked out for the players, I would support it."

> "I think it's a great idea in theory, but it's a long enough hockey season already," he said. "But if something could be worked out for the players, I would support it."
> JEREMY ROENICK

Both Roenick and Amonte began their hockey careers playing youth hockey on the rinks of the South Shore. In high school, they skated together at Thayer Academy.

After high school graduation, Roenick was selected in the first-round of the NHL draft by the Chicago Blackhawks and played his first professional game in the '88-'89 season. In his fourth year, he scored 53 goals. He added 50 the next season and was on his way to NHL superstardom. Along the way, "JR" guided the Blackhawks to the NHL Stanley Cup finals. Roenick is known for his fast skating, creativity with the puck and his ability to take the body.

> "It would be great if the NHL could work out something with the schedule because it would be great for the sport if all the top players could compete against each other with the whole world watching. Could you imagine the level of play? It would be incredible."
> TONY AMONTE

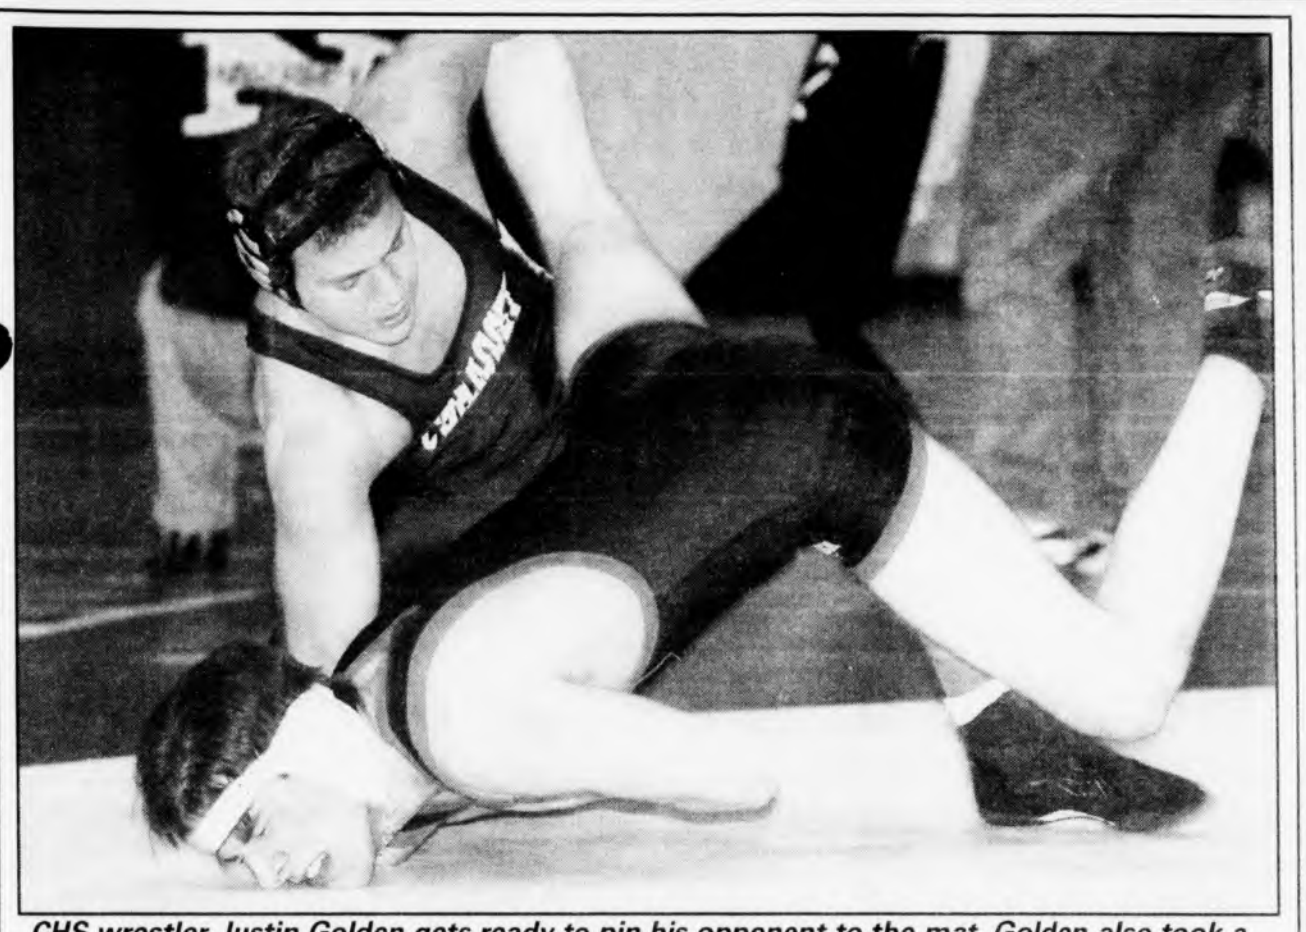
"When I was young I always worked on my skating," Roenick told the Mariner several years ago. "Too many young players today just do puck work and that isn't enough. You have to develop your skating because everything flows from that."

Roenick left Chicago two years ago to play for the Phoenix Coyotes.

As for Amonte, he received a scholarship to Boston University after graduating from Thayer and helped the Terriers win several Beanpot championships before he left school to join the New York Rangers in '91. He signed on with the Rangers only two days after the Terriers lost the NCAA championship in double OT to Western Michigan.

In the '93-'94 season he was traded to Chicago and his career began to really blossom as he became a vital cog for the Blackhawks. Last year Amonte netted 41 goals for the Blackhawks and emerged as one of America's top forwards.

Ever superstitious on the ice, Amonte refused to trim his hair last season during his goal scoring streak. By the end of the year his hair reached the middle of his back.



Like Roenick, Amonte's is known for his fast-skating and soft touch in the scoring zone. And with the larger international rink in Nagano, there will be more room for players like Roenick and Amonte to strut their stuff.

However, Tony may not even be the best athlete in his family. His younger sister Kelly was a soccer and lacrosse All-American at the University of Maryland and led the Lady Terps to back-to-back NCAA Division I lacrosse championships during her junior and senior years. Many lacrosse fans consider Kelly "the Michael Jordan" of her sport.

But if hockey fans want to watch Roenick and Amonte in action from Nagano over the next few weeks, they better buy some No-Doze.

With the ten-hour time difference (2 p.m. in Japan is midnight our time) USA hockey fans will have to stay up late to watch Roenick and Amonte in action during the Feb. 6 to Feb. 22 Olympic Games. CBS plans to air the hockey games live on late night television.

More than 2,400 athletes from 72 countries will compete in 14 different sports ranging from Alpine skiing and bobsledding to figure skating and ski jumping in Nagano.

"Without Mike available to wrestle, things did look a little bit bleak, but the team pulled together and made it happen," he said. "They wrestled up to the level of the competition."

Craig Sheerin won his match by pin and Chris Pratt on points to put the Skippers up 10-0, but B-R roared back with 29 straight points to go ahead 29-10.

From there, the Skippers rolled off five straight pins from Ben Littauer, Mike Rossi, Kevin DeVito, Justin Golden and Luke Caldwell to put the win away.

Golden and Caldwell were each moved up a weight class by Sweeney for the B-R match and they came away with an important 12 points..

"To move up a weight class and win is great, but to do it by pin is just that more amazing," said Sweeney. "Everyone from top to bottom did a great job."

place after splitting their two meets. Both teams have one loss.

"In seventh grade I was just out there to have fun," Pratt said. "Now that we're in the running for a championship there's more pressure, but it's always fun.

"You have to like what you're doing and want to do it well. Otherwise you're not going to succeed." As talented as the Lady Skippers are, Pratt said it is Ardizzoni who should be credited for the majority of their success. "We'd be good because we have some really good kids on the team," Pratt said. "But with Ruthann as our coach, we're that much better. She always tells us what we did wrong, and what we did right. She is very constructive, though, and is a great motivator." Pratt expects this to be her final gymnastics season, but hasn't ruled out the idea of continuing to coach. She is currently a coach at the community center, teaching beginners and traveling classes, ranging in age from 6 to 10 years The job is a satisfying one for Pratt. She remembers just how grateful she was for Ardizzoni's guidance when she was a little girl getting started.

"It's good to know I'm able to pass on what I know and I'm able to teach them," Pratt said. "I know that there was someone there for me when I started."

This winter marks the season Pratt has come full circle. She knows she has nothing to lose by going out and trying to nail every routine. Pratt has fun with the sport, but that hardly takes away from her competitiveness once a meet gets under way.

Experience tells Pratt that's the time to concentrate and do what she does best.

that much closer to the magical 1,000-point mark.

On Tuesday, the Skippers suffered a heartbreaking overtime loss to the Norwell Clippers. Cohasset battled bravely however, with the knowledge that they are now one loss away from being ineligible for the state tournament. Quintin was heroic, pouring in a titanic 38 points on the road against a tough Clipper squad.

Cohasset led by 17 at the half, but were greeted by a 20-point Norwell run to start the second half. To their credit, however, the Skippers battled back, pulling within a mere three points with three seconds left. Predictably, the ball went to the money man and, almost as predictably, Quintin drained his trademark trey, sending the game into overtime and setting the stage for a possible dramatic upset.

However, it was not to be. Despite a back and forth overtime period, Cohasset trailed by another three, this time with only a fraction of a second left. Hamilton's desperation heave was off the mark, making the final score 87-84, and Cohasset found themselves one game shy of elimination.

Quintin was pleased with the game his team played, however.

"We played the best basketball we've played all year in that first half. We came out a little sluggish in the second and Norwell played really well. But, we were able to stop their run and answer with one of our own."

Coach Ron Ford emphasized that his goal was not necessarily the tournament, but "playing the best basketball we can play. I'm proud of our guys. We're playing really hard.

They could have packed their bags when we were at 3-9, but they come to play every night and haven't packed it in.

"Stranger things have happened. But, we'd have to really turn it on to get a couple of big upsets to make the tournament."

Quintin now lies merely six points shy of the millennium mark, a milestone which he will most likely reach Friday night when the Skippers host the Rockland Bulldogs.

Remembering the Blizzard of '78

Town escaped major damage

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

In the memories of long-time Cohasset residents, the Great Blizzard did more than swaddle the town from street to steeple in a thick blanket of snow. The storm also moved familiar things out of their regular places. Sometimes the results were kind of surreal, but most of the time it was kind of fun.

"The fishing fleet and all the moorings landed up in the meadow," said Cliff Dickson.

"The water came up Nichols Road, and the water came up Jerusalem Road. We were suddenly living on an island at the corner," said Barbara Donahue.

"My son Paul skied down Main Street three or four days after the storm," said Jacqueline Dormitzer. She also remembered huge icicles about the size or carrots that did not melt for weeks and eventually, when the electricity came back on watching the governor on television.

"Dukakis would appear on the television in his sweater," she said. "I don't remember being in a power outage for very long," she said. "But school was out for a week, and everything came to a halt."

The Red Cross is remembering the Great Blizzard with a ball in Quincy Friday night, Alfred Odermatt said. The American Red Cross Blizzard Ball is set for Feb. 6 at 6:30 p.m. at The Neighborhood Club, 27 Glendale Road in Quincy.

The actual snowstorm arrived late in Cohasset, according to Dormitzer who remembered the trouble did not start until the afternoon of Feb. 6, 1978. When it was over, Cohasset was under mountains of snow, buried as deep as 15 feet in some places, due to drifts.

"I just remember it started in the afternoon," Dormitzer said.

She was in the same situation as a lot of other women whose husbands worked in the city, she said.

"I was nervous about my husband driving home from Cambridge," she said. "A lot of cars got stranded."

Dormitzer said her husband got back to their house around 9 p.m. But he spent hours in traffic. Cars crept along the expressway at speeds that did not top five miles per hour. The road conditions cleared up near the Route 3 exit at Braintree, however. After the initial scare, the rest of the declared emergency were pretty much a pleasure for the family, Dormitzer said.

Dormitzer was able to get home because he was going from Boston towards Cohasset. The road problems in the afternoon and early evening were worst for people who tried to drive in the other direction —away from Cohasset, said Red Cross volunteer Alfred Odermatt.

Bloodmobile

Odermatt was working in the Blood Mobile the day of the blizzard. They didn't realize how serious the storm would be until late in the afternoon, he said.

"About 3 p.m. they were telling us about all the trouble they were having in Boston," Odermatt said. "But we didn't pay too much attention."

By the time the Blood Mobile closed, after 6 p.m., it was too late for some of the Red Cross nurses to get back to their homes out of town.

"We were mobile in Cohasset until late that night, but it was getting out of Cohasset that was impossible," Odermatt said.

Corinne Cahill was a volunteer nurse that day with the Blood Mobile. She also remembered three of the nurses that night had to turn around and drive back to Cohasset, due to the road conditions.

"We stayed open until about 7:30 p.m. because we had so many donors," Cahill said.

Cahill was able to get home since she lived close by on South Main Street.

"I was the only one at my end of South Main Street with a gas stove and a gas heater," Cahill said.

She spent the next few days scheduling cooking and washing time for her neighbors. Everyone was at least able to cook and take a bath, she said.

Despite the inconvenience, Cahill also remembered the Great Blizzard as mostly fun.

"The children thought it was fun," she said. "We have a hill across the street, and the children made a ski jump. There was enough snow to build one."

Cahill also recalled the spectacular scenes of bare tree branches encased in ice and sparkling like rainbows when the sun was reflected in the natural prisms.

"It was cold and wet and then the sun came out," Cahill said. "It was so spectacular and something you don't see often."

spared them the hardship of not being able to get someone in to care for him. The nurse also shared her husband's penchant for jigsaw puzzles, and the two had a contest in the garden room to see who would finish the puzzle first.

Reardon said overall the blizzard turned out to be a "very peaceful and lovely time" since the neighbors on West Gate Lane all shared with each other.

of 54 in New England, 29 dead in Massachusetts. Barbara Donahue, also a Red Cross volunteer, saw some of the worst damage in Hull near Black Rock Beach.

"The waves came in and swept the homes out to sea," Donahue said. "People lost everything."

Donahue had a four-wheel drive Chevrolet and was able to make the trip days from her home to the Red Cross office in Hull. She handed out vouchers for food and clothing.

Donahue's house in Cohasset was at the corner of two streets that were under several feet of water. She and her family said being "islanders" for a week was "sort of fun," especially since her house was up on a rock.

"It's been there since 1895, and nothing was going to blow it away. Not even the blizzard of '78," Donahue said.

But some Cohasset people did have to leave their homes.

Cliff Dickson was a firefighter and the Red Cross disaster coordinator in 1978. Dickson said when the waves swept over Sandy Beach, the people who lived there had to evacuate, and he needed a row boat to get them out.

"It was the only way we could get to them," Dickson said.

Despite the wild weather and the churning seas, Dickson said he was a water man all his life and was not scared. Moreover, he doubted the women he took in his boat were scared either.

"They're hardy," he said.

Well Rock Cottage over the border in Minot was reduced to kindling by hurricane force winds and crashing waves during the Blizzard of '78. Cohasset was lucky to escape major damage.

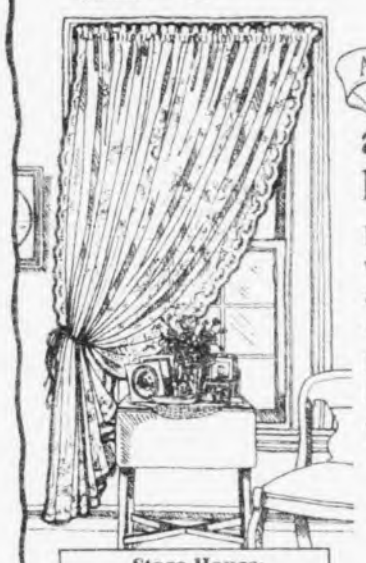
Ann Reardon was the blood drive chairwoman that day, and she took one of the stranded nurses home.

"It was supposed to be for overnight," she said. "I didn't know it would last seven day, but it all worked out beautifully."

Reardon said her husband's elderly father needed nursing care daily. Having the nurse there



"One fellow had snowshoes, and he brought food back from downtown," she said. "All the neighbors got together and traded. We really had a wonderful time."

Spared damage

Cohasset was spared the property damage that some neighboring communities such as Scituate and Hull suffered. It was also a deadly storm that claimed the lives

Mitigation committee wants to hire a consultant

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The Greenbush Mitigation Committee is feeling pressured by the imminent deadline ending the environmental review of the Greenbush Railroad project. The environmental review is scheduled to end in a few months.

Committee members are concerned that the environmental review will end without the MBTA responding to all of Cohasset's concerns. Some committee members are particularly worried about the possible health impacts of diesel fumes from the locomotives on the line.

The mitigation committee has decided to interview a large number of consultants with the intent of hiring one for $10,000. But the committee has no money and cannot hire a consultant. Committee members are hopeful that they can gain support at town meeting to set aside funds for a consultant.

The committee was scheduled to meet last night (Feb. 4) after the Mariner went to press.

Selectman and committee member Diane Sullivan is especially in favor of a consultant.

"We did the best we could on the walk-through as lay people, but that was based on our visual inspection," Sullivan said. "I am deeply concerned that we don't fairly represent the town because we don't have the expertise. We don't even know the proper mitigation because we don't have a consultant to explain the details."

> "Before we hire a consultant we should contact other towns and see what they did. It's a free resource and we should use that before a paid source."
> SELECTMAN RONNIE MCMORRIS.

Sullivan said she was concerned over air quality issues related to diesel locomotives chugging through Cohasset.

Committee member Marty Corey also expressed anger at the MBTA for trying to examine emissions statewide, rather than just on the train line.

"I don't want Cohasset to take the hit on diesel emissions for the benefit of the commonwealth," Corey said.

Part of the problem is that little is known about the effects of diesel emissions on humans.

"The jury is still out on the effects of particulates on people," Dick said.

Mitigation Committee Chairman Tom Gruber said he thought the town should focus on less ephemeral items.

"My gut feeling is if you look at air quality after the train, Cohasset will fare much better than other towns because we have little added impact from trucks," Gruber said.

But Dick said the committee had to do everything in its power to examine the effects of diesel emissions.

"This committee has to face the people and say we did everything we could, and we can't say that on air quality issues," Dick said.

Committee members agreed that under ideal conditions, the town should hire a consultant to explain the proper way to mitigate the impacts of noise, air pollution and vibrations. Sullivan complained that town officials don't know what the impacts of vibrations will be on one type of house versus another. But a consultant might know.

"The feeling here is that everything needs to be done for the people in the community," said Selectman Ronnie McMorris at the group's last meeting, Jan. 21. "If that means $10,000 for a consultant, then that's what it means."

Selectman Nan Roth wanted to know if the town could hire an all-in-one consultant to address all mitigation issues related to Greenbush

McMorris suggested calling other towns which may have hired consultants to examine the effects of new commuter rail service.

"Before we hire a consultant we should contact other towns and see what they did," McMorris said. "It's a free resource and we should use that before a paid source."

Corey agreed to talk with several firms and get an idea of what kinds of services are available and at what cost. Corey said the town could use that information to draft a request for proposals seeking consultants.

If a consultant is approved, the committee will have to figure out a way to raise money to pay the individual or firm.

"Finding money is the big problem," Gruber said.

Sullivan and Gruber have met twice with the five towns affected by Greenbush to look at air quality. The five-town coalition was meant to find areas of common interest and work together to share costs and resources.

But the coalition got bogged down by disagreements over how to approach air quality issues. Gruber wanted to hire a consultant to first examine the scientifically documented effects of diesel emissions on people.

Hingham Greenbush coordinator Alexander Macmillan favored first recording the amount of diesel particulates emitted by the trains, then looking at the health effects.

The coalition has not yet hired a consultant to examine air quality issues.

Opposition mounts to proposal for septic systems

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

A small but vocal group of residents is unhappy with the latest plans to implement an on-site waste-water management plan in certain environmentally sensitive areas of town.

An agreement between the town and the state — known as the Second Final Amended Judgment for Agreement — forces certain homeowners to submit to mandatory septic system inspections and possible repairs or replacements.

Town officials met with an assistant attorney general on Monday to discuss certain aspects of the agreement. Health board member Kevin Ulmer said part of the discussion focused on implementation of the agreement and concerns of residents in the priority districts.

Members of the board of health, the sewer commission and the board of selectmen attended the meeting, although not enough members from any one board to constitute a quorum of the individual boards.

Several residents have also complained to the attorney general's office that the agreement is unfair and should be reexamined.

Carbon monoxide detectors are a must, fire chief says

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

If Fire Chief Roger Lincoln has his way then every house in town will be equipped with carbon monoxide detectors.

He is proposing a new by-law that would require carbon monoxide detectors be installed before a house could be sold. Smoke detectors are already required.

Carbon monoxide detectors cost about $40 and should be installed near bedrooms where people are the most vulnerable, Lincoln explained.

They are installed typically on a wall in the hallway.

Lincoln said the fire department responds to a significant number of incidents of carbon monoxide poisoning.

He said incidents are on the rise because of better storm

Student defends reputation at school board meeting

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

The controversy about three student athletes, who were arrested Dec. 29 for carrying beer, surfaced again at the school board meeting. Michael Rossi objected to some conclusions board members apparently drew at their Jan. 22 meeting about the honesty of two student athletes.

Though the board did not name either of the two students, Rossi said he was one of them.

He also said everybody in town knew it.

Rossi said everyone knew he had been arrested, since his name was previously listed in the Mariner's Police Log that chronicled the Dec. 29 arrests. The 17-year old and two other student

COHASSET'S WEEK

Green crosswalks not a certainty

On the recommendation of the traffic study committee, selectmen are considering painting the village crosswalks green similar to the ones in Hingham Square.

Not all selectmen are enthusiastic about the idea, however.

Selectman Diane Sullivan said the green "looks pretty tough" when it starts to fade and said the painting would have to be kept up.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said she felt the traffic committee needed to do more leg work before making recommendations and seek more input from abutters and other townspeople.

Selectman Merle Brown, who sits on the traffic committee, agreed to ask the committee to do some research to see if green is acceptable.

Advisory committee chairman Roger Whitely said his board voted against painting the crosswalks green when the subject came up five years ago.

"We didn't want green, we thought it would look awful," he said.

DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield said it will cost $4,526 for the necessary paint and crosswalk signs and posts for 21 crosswalks in the village and common area and for those by the schools.

"We could end up with a lot of green," Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan said.

Plans are to install signs at either side of the crosswalks alerting motorists they must stop for pedestrians. The signs would be similar to the one at the crosswalk in front of the library. The Common Historic Districts Commission must be asked for input on the signs placed in the common area, Litchfield said.

Drainage projects to get underway

Selectmen agreed to recommend spending $30,000 from free cash for the drainage projects at Beach and Beechwood streets. Town Manager Mark Haddad said DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield wants to complete these projects during the summer instead of the fall when weather might present a problem. Plans were to ask for the money at the fall town meeting.

50/50 sewer article backed

Selectmen agreed this week to place an article on the annual town meeting warrant asking the town to pay 50 percent of the North Cohasset sewer project. If the article is approved, funding would be contingent on an override. It is not clear if the override question could be placed on the town election ballot because of timing issues. If it can't, a special override election would have to be called. Town Manager Mark Haddad said he would look into the matter and report back to the board. The North Cohasset project is $2.7 million over budget. If successful, the debt exclusion override would put half the cost of the increase on the tax base adding about $17 a year to the real estate tax bill of a home valued at $330,000.

Cohasset could warm to Scituate pool plan

Presentation to neighboring towns scheduled

By Jennifer R. Horan
STAFF WRITER

A Scituate effort to build a community recreation complex with an indoor swimming pool and ice rink has attracted interest from Cohasset.

Cohasset officials have taken notice and have asked representatives of Scituate's Citizens' Recreation Action Group (CRAG) to share their recreational vision at their March 16 selectmen's meeting. The town of Norwell has also invited CRAG to make a presentation March 18.

"There seems to be some regional interest out there," said Ralph Crossen, founder of CRAG. "We'll see if there's some serious interest there."

Members of CRAG have been working on a proposal for a 100,000-square-foot facility on a 20-acre town-owned parcel off Route 3A at Mann Lot Road.

While Scituate residents would be the targeted membership, the proposed facility would also be open to neighboring towns, said Crossen. Any type of membership "deal-making" arrangement between Scituate and other interested communities would be at the discretion of the Scituate selectmen, he said.

"The interest still seems very high because there's a need for it," Crossen said.

In Cohasset, a year-round swimming pool had been on residents' wish list but is now on the back burner.

"The concern is that youngsters don't have a lot of recreational outlets," Joe McElroy, a school committee member who had been working on the project. "There's next to nothing to do in town. It's not a good situation."

The Cohasset Swim Center pool off Sohier Street is quiet this time of year. Plans to enclose it have been put on hold. In the meantime, Scituate is thinking of building an indoor pool and ice rink.

> – JOSEPH MCELROY, WINDY HILL ROAD.

A proposal to enclose the Cohasset Swim Center off Sohier Street has been put on hold for the time being, he said.

Several other "big ticket items" on the town's tax horizon — including school building and sewerage projects — have prevented volunteers from asking residents to pay for a pool project as well, McElroy said.

The project, which would have entailed converting the summer-only pool to a year-round facility, has been estimated at $1.2 million.

"With all the other demands on people's generosity, it would be difficult to achieve right now," McElroy said.

McElroy said he would be open-minded to an arrangement with the Scituate group if the project comes to fruition.

"I'm interested in hearing if the dues will be attractive," he said.

After studying membership rates at nearby health clubs and recreation centers, Crossen said asking for a $500 family membership fee did not seem unreasonable. Membership fees have not been finalized, but CRAG has discussed charging Scituate residents less for use of the facility.

CRAG members are hoping that the Scituate recreation complex — estimated at $8 million to $10 million — can be built at no cost to taxpayers and paid for through user fees.

"I am absolutely convinced that the general area will support a year-round swimming pool," McElroy said. "The first town that makes it happen will have excellent leverage to establish a membership schedule that is advantageous to its residents. I'd rather have a pool in Scituate than no pool at all."

CRAG's plan includes a 25-yard indoor swimming pool and aquatics leisure center with water slides and hot tubs, a regulation-size indoor ice skating rink, a gymnasium, a health club, a day care center, offices for the town's recreation department and possibly an indoor soccer/lacrosse facility. Athletic fields surrounding the complex are also part of the proposal.

CRAG members are currently reviewing feasibility analysis proposals submitted by three companies; two more companies are expected to submit and a decision on which company will conduct the report will be made in about 10 days, Crossen said. The feasibility analysis, which will be paid for through privately raised funds, will help CRAG determine what scope, if any, the project should take.

In Scituate, the selectmen, the school committee and the recreation commission have expressed their support for the project.

New village sidewalk takes step forward

By Jason Bouffard and Mary Ford
STAFF WRITERS

Local architect Jim Shipsky, a Cohasset resident, gave a dress rehearsal of his vision of a remodeled area along South Main Street to the Village Revitalization Task Force last week. The practice paid off.

On opening night before selectmen Monday, he earned figurative applause as the board backed the $130,000 state grant proposal to pay for constructing the brick sidewalk.

Plans are to construct a brick sidewalk along North Main from its intersection with Jason Long Road to Elm Street.

The plan calls for removal of a portion of the outcropping of ledge below St. Stephen's Church to clear space for the sidewalk and lighting.

While this would require some blasting, Shipsky said any structures within 250 feet of the blast sites would be scrutinized by a surveyor to be sure no damage would be sustained during blasting.

The planters in front of the teen center would also be removed to allow space for the sidewalk which would vary in width but be a minimum of four-feet wide at its narrowest point. A new handicap-accessible entrance would be added to the teen center building.

The crosswalk that goes from Cohasset Hardware to Lilac House Antiques would be cut in half to 60 feet as the sidewalk area widens and extends into Elm Street. That change would make the turn at Elm and North Main more of a hard right. Currently Elm Street "merges" into North Main Street.

The sidewalk is the first step in a plan to revitalize the village area by improving its appearance.

No money for paramedic service

Program to start through attrition

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The town is going to take the slow road toward paramedic service.

Selectmen refused to back spending money to train two firefighters to become paramedics. They opted instead to move toward providing the service by requiring that any newly hired firefighters be trained paramedics as a condition of employment.

Town Manager Mark Haddad and Fire Chief Roger Lincoln hoped to get selectmen to agree to spend about $30,000 to jump start the service by training two men in fiscal year 1999, which starts July 1.

Currently the town uses the Advanced Life Support service through South Shore Hospital. When paramedic service is needed the fire department calls the ALS service that meets the ambulance en route to the hospital.

Lincoln said it would save time and eventually money for the town to provide its own paramedic service.

"It's 12 miles to South Shore Hospital. The time it takes to get there varies depending on traffic and the weather," Lincoln said.

Lincoln said having a paramedic on hand increases survivability rates.

It would cost the town $5,000 a year to equip the ambulance and to have paramedics renew their certification.

Lincoln said about eight firefighters have asked to sign up for the training.

But as it stands now they will have to pay for their own training.

Selectman Diane Sullivan said while providing the service is a laudable goal, she said the town can't afford to spend the money at this time.

Selectmen Nan Roth and Ronnie McMorris backed spending the money to start the service. They were out voted by Selectmen Merle Brown, Michael Sullivan and Diane Sullivan who want the program started gradually through attrition.

Five fighters will retire over the next few years, Lincoln said.

Cohasset Fire department overtime reported

Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said the fire department spent $5,311,14 in overtime last month including $3201.42 in call backs; $1,498.98 in sick leave; $211.53 for training and $399.21 for the mechanic.

The fire department overtime budget for fiscal year 1998 which ends June 30 is $120,182. Lincoln said there a balance of $14,658.71 remaining in the account.

Ambulance billing update

The fire department billed for 34 ambulance transports last month for a total of $12,137.87. During the same period, the department collected $8,973.69 for ambulance service. So far this year, the fire department has collected $64,545,81 out of a possible $79,257.27. Amounts collected can also be applied to prior year's bills. Over the past five years, the town's collection rate has ranged from 90 to 98 percent.

Special education reform bill put on hold for a year

By Adrianne Appel
STAFF WRITER

Special education advocates breathed a sigh of relief following a vote Monday by the Education Committee to hold off making major changes in the state's special education program for at least one year.

The bill was the result of months of study by a specially appointed commission. A Jan. 20 public hearing on the proposed bill saw 12 hours of highly emotional testimony by parents, advocates and administration officials. Officials, including Acting Gov. Paul Cellucci, argued that special education benefits are so rich, they are sapping resources from regular education students.

Nonetheless, parents and others had earlier expressed alarm that services to their special needs children could be reduced if the bill is passed. They have said that even with the high benefit standard, they have had to fight for basic educational necessities, such as large print books, computers and wheelchair ramps.

"Parents have been working tirelessly on this issue," said Julia Landau of the Massachusetts Advocacy Center, which represents parents of disabled children. She said she was pleased with the outcome Monday.

After considerable debate, the committee voted Monday to retain the current level of benefits for special education children for at least one year while the issue is studied. Meantime, the bill's future is quite uncertain. It is now in the House Ways and Means Committee, but it could die in committee, due to a turf war between the House and Senate leadership.

Observers said the possibility that the bill may die in Ways and Means is great, not because of the substance of the bill, but because of an ensuing turf war between the Senate and House Speaker Thomas Finneran, D-Mattapan.

Finneran has been very vocal about his desire to reform special education. He was instrumental in forming the special commission. He also appointed Rep. Lida Harkins, D-Needham to chair the committee. She drafted the reform bill, but the bill reflected Finneran's interests on the issue.

> "If we can't explain what the change means how in God's name can we represent to the people of Massachusetts that this is the right thing to do."
> —SEN. ROBERT ANTONIONI, D-LEOMINSTER, CO-CHAIRMAN OF THE EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

Harkins was not pleased with the vote to amend the bill Monday.

"Studying it for a year kills the bill," Harkins said following the vote. "Special education will stay the same. We tried to help communities and towns."

On Monday, Harkins' bill was heavily amended before it passed 10-1, with five votes outstanding.

Harkins had proposed moving to the federal standard of "free and appropriate education," which is considered a lower standard even by those who back it. Proponents argue, however, that the federal standard, used by a majority of states, will not harm special education children and also is a more realistic goal for Massachusetts public schools to attain. Moreover, many, including Rep. Harold Lane, chairman of the House Education Committee, have criticized the state's standard of providing "maximum feasible services" as too rich and unfair to regular education students.

"Many of you, like myself, have received heartbreaking phone calls from parents. But I have heard nothing to convince me that this bill would harm special education children," said Rep. Harold Lane, D-Hold[illegible] House chair of the Education Committee.

The House and Senate education committee leadership were split on the question. While Lane backed the bill, state Sen. Robert Antonioni, D-Leominster, co-chairman of the Education Committee, offered the amendment to water it down.

"If we can't explain what the change means how in God's name can we represent to the people of Massachusetts that this is the right thing to do," Antonioni said.

"The committee has little or no information on the impact of this [proposed] switch," said Antonioni, who offered the amendment to retain the state standard.

The bill was also amended to allow low-income parents of special education children to receive free second opinions concerning their children's education.

Another amendment calls for re-instating widespread reading assistance programs for regular education children, which was cut back during the 1980s. Possibly as many as 40 percent of regular education students need extra help learning to read, Harkins said. Without services, they have looked to special education programs for help.

Questions remain about special education reform

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

After Beacon Hill legislators applied the brakes to special education reform Monday, the reaction was quiet in Cohasset.

Town Administrator Mark Haddad had urged state legislators to support the reform bill. His letter followed the recommendations of the Massachusetts Municipal Association, the lobbyist for the cities and towns. The MMA also supported an amendment to increase state aid to local communities, consistent with school superintendent Stephen Hart's views.

Wednesday Haddad had no comment on the bill's standing. But the MMA's point man John Robertson said the lobby was viewing the lawmakers' decision to postpone reforms as a defeat.

"The MMA supported the bill and a move to federal standards right away," he said.

Robertson also said the MMA was disappointed with the outcome Monday and doubted lawmakers after a year of study would find out "anything they don't already know."

Schools superintendent Stephen Hart said he was unsure whether the one year study was good or bad but thought the issue overall was emotional for many parents.

"A lot of parents thought they had a potential for losing services," Hart said.

Nonetheless, Hart said he was mainly worried about a financial blow, due to sections of the bill that proposed changes in the state funding formula. Hart said Cohasset now receives minimal state funding. Though the proposed changes would give the district more state aid, the extra dollars would still not stretch far enough to keep red ink out of the budget. The community needs greater relief than this bill provided, the superintendent said.

Hart said this year's budget for special education tuitions has jumped by 50 percent. Overall, the district will spend roughly $1.4 million to provide special education, counting the dollars for aides and teachers with special education certificates at school..

"We were mainly concerned about the funding situation and requested our representatives support an increase in funding for special education," he said

With a total public school enrollment hovering below the 1,200 mark, Cohasset is too small to do hold down out-of-district special education costs.

The town spent roughly $200,000 this year to educate only four students who needed to be sent away to live at school. Yet the practice of sending some children out of the district may in fact be more cost effective than establishing similar programs within the public school system.

While this figure represents an average of $65,000 spent for each child attending an out-of-district program, it is a small percentage of the school department's $7 million budget.

The state association of schools superintendents had earlier proposed the changes in the special education law, due to worries about the dwindling funds left to teach regular education students. Since special education programs are mandated under existing state laws, school districts have been forced to make special needs students top priority.

Hart discussed the issue Jan. 22 before the school committee. As proposed, the reforms probably would have affected the school department's budget by roughly 1/2 of one percent, he said.

The superintendent suggested special education questions could be skewed, due to the small size of the school district. Hart said the reform would benefit big school districts. Cohasset would probably benefit but not by much.

"We're small," Hart said. "It's hard to make long-term projections."

Hart said substantial special education money was spent in regular classrooms. But the reform bill addressed only the funds spread over three different types of categories:

- private day school tuitions;
- in-district or Collaborative programs;
- out-of-district residential tuitions.

The reform bill would have provided state aid for all three categories. But it also would have reduced the state's share of the out-of-district residential tuitions. Next year, for instance, Cohasset expects to place three students in residential schools. Under the existing arrangement, the state paid half the bill for them, while Cohasset paid the other $99,213.

Under the reform bill provisions, the state would have paid only $72,189, leaving the school district with the balance. Since these are the most expensive of all the special education programs, Hart saw a potential for a steep downside if the district suddenly had to accommodate a number of new students with severe disabilities.

Snapshot

What happened

Monday, Beacon Hill put the brakes on the movement to reform special education by voting to study the question for another year. If House bill 5220 ultimately gets passed, the state will:

- change the way special education gets funded.
- tighten up the standards used to decide who qualifies for special education programs. Under the new rules, children "with a disability" would qualify, but not children "with special needs." The new standard would be the same as the federal government guidelines. On average, 17 percent of the Massachusetts school population now benefits from some type of special education. In contrast, Only 12 percent of the nation's school children are enrolled in such special programs.

What it means

As before, the financial impact of special education is unpredictable.

- On paper, Cohasset lost at least $31,000 due to Monday's vote. The money would have come in state aid if the bill passed. But that number could also have been headed in the opposite direction if more severely-handicapped children were to arrive at school next year. The new formula increases the community's share of tuitions for students sent to live in institutions.
- The local school district also stood to regain more control of over the way money for education gets spent. In theory, the reform would have allowed communities to spend more on regular education students than is allowed now, due to state mandates. Reform would also have meant the school districts could legally spend less on special education.

Student defends reputation at school board meeting athletes were among seven youths arrested Dec. 29 for carrying beer in the Osgood School parking lot.

Under the state athletics association rules, student athletes who break the "chemical health rules" have to be suspended from sports, based on an interview conducted by the school principal. During the interview, William Good, 16, admitted guilt and was suspended from the hockey team for the rest of the season.

Rossi and the other wrestler were allowed to stay on the Cohasset High team after they told principal Curtis Collins they were not guilty of breaking the athletic association's taboo on alcohol.

The different treatment for hockey player William Good was brought to the school board's attention Jan. 22 by the student's father. The father said he did not think the principal had been fair. At that time, school board member Ralph Kidder suggested two student athletes who kept their spot on school teams might have been lying when they insisted they were not guilty. Kidder noted all seven youths were arraigned in Dec. 31 juvenile court.

"All three were arrested at the same time for the same offense at the same place, and the outcome with the judicial system was the same?" Kidder asked as he went over the facts.

Kidder suggested the two athletes might have lied to stay on their teams.

Rossi, in a short statement he read before the school committee Feb. 5, said he was one of the seven arrested in the Dec. 29 incident. Then he charged members of the school committee Jan. 22 "in so many words called me a liar." Rossi did not precisely say he told Collins the truth, however. The student said people know he is a member of the wrestling team.

"People know I'm a member of that team, and I would not do anything to damage the reputation of the team," he said.

Rossi also complained about newspaper accounts printed in the Mariner and in the Patriot Ledger and said the principal was fair. He suggested the school committee learn the facts "the next time."

Kidder and other school board members Jan. 22 did not refer to Rossi by name but did question the honesty of two unnamed student athletes who were arrested in the Dec. 29 incident.

"Did you know what the whole fact pattern was before you called me a liar?" Rossi asked school board member Ralph Kidder.

The student athlete said he would not do anything to injure the reputation of the wrestling team.

Rossi was not mentioned in any of the stories but said the board should not tell him "not to take these newspaper articles personally."

"Maybe next time you and everyone on the school committee will act responsibly and get what the facts are. Now there are people who will always think I am a liar," Rossi said.

Kidder thanked Rossi for coming in and said the committee blundered Jan. 22 when it discussed Good's complaint. Kidder agreed the school board should have gotten the facts before commenting on the actions of principal Collins.

But Kidder also stood by his opinion the school policy needs review.

"I stand by my remarks. It's a crazy policy," he said.

Kidder was the only member of the school board who assumed responsibility for the Jan. 22 discussion. School superintendent Stephen Hart said at last week's meeting that the problem was caused by newspapers. Though Hart had conversations with Good prior to his appearance at the school board Jan. 22, he did not then suggest the complaint be tabled to give Collins an opportunity to defend his decision.

Acting Chairman Richard Shea stopped Hart and said the superintendent's comments were not relevant. Then Shea said the Mariner and Patriot Ledger failed to mention the facts that were "stated very clearly."

"One thing that was stated very clearly the night of the meeting, the policy related to the three kids (who are athletes). The others were not part of the discussion. Neither the Ledger nor the Mariner recognized that fact."

Yet Shea himself Jan. 22 raised and simultaneously dismissed the question of changing school policy to "include" suspension from "other activities and not just sports" for this type of infraction. But he said at that time such a new policy would not include students who do not participate in anything.

Shea said the newspaper articles distorted the story.

"I was pretty irate. I gave some thought to pointing out those facts. I think it is a clear example of how a newspaper reporter can hear one thing and select the most sensational facts and distort the story," he said.

windows and insulation, houses are not "breathing."

Carbon monoxide occurs when any fossil fuel is burned, such as wood or gasoline.

Selectman Diane Sullivan said she would support the new bylaw but had concerns because it would add to the expenses of homeowners selling their homes.

Lincoln said the fire department which charges $20 to inspect smoke detectors when a home is sold or transferred would inspect the carbon monoxide detectors at the same time for no additional cost.

Selectmen said they would back the carbon monoxide bylaw at town meeting.

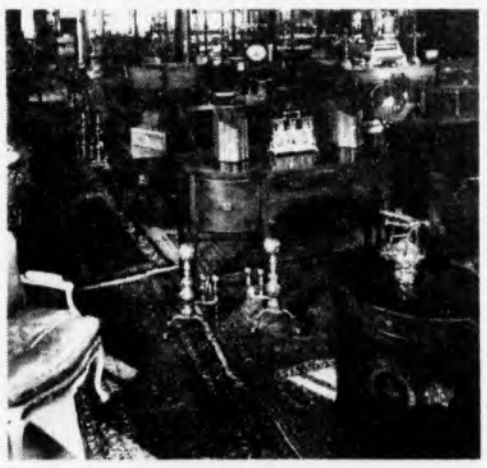
SHRINKING RESPONSIBILITY



There are a number of factors that conspire to cause us to shrink in height beginning in our mid-forties. Muscles may weaken, and muscle groups may become imbalanced, which means they are less capable of supporting the skeleton. There is also evidence that, after age 50, the bones of the spine become flatter and wider. While this vertebral remodeling may enable bone to absorb stress more readily (to prevent fractures), it also lessens our physical stature. The spinal column also compresses due to disc deterioration. Finally, poor posture robs us of height by contributing to muscle atrophy. Those who wish to counter these effects may turn to chiropractic with the goal of improving posture through regular adjustments.

At SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, we believe that good posture makes good sense. Protecting your spine from strain whenever possible can help protect you from future injuries. Please call us at 545-7388 to schedule an appointment for safe and gentle chiropractic care. Your case will be evaluated, the procedure will be explained and demonstrated, and your questions will be answered. We're located at 80 Front Street, Scituate Harbor, where we will only accept you as a client if we feel we can help you. Let us help you live your life free of pain.

P.S. The average woman over age 43 loses about 0.1% of her height annually.

AROUND TOWN

SALLYANN CHATTERTON 383-0560

If anyone sees this lovely lady around town, be sure to wish her a Happy 50th Birthday!

SOMEONE SPECIAL TURNS 50

Let's start off with a very special wish for a wonderful birthday to this little lady who just turned 50! We know that your day was a memorable one, here's to the next 50!

BLIZZARD OF '78

Feb. 6 was a day remembered by many of our Cohassetites; they attended a big dinner at the Neighborhood Club in Quincy to reminisce about all that they did during the Blizzard of '78. Did you know that Cohasset held its blood drive on that day? Everyone had their own memories to recount. When you see Cliff Dickson or Barbara Donahue, be sure to ask them about the event (both then and Feb. 6 of this year). Meanwhile, do a little looking back on your own! I sure remember every second of the whole thing!

MILLARD MACNEILL WILL BE MISSED

Our deepest sympathies go out to the family of Millard MacNeill, who passed away Jan. 28. What a fine man he was! He set records in the Second Congregational Church, he was a member of the choir there for so many years! His deep love of his family and friends was always evident, he will be missed!

DEAN'S LIST AT MASSASOIT

Massasoit Community College sends us word that we have two Cohasset students to congratulate, they made the dean's list! So, when you see Elizabeth Bestick and Trevor Cook, be sure that you give them a pat on the back and tell them to keep up their good work!

VALENTINE'S PARTY

Cohasset Elder Affairs sent news that our seniors should read about, boy, they are busy! Feb. 13 they will have a Valentine's Day Party, it will be a tea at Bancroft Hall at the Lightkeepers' House. Marie Dunn Frazier from the Milton Historical Society will present "Reflections on the Fine Art of Tea Drinking." She plans to set up an exhibit table, so go and enjoy!

SLIDES ON TIBET

Feb. 17, The Rev. John and Helen Gallop will show their fascinating slides on "Tibet." And, on Feb. 24, the new third-grade teacher Mrs. Jean Hanson will be there with the boys and girls from the Osgood School — go and say hello, they will certainly brighten even the gloomiest of days! Kids are wonderful!

VOLUNTEER DRIVERS NEEDED

The elders are also calling all volunteers, they are desperately in need of drivers, phone answering and message servers, and all of the volunteers they can get to host programs! Call the Cohasset Senior Center at 383-9112.

Finally, don't forget, the Elders do so many other things — caregivers support, counseling on legal, tax, housing insurance, educational, fitness and health, outreach, transportation, Tuesday and Thursday luncheons and everything they can think of!

GET WELL SOON

We sure hope that Leona Pratt is feeling much better as she reads this, she is doing ever so well and we want her to keep up the good work!

COLLEGE HONORS

Here are two more college students we can be proud of! Michael A. Figueiredo and Rachel Stephanie Christian are both members of the latest dean's list! Mike is majoring in marine biology, and Rachel is majoring in humanities and social services. Hearty congrats to both of you, you certainly deserve it!

SPORTS DAY

On Jan. 21 the National Girls and Women in Sport Day Celebration was held by the Massachusetts Interscholastic Athletic Association to honor the advancing role of women in sport. Two outstanding young ladies from Cohasset High School were invited to attend, Lauren Dooley and Kate Devine. Cori Hughes was their chaperone. Hopefully we will hear more about this event, they are the best! And we are proud of you, Lauren and Kate!

MAKING GOOD PROGRESS

Just to let you know, Herb Marsh is making good progress at Braintree Rehab, we look forward to seeing him around town very soon indeed!

SUPER BOWL BENEFIT

Here's a little information for you — remember we told you to order subs from the Cohasset Appalachia Project for Super Bowl Sunday? Well, it was a tremendous success! They made 170 subs, 60 Greek salads, 65 pints of chili and 30 plates of brownies! They send their thanks to everyone for supporting this most worthy cause, and we thank them for their great efforts! YUMMY!

HAPPY VALENTINE'S DAY

That's the news for this week, except to wish all of you a happy Valentine's Day — tell the one you love how very much you care, and how special he/she is, okay?!

Don't forget to share your news with us, we all love to read it!

OBITUARIES

David Bruce McLean

David Bruce McLean died Jan. 26 at Harbor House in Hingham. He was 87. Born in Danbury, Conn., April 16, 1910, he was the son of Alexander Scott McLean and Helen Eglee McLean, later Helen Scripture. He moved to Cohasset in 1920 with his mother and stepfather, Ralph E. Scripture. In 1927 he graduated from Phillips Academy, Andover, and in 1931 from Yale College. During World War II he served in U.S. Naval Air Operations as a communications technician.

Mr. McLean leaves his wife, the former Jane Fuller (Tinka) McLean of Cohasset, a daughter, Jean Briggs of Herndon, Va., a son, Scott McLean of Franklin, and five grandchildren. He was the father of the late Sammis McLean of Cohasset, and also leaves his sister, Nancy Garrison of Cohasset.

Bruce McLean was a life member of the Cohasset Yacht Club and served for many years on its Race Committee. He was also a member of the Old Goats and the Hunt Club, both of Cohasset. Active in town affairs, Mr. McLean had served on the Cohasset School Committee and as Treasurer of the Cohasset Red Cross. With his wife Tinka, he owned and operated The Linen Chest of Cohasset for approximately 20 years from the mid-'60s onward. Mr. McLean was a fine singer who could, quite spontaneously, summon up perfect renditions of Gilbert and Sullivan operettas, never missing a word or a note. As a communicant of St. Stephen's Church, he had shared this talent by singing in its choir.

A memorial service will be held at St. Stephen's Church, Cohasset, Saturday, Jan. 31, at 2 p.m. In lieu of flowers, gifts in Bruce McLean's memory may be made to a charity of your choice.

Millard Emery MacNeill

Mr. Millard E. MacNeill, age 87, died Wednesday, Jan. 28. Born at home in Scituate Oct. 5, 1910, his family later moved to Cohasset where Mr. MacNeill graduated from the Osgood School (Cohasset High School) on Elm Street. He attended Bryant and Stratton College in Boston and entered into the employ of the Pilgrim Cooperative Bank on So. Main Street upon his graduation.

His inventive mind led him to a joint venture with the late John Estabrook of Marlboro. They successfully designed and sold the "Trusty Duster," a dusting machine for potato crops in Maine.

In 1950, Mr. MacNeill joined with his father, John N. MacNeill and brother Frederic D. MacNeill in the plumbing business which he later ran with his son Robert until his retirement in 1987.

Millard was active in many community activities and served as a founding member and officer of the South Shore Art Center with his wife Kerstin. He was Past President of the Quincy and Vicinity Master Plumber's Association and served as Plumbing Inspector in several communities.

Millard was recently cited by the Second Congregational Church in Cohasset for having sung in the church choir for 70 years. In fact, he had sung in the choir the Sunday prior to his recent illness. Music was a great love in his life and his tenor voice could be heard singing wherever he was found. He sang for many years in the Choral Arts Society from which he retired in 1995. He was guest soloist at St. Anthony's Church in Cohasset on several occasions. He was also a frequent attendee of the Handel and Haydn Society concerts in Boston with his son John.

Millard was a Past Master of Konohassett Lodge, A.F. & A.M., of which he was a member for 53 years. At the time of his death, he was serving in the office of Chaplain. It has become a tradition that the Annual Picnic of Konohassett Lodge is held each August at Mr. MacNeill's home. This past August, 112 persons attended. He was also active in recent years with St. Stephen's Chapter of Royal Arch Masons in Quincy.

Mr. MacNeill leaves his wife of 60 years, Kerstin F. (Anderson), his sons, John M. MacNeill of Cohasset and Robert W. MacNeill of Hingham; his sister, Helen Wilcoxson of Hingham and Newburyport as well as five grandchildren.

A memorial service was conducted at the Second Congregational Church on Highland Avenue Feb. 7. The officers and members of Konohassett Lodge conducted a Masonic Memorial Service in conjunction with a traditional worship service directed by the pastor, The Rev. Gary Ritts.

Donations may be made in his honor to the Raymond T. Sewall Charity Fund, c/o the Grand Royal Arch Chapter of Massachusetts, Suite 703, 186 Tremont St., Boston, 02111, or to the Masonic Charitable Trust in care of the Grand Lodge of Masons, 186 Tremont St., Boston, 02111.

Public library on caregiving at Sunrise

Sunrise Assisted Living of Cohasset recently opened a family resource library aimed particularly at professional and family caregivers of people with memory impairments. Open to the public, the library contains books and videos on Alzheimer's disease and caregiving which may be checked out for up to two weeks. In addition, brochures and flyers from the National Alzheimer's Association and the Alzheimer Society of Canada are free in single copies.

Library content is initially focused on caregiving issues related to Alzheimer's disease and related dementias, since these are common disabilities among seniors, and many people do not have easy access to an Alzheimer's chapter library. However, the library is expected to soon expand its contents to cover caregiving issues related to other conditions.

Among the library's offerings are books and videos which cover the basics of Alzheimer's disease and related dementias, current research, caregiving tips, handling caregiver emotions, dealing with difficult behaviors, and helping children and teenagers understand the disease.

The information office is located at 746 Chief Justice Cushing Highway in Cohasset. Sunrise Assisted Living of Cohasset is scheduled to open in late March 1998. Founded in 1981 by Paul and Terry Klaassen, Sunrise Assisted Living is one of the nation's oldest and largest providers of assisted living care for the elderly.

EDITORIALS & OPINIONS

Pull over and stop

Police say it was a miracle last Thursday that no one was killed when a Brockton man led police on a seven-town pursuit that included racing through traffic along Route 3A in Hingham and Cohasset.

What added to an extremely dangerous situation was the public's lack of understanding about what to do when they hear sirens or see flashing blue lights, police say.

For many of us, it's been decades since we took the written driving test so our memories may be sketchy on the subject.

Police from both Hingham and Cohasset told us that during Thursday's pursuit many drivers did not pull over to the right and stop, as required.

No matter which direction the sirens or lights are coming from, drivers are supposed to pull over to the right and stop, according to Hingham Det. Joseph Mayer.

That means if you hear a siren from an ambulance, fire truck or police cruiser or see the flashing lights — you should quickly pull over to the right and stop — regardless of whether the emergency vehicle is coming toward you or is coming up behind you.

This will allow the emergency vehicle or vehicles to go safely by.

A Scituate woman who rode in an ambulance which contained her seriously ill daughter told us she was horrified at how few people know the rules of the road. In her nightmare experience, the ambulance had to weave in and out of traffic all the way to South Shore Hospital because drivers were not pulling over. This can cause delays, costing precious life-saving minutes.

Cohasset Police Officer Richard Yocum said during Thursday's pursuit some drivers stopped in the middle of the road.

Others pulled over to let the Ford Taurus pass only to get back into the traveling lane in front of the police cruiser in pursuit.

Our police departments handled Thursday's incident professionally. They showed the necessary restraint by keeping the suspect in sight without making a bad situation worse.

Thankfully high-speed pursuits are rare.

But incidents involving flashing lights and sirens are routine. The next time you hear or see a police cruiser, ambulance or fire truck with its lights on and sirens blaring — pull over the right quickly and safely and stop. It's a simple as that.

Cartoon, article off the mark

To the Editor:

The Mariner's Feb. 5 cartoon ridiculed safety concerns voiced recently by Lamberts Lane parents at a Jan. 22 school committee meeting. During that meeting the parents requested an additional bus stop at the end of Lamberts Lane.

The children and residents of Lamberts Lane contend daily with numerous safety hazards. Walking to and from the bus stop on this narrow, winding, tree studded and heavily traveled, mile-long road is impossible. This has compounded the safety issues with the only bus stop located at the intersection of 228 (a state highway) and Lamberts Lane by forcing all the families to park at the top of the street which is too narrow to accommodate them. We deal with delivery trucks, Cohasset Golf Club traffic, heavy equipment traffic from the Emanuello Excavation Company's storage area, and construction trucks and machinery for the new homes being built and the Cohasset Golf Club.

At the Jan. 22 school committee meeting, it was briefly mentioned that coyotes had been sighted on Lamberts Lane. It is unfortunate that the Mariner's article of Jan. 29 by Margo Sullivan, and Jim Hamilton's cartoon chose to highlight this instead of the serious issues outlined. Clearly, coyotes are the least of our problems. Over the last two years the safety situation on Lamberts Lane has escalated to an intolerable level. The families here have worked hard and put in countless hours trying to make necessary changes. We are making some progress. The current board of selectmen and the DPW should be congratulated for the road improvements made last summer. We still have a long way to go. If anyone doubts that, we urge you to take a ride down here and see for yourselves. The Mariner could better serve the community by thoroughly investigating the matter instead of its poor and insensitive attempt at humor. We find the cartoon offensive. It trivialized the serious safety issues that continually affect the children and residents of Lamberts Lane. I can assure you the residents of Lamberts Lane do not feel their children's safety is a joke.

Selectman's record is praised

To the Editor:

This is a letter to commend Selectman Michael Sullivan for his service to the town of Cohasset.

His astute knowledge of the budget and wise judgment regarding the fiscal problems of the town will be missed. Michael provided leadership in many spheres of our community life and a great force for Cohasset. He was a keen observer, a man of ideas and empathy combined with civic courage and a moving voice.

We hope his invaluable contributions to the board of health and board of selectmen will be used for future Cohasset projects.

We hope his successor will have a record of accomplishments that equal his.

Lamberts Lane bus service needed

Dear Superintendent Hart:

I feel it important to share with you an incident that occurred on Lamberts Lane today (Feb. 6) that makes my hair stand on end!

As you know, Lamberts Lane is a narrow road, without sidewalks, and with some sharp bends. Today, as I traveled up the road at a speed just a tad over the snail's pace of the posted 15 m.p.h. speed limit, without a person in sight on the road, continuing forthbound around a bend, I, (much to close for comfort) out of nowhere, came upon a middle school child walking en route to his home from the bus, too close to the middle of the road. I firmly believe that had I been traveling any faster (as is often the case of drivers in a hurry on this road) or not had full attention on the road in front of me, that this child could well have been hit. I feel assured that this type of incident has happened to others often, and that it has been through the grace of God, that no child has been injured!

In sharing another of my growing list of unsafe pedestrian experiences on Lamberts Lane with you: As my neighbor and I were parked at the beginning of Lamberts Lane, waiting out of our cars for the bus, a very large flat-bed truck attempted to enter the road en route to the residing construction company's driveway access, located approx. 50 yards from the bus stop. We were urged by the driver to move our cars so that the truck could make its sharp turn from Route 228. I must add that there was literally no room on the road for anything other than a toothpick, and we were forced to move away from the bus stop down beyond the driveway. I don't hesitate to ask you if this is a safe bus stop for children to wait, knowing that there do exist these incidences?

With regard to the police officer who has been evaluating Lamberts Lane, although appreciated, I must point out that January and February are probably the two most inactive months on the road (as the golf course is not in season) and consequently the poorest time to make an accurate evaluation of the road safety conditions. I can only compare making an evaluation at this time to making an evaluation of the parking lot traffic at Sandy Beach during the winter months.

You may be interested to know that the golf club management has informed me that during its season, when daily tournaments are conducted, approximately 150 people are brought to Lamberts Lane in a short period of time. My neighbor, Mary Foley, has counted 82 cars entering the road one day during her short wait for the bus. Need I mention that during season, large delivery trucks servicing the golf club are leaving little available space for children walking on the road.

I should also mention that the school bus does presently service the only other similar side-road in town, Cedar Street, which is comparable to Lamberts Lane with regard to public traffic volume, road narrowness, sharp bends and no sidewalks, however, it does differ in that it does have an outlet.

I cannot emphasize enough the safety hazards Lamberts Lane presents to walking children, and for whatever reason, they are in fact walking.

Again, I must point out that the School Bus System Handbook states that "bus routes will be established so that an authorized bus stop is available within a reasonable and safe walking distance of the home of every resident student entitled to transportation service." The handbook also states that bus stops ought to be safe. I believe that these policies are more than haphazardly written words and do have meaning.

It is my hope that we will no longer be allowed to be cut off from the implicit rights to enjoy the bus service because our circumstances on Lamberts Lane are not the town's norm and may require some extra creative effort. It is the given right of every student in Cohasset to have the bus service, as it is for those on Lamberts Lane, and we need to be made a priority, as it is within the town's means to provide service.

The safety hazards for children walking and waiting at the bus stop are experienced by us daily, and I find myself continually re-fueled in communicating them to you in an attempt to raise your awareness and to help you see the urgent need to have the bus service extended to us.

Dorian Brady
158 Lamberts Lane

Editor's note: Mrs. Brady and Mrs. Ofsthun provided the Mariner with copies of their letters.

Response to Lamberts Lane issue

Ms. Dorian Brady
158 Lamberts Lane

Dear Ms. Brady:

Your concerns about the traffic and safety on Lamberts Lane are legitimate. That is why the Superintendent and the School Committee have listened and cooperated with you and your Lamberts Lane neighbors. The school is providing a 'depot' bus service to the lane, just as it does for several other neighborhoods in town. It is not only too lengthy (8 to 10 minutes) to pick up at the homes but, more importantly, there is no turnaround for the bus at the end of the lane. Beyond the bus service provided:

- We met with and listened to you and your neighbors at the last two School Committee meetings.
- School officials have twice driven a bus down your lane to first-hand understand the hazards and obstacles.
- We have written to the police and asked for their opinion of the safety of your street. (The opinion of the Safety Officer, Jan. 1998, was that the lane is safe.)
- We have written to the planning board asking for their attention to your issues.

It is surprising that you have again addressed your concerns to the Superintendent, when it seems he and the School Committee have cooperated fully. Many of the issues that you raise are not under the purview of the schools, such as the narrowness of the road, the lack of sidewalks, and the quantity and intrusiveness of the golfers and construction traffic. These issues need to be addressed by working with the golf club, the developer, the town manager, police and planning board.

The Superintendent and the School Committee vow to continue working cooperatively and to pursue alternatives within the constraints of what we can affect.

Lobster Lab is better than more taxes

To the Editor:

Letter writer Hamilton Tewksbury (Mariner, Feb. 5) suggests that the school curriculum be beefed up with science programs as an alternate to the Lobster Lab. Are the taxpayers ready for that? I doubt it; they'd rather see the funds raised privately rather than provide costly exposure to every student, whether he or she is promising or merely nodding his or her way through high school. The basic idea of the Lab is that it be an extra-curricular activity, to be taken advantage of by students who want to expand their horizons. If Toscanini lived in town, and offered to instill a love of music in those interested in participating, would Tewksbury insist that, instead, the entire student body be exposed to a beefed-up music program at the school, and that more music teachers be added to the payroll?

He claims that the property was purchased for access to the harbor, but that is not what the warrant article said, on which the vote to purchase was based. Other people continue to recite this false mantra about the basis for purchase, but repetition doesn't make the falsehood true.

Nor will the presence of the Lab preclude use of the boat ramp, nor have appreciable effect on parking during summer weekends (the only time that there is much demand for spaces, and the very time when the Lab will be closed)!

The good news is that so many thoughtful people in town grasp the significance of the Lab and assess the positives against the negatives with an intelligent sense of proportion. When the Lab is up and running and viewed with pride as one of the town's assets, few then will admit to have lacked the vision to have supported it.

Tom Callahan announces candidacy for selectman

Tom Callahan

Conservation Commissioner Tom Callahan has announced his candidacy for the Board of Selectmen.

Callahan said his focus is the exercise of sound financial management as the town confronts the impact of the sewer and school projects on property tax rates. He supports the direction and approach of the Town Manager's first budget, but believes the next necessary step is for him and the selectmen to create a strategic financial master plan.

"During the next three to five years, when we take the hardest hit from the sewer and school projects, we'll need to prioritize and plan effectively to avoid overrides and allow taxpayers to catch their breath," Callahan said. "With the selectmen exercising the necessary leadership, we can get over the difficult hump of the next few years without sacrificing town needs."

Within a master plan, Callahan also favors moving towards sewering of the entire town. Callahan said, "We should begin now to plan sewering in the years 2005-2010. Due to the state court judgment, we have no choice but to squarely confront the issue. Continued reliance on septic systems and attempts to manage some or all of them is not, I believe, in the best long-term interest of the town."

With sound planning and "thinking outside the box," Callahan believes sewering could be both financially palatable and consistent with the town's current character.

Callahan is an attorney and mediator with offices in Holbrook and Boston, and is a member of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce and Holbrook Business Council. He and his wife Alison and two children have resided in Cohasset since 1985.

Brunch to benefit Murray

State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset, will host a fundraising brunch Sunday, March 1, from 11:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the South Shore Country Club in Hingham.

This is Mary Jeanette's first fundraising brunch in four years. She said, "I do not see the need for a large campaign fund, but I must raise money now for my re-election campaign. I am elected to represent my constituents and to secure legislation which will make their lives better. I think it is important to attend all the functions I can in the district and to be available to my people, rather than raising money not needed to be effective in my job."

Chairpersons of the brunch are Julie Guild in Cohasset, Carl Harris in Hingham and James Yacobucci in Hull.

Murray has opposition this year and plans to conduct her traditional vigorous campaign.

Murray has served on the Committee on Human Services and the Elderly, the Committee on Taxation, the Ethics Committee and is the ranking member of the Local Affairs Committee and the Committee on Counties. Rep. Murray has been appointed to the Special Commission studying Counties and the Special Committee for Veterans' Services.

Several of Rep. Murray's bills which have become law include Drunk Driving in Boats; money for dredging in Cohasset, Hingham and Hull; the gate at Strait's Pond; a bill which allows towns to vote on referendum the issue of changing elected officials to appointed positions without having state legislative approval and other legislation granting more local control of cities and towns.

Murray has always been a staunch supporter of home rule, more local aid, and has opposed tax increases on the people in her district.

Anyone wishing to volunteer for Murray's re-election campaign may call Lillian Murray Curley, her campaign manager, at (781) 383-0695.

Opposition mounts to proposal for septic systems

the on-site plan have been placed on a draft of the town meeting warrant. Article 17 asks the town to allow the health board to amend the Second Amended Final Judgment. Article 18 would delay the septic portion of the agreement for at least one year so a comprehensive study can be undertaken to examine other options.

Both articles are sponsored by the same group of 10 citizens from Nichols Road to Jerusalem Road.

The road that led to these latest articles is a long and convoluted one.

Cohasset was the first town in the state to receive a citation under the Clean Water Act in 1975 and became eligible for federal money to build a sewer treatment plant, but the town kept voting the plan down.

In 1979, the state took Cohasset to court to complete the sewer plant, and in 1980 the first judgment was born. The state said it would fine the town $10,000 per day unless it went forward with the sewer project.

Town meeting approved the project, although the state did fine the town one token penalty of $10,000. The project was planned to sewer the major parts of town with the highest populations, while also being large enough to accommodate additional use in the future. The town also had to develop alternative plans for homes not included in the new sewer project.

But then Ronald Reagan was elected president, and he immediately delayed all public works funding to rein in inflation and high interest rates. By 1982, the federal government began releasing public works funds again, and Cohasset was informed that funding for the sewer project was available.

However, a group of residents opposed the project, leading to a lengthy legal battle with the state. The town intended at one point to ship all of its waste-water to a treatment facility in Hull.

> "They're being forced to do this and that's a very un-American thing."
> – TED GUILD, SEWER COMMISSIONER.

Then came the 1988 election and Michael Dukakis' platform touting the Massachusetts miracle which quickly turned into an economic crisis. The state was in no position to spend money enforcing the agreement.

The judgment remained un-enforced until 1994 when someone in the State Attorney General's office dug out the old files and decided to enforce the agreement. But completion dates for implementation of the agreement had long-since expired.

In 1996, the state revised the plan with new dates. The revised plan became the Second Final Amended Judgment.

The new agreement called for the town to undertake a number of sewer projects. The town would build a sewer in North Cohasset and expand the sewer system in central Cohasset. A third key element of the agreement was a plan to implement an on-site waste-water management plan for homeowners in environmentally sensitive areas of town.

The key areas are a section around Lily Pond, and a triangular area where Nichols Road, Jerusalem Road and Atlantic Avenue intersect. One hundred and thirty-six homes in the area would have to submit to mandatory Title 5 inspections within seven years and repair or replace systems that failed inspection.

The state would provide low-interest 20-year loans and allow residents to build shared systems to reduce costs.

The health board tried unsuccessfully to implement a town-funded plan that would have created a users fee system with the town inspecting systems and homeowners in the system paying an annual fee.

But the plan did not enjoy much local support because of its expense, and ultimately had to be abandoned.

The town was forced to fall back on a plan to borrow $3.5 million from the state to implement an on-site project in the high-priority homes. But that plan has recently come under fire from residents in the high priority district, who feel they are being unfairly forced to submit to Title 5 inspections and the possibility of expensive septic system repairs.

Guild said he is not surprised that people are opposing the on-site plan.

"They're being forced to do this and that's a very un-American thing," Guild said.

Guild said what has surprised him is some of the people who have recently opposed the plan. Voters at last year's town meeting unanimously approved the Second Amended Final Judgment.

On Dec. 9, 1997, the sewer commission held what Guild called its "stormiest meeting ever." After the meeting, Guild checked the sign-in list against the town meeting on the day voters approved the Second Amended Final Agreement.

The latest development is the citizen's articles for town meeting. Guild said it may be possible to delay the on-site plan without penalty because the state has given the town seven years to inspect the 136 homes and live up to the terms of the agreement.

The agreement says the town is obliged to begin the loan as of May 30, 1997. The town did begin drawing up plans by that date. But the agreement has no firm dates beyond that except for the seven-year deadline.

Guild said a one-year delay would still leave five years to complete the agreement, which is plenty of time.

Ulmer said the bottom-line for many of these residents is that they don't want to pay for expensive septic repairs.

"We have to wonder about what will happen if these articles pass," Ulmer said. "Our original plan was to send out notices in March to residents in these areas that we wanted to complete all inspections by June or July. But now we will wait until after town meeting."

Ulmer said it is also possible that the state may view any delays as a violation of the agreement, but that remains unclear.

Another problem with delays is that the town cannot collect any of its seven annual $500,000 for loans for septic repairs until homes are inspected. Guild said it is not clear that the town can collect the money retroactively if it waits too long to begin implementing the agreement.

The health board is planning to hold a joint hearing with selectmen on Feb. 23 to discuss the situation.

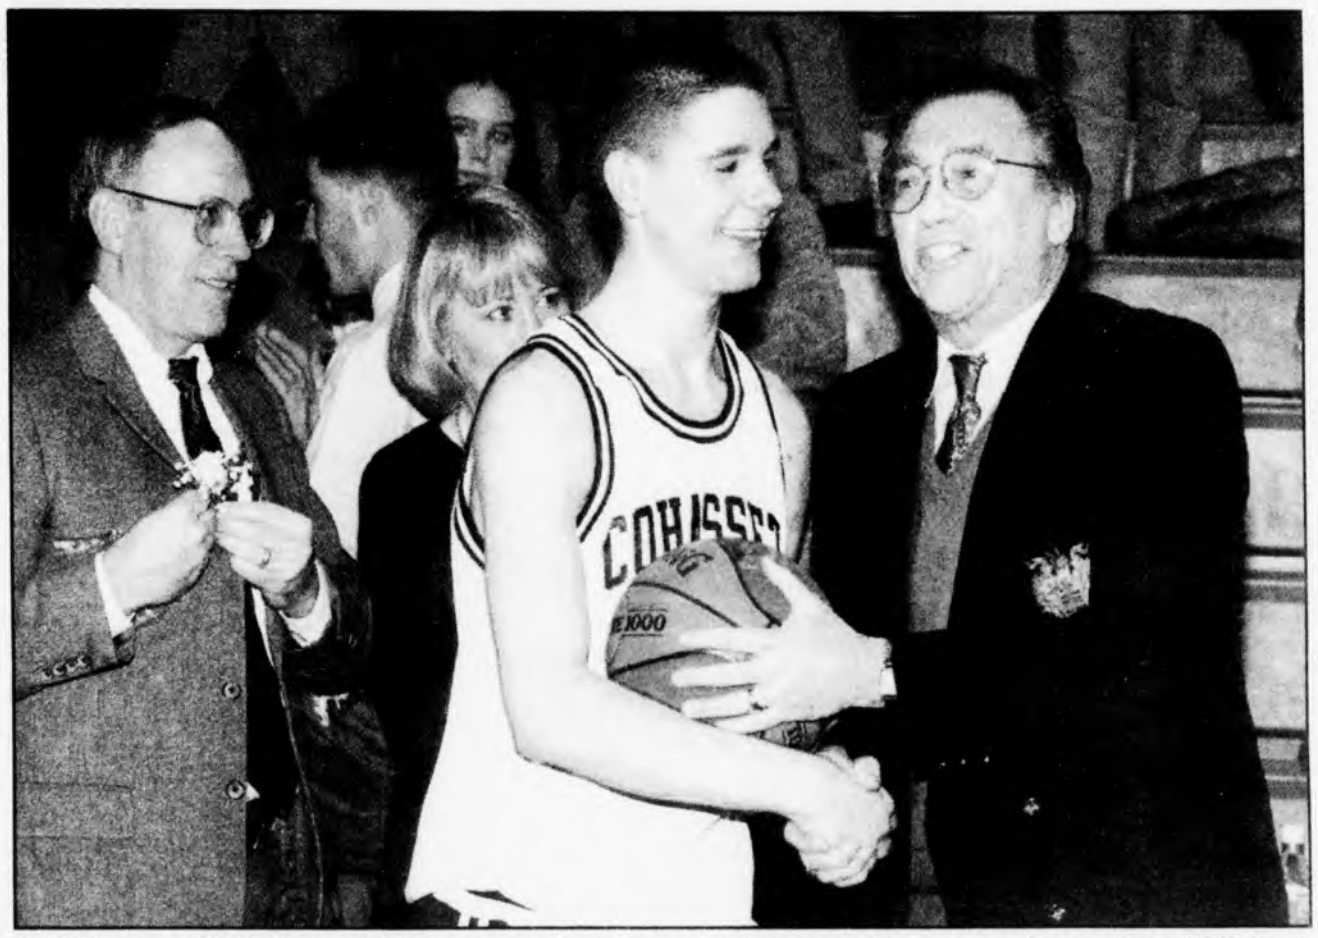
COHASSET MARINER

Quintin nets a grand achievement

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

Last Friday, Paul-Michael Quintin became the fourth player in Cohasset High School history to score 1,000 points, and the first since Bryan Edwards did so in the mid-'80s. Quintin's successful career has spanned three years, and he has won a South Sectional championship and a South Shore League title during that stretch, sinking, by coach Ron Ford's count, more than 150 three-point shots.

This season, however, has been a difficult one for the six-foot guard. He is tri-captain of a 6-13 Skipper team, one which has struggled all year. Quintin himself is having an excellent season, leading the SSL in scoring with 22 points per game. But one gets the feeling that the senior would trade all of those buckets for one last crack at the state tournament.



"I'd call this year difficult more than disappointing. Having a good individual year has helped a little bit, but my focus is still for the team to do well. It hurts to see us not reach the expectations that we set," Quintin said, after his team had been officially eliminated from the state tourney.

As a sophomore, Quintin stepped into a starting spot on a team which survived, led by the talented Jared Hardwick, all the way to the state semifinals at the Fleet Center. Quintin filled his role nicely, hitting the threes when called upon and promising two more years of marksmanship.

Last year, his role was increased. As big man Ryan Bishop drew attention down low and forward J.L. Williams also worked from beyond the arc, Quintin was sometimes left alone by defenses, a deadly mistake to commit with a player whose shot release is as quick and accurate as Quintin's. Quintin would catch on fire from long range some nights last year, helping, the team recapture the SSL flag.

This season, he has been the

Flaim captures hearts in fourth Olympic try

Eric Flaim smiles with pride as he leads the U.S. athletes into the Olympic Stadium.

STAFF WRITER

As the eyes of the world turned to Nagano, Japan over the weekend for the opening ceremonies of the 1998 Winter Olympic Games, for a moment in time the global spotlight was focused on the South Shore, Pembroke and Silver Lake Regional High School in particular.

When the contingent of athletes representing the United States marched into the Olympic Stadium carrying the flag as the standard bearer for his country, Eric Flaim wore a smile as wide as could be..

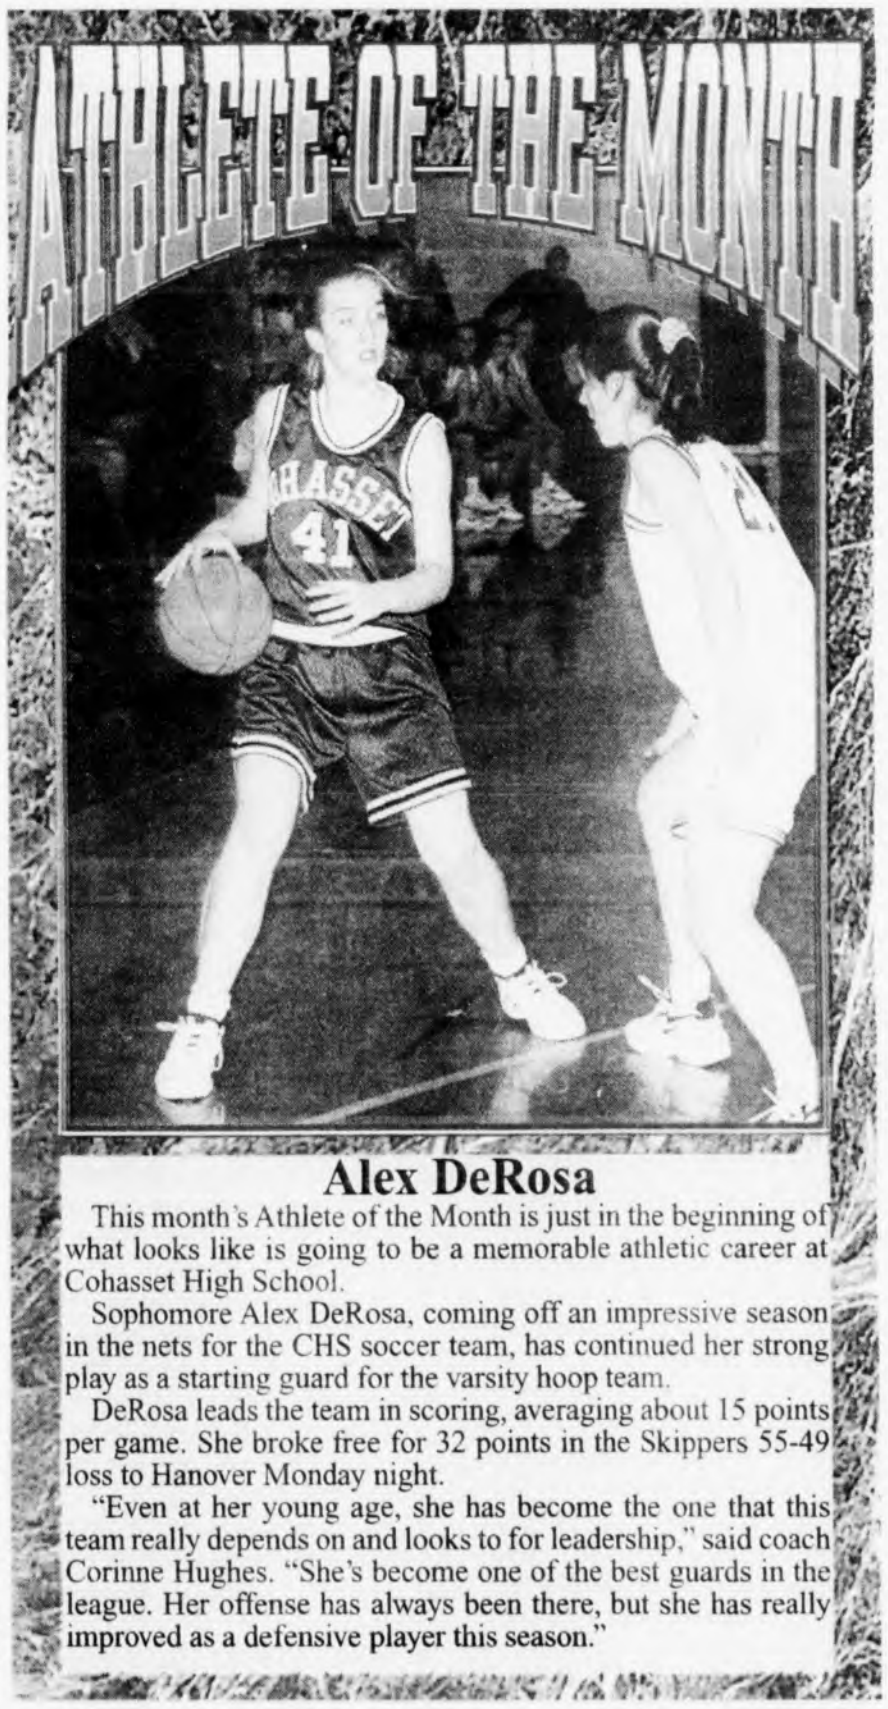
The short-track speed skater's dogged determination in making his fourth consecutive Olympic team served as an inspiration to all of his teammates. They showed their appreciation for all his work by giving Flaim the ultimate honor and allowing him to lead them into the stadium and carry the flag of their nation.

"It's a great honor and a privilege. I'll do my best to represent the U.S. and my teammates with all the pride that I can muster," said Flaim, who was informed of the honor that had been bestowed upon him by the United States Olympic Committee as his plane was touching down for a landing in Japan. "It was a surprise and a real pleasure and an honor. It's great."

Flaim talked a little more about his feelings in a posting to all of his fans on the web site that he has constructed for the Olympic Games.

His Internet site can be accessed at http://www.ericflaim.com.

"Being selected to be the American flag bearer is a great honor. What makes it even more special is that I was chosen to do this by my fellow Olympians," said Flaim. "I'd like to thank all of my teammates, my coach, my fiancee and my family. And I also want to thank everyone who stood behind me and believed that I could compete in another Olympics."



Making the moment even more special, Flaim announced that he would be carrying the flag in honor of his biggest supporter, his father Enrico, who passed away two years ago.

Many of his friends and family gathered in Duxbury at this home of Eric's sister to watch their favorite Olympian take part in the opening ceremonies Saturday evening.

Some of the youngsters around Flaim's old stomping grounds, the Hobomock Arena in Pembroke, will also be watching when he takes the ice next week.

"I think it's pretty cool that someone from around here is in the Olympics," said David Johnson, an 11-year-old who was at

Alex DeRosa

This month's Athlete of the Month is just in the beginning of what looks like is going to be a memorable athletic career at Cohasset High School.

Sophomore Alex DeRosa, coming off an impressive season in the nets for the CHS soccer team, has continued her strong play as a starting guard for the varsity hoop team.

DeRosa leads the team in scoring, averaging about 15 points per game. She broke free for 32 points in the Skippers 55-49 loss to Hanover Monday night.

"Even at her young age, she has become the one that this team really depends on and looks to for leadership," said coach Corinne Hughes. "She's become one of the best guards in the league. Her offense has always been there, but she has really improved as a defensive player this season."

Gymnasts take top honors at Pilgrim meet

Kristin Sheerin took first place last week at the Pilgrim Conference all-league gymnastics meet, scoring an impressive 31.95 in the all-around competition.

sports wrap-up

A number of other CHS gymnasts also did very well in the meet.

In the team competition, Cohasset topped everyone else with an overall score of 117.3.

Caitlin Flint took a first place in the floor exercise, a third place on the beam and a sixth place in the bars event.

Tara Hettstrom took first on the bars and a second in the vault.

Carlie Carter took a third place for her floor routine and a fourth place on the bars.

Team captain Carolyn Pratt took home sixth place in the floor exercise.

At the conclusion of the meet a pair of CHS tumblers were named to the Pilgrim Conference all-star team: Tara Hettstrom (bars) and Kristin Sheerin (balance beam).

The Pilgrim Conference co-champs (along with Hanover) will now move on to the South sectional meet this weekend at Algonquin High School. The top teams from there will move onto the state finals next week.

Hoopsters continue on search for wins

As the players continue to battle their way through a season that finds them 2-15 going down the final stretch, girls' varsity coach Corrine Hughes finds solace in that the effort of her team has not wavered at all through the season.

"They are still out there trying as hard as they can, but they're having trouble with their confidence level," said Hughes. "They play really well in stretches but then the other team will start to come back a little bit and that seems to throw our confidence way off."

Hughes pointed to a recent loss at the hands of South Shore League leading Norwell as an example of this trend. "We were tied with them 20-20 at the half and playing a great game, but Norwell made a run early in the second half and we seemed to fall apart."

The Skippers also gave division rival Hanover all they could handle Monday night before falling to defeat 55-49. As has been the case for most of the season Alex DeRosa was the story for Cohasset, tossing in a game high 32 points in the losing cause.

"She's turned into our best all-around player," said Hughes about DeRosa. "She's only a sophomore but Alex has stepped up to shoulder the offensive load of the team."

With DeRosa coming back next season as well as almost everyone else on the varsity team (only Whitney Cook and Rosalind Muniz are seniors), Hughes said that added experience and a change in the league should mean good things for the squad next season.

"Right now we are a Division 4 team playing in a Division 3 league," said Hughes. With Rockland and East Bridgewater moving out of the league next season, Hughes said the school will be able to schedule more non-league games against more teams similar in size to Cohasset.

Grapplers finish regular season at 15-5

CHS wrestlers may have finished a game behind where they were at this time last season but head coach Torin Sweeney said he was very happy about the way things have turned out for his team.

"Between increasing the strength of our schedule and losing (top wrestler) Jordan Fiore to an injury even before the year started I am very happy about the way that things turned out for us," said Sweeney.

The squad finished in second place in the South Shore League behind Carver for the seventh straight season but continued to get strong recognition across the state even though they are one of the smallest schools that offers wrestling. Sweeney expected that the team would crack the state's Top 20 list this week and would be placed somewhere in the first five in the Division III poll.

The Division III South Sectionals will be held this weekend in Wayland where sixteen teams will battle for the six spots available to go to the state finals next weekend.

The wrestlers ended the regular season with a win over Middleboro and losses to a tough Wellesley team and the three-time defending state champion, Foxboro.

Craig Sheerin and Luke Caldwell took wins in all three meets. Double winners included Justin Golden, Mike Rossi, Ben Littauer and J.P. Laugelle.

Other winners were Chris Pratt, Liam O'Donnell, and Kevin DeVito.

Boys eliminated from hoop tourney contention

They gave undefeated Rockland a run for their money Friday night, but the varsity boys' hoop team was eliminated from post-season play Friday night with a 69-54 loss to the Bulldogs in a game that included Paul-Michael Quintin becoming the fourth person in the history of the program to hit the 1,000 career point mark.

The Rockland contest was much closer than the score indicated as Cohasset gave the Bulldogs one of their tougher games this season. The Skipper jumped out to an early advantage and kept the high-octane Rockland squad off their game in the first half and lead 30-29 at the break.

Cohasset's luck would turn sour in the final 16 minutes and Rockland took control from there and cruise home to the victory.

Quintin led the team with 17 points. Jaime DeMichele added 14 points and Pat Hurley chipped in with nine.

Flaim captures hearts in fourth Olympic try

the rink over the weekend watching some youth hockey action. "It's neat to think that someone who was good enough to make it to the Olympics started out here."

"I'll be watching him skate," said Meredith Dalton. "It must be great to be able to carry the flag in honor of your country in front of the whole world."

The fact that the 5'8, 160 lb. 31-year-old Flaim is on the short-track team says a great deal about his love and commitment to the sport of speed skating. First deciding to retire after the last Olympics in 1994, where he picked up a silver medal in the short-track event, the competitive juices just would not let Flaim sit back and retire.

The only U.S. skater to ever medal in the short- and long-track events, Flaim still skated three or four times a week while helping run the family business, R&F Micro-Tools in Pembroke, as well as starting up his own in-line skating store, Eric Flaim's Motion Sports in Boston.

After deciding to get back into serious training, Flaim accomplished his goal of returning to Olympic glory when he secured the sixth and final spot on the roster at the U.S. team trials last month in Lake Placid, N.Y.

As he makes his final Olympic run, Flaim finds himself in the company of a number of younger teammates.

Joining resident graybeards Flaim and Andrew Gable, 33, on the U.S. team are Scott Koons, 21, Thomas O'Hare, 19, Rusty Smith, 18, and fellow Massachusetts native Daniel Weinstein is only 17-years-old.

"I've been to the Olympic Games before and I really know what it takes to be successful going against the best in the world," Flaim said in an interview with the Mariner last year as he was beginning serious training for the competition. "I am not in my peak athletic years. I think I'm fully capable of beating the best in the world with the right preparation and race strategy.

"I think experience is the most important factor going for me," he added. "Plus I think that I am mentally stronger than when I started out. That will also be a big help."

Flaim was also on the Olympic team in 1992, but fell ill just days before his race and wasn't able to compete.

Flaim has a little more time to think about what he wants to accomplish as well as get in any last minute training in Nagano. His competition is not scheduled to begin until Tuesday, Feb. 17.

Around Silver Lake, the high school's athletic director Ralph Frazier said that Flaim and his accomplishments had quickly become the talk of the building.

"People have been poking their head into my office saying what a great honor this was for Flaim as well as for Pembroke and Silver Lake," said Frazier of the 1985 graduate. "I really cannot think of a greater honor to bestow on someone than what these Olympic competitors have given to Eric. I just cannot imagine what it would be like to be chosen for an honor such as this."

Flaim is on his fourth Olympic team, but he is not the only Silver Lake graduate to compete in the games. Professional hockey player Kevin Stevens is also from Pembroke and he competed on the U.S. Olympic team in 1988.

"It really is something special for Silver Lake," added Frazier. "How many other high schools can say that they have two Olympic athletes as members of their alumni. We can take a great deal of pride in that fact."

Dynamos skate to glory in Germany

Pee Wee team earns bronze medal at Regensburg Cup

By David McKee
STAFF WRITER

When you travel to Europe, it's always nice to bring back a souvenir.

And that's exactly what the members of the South Shore Dynamos Pee Wee hockey team did as they captured the bronze medal in the ten-nation Regensburg Cup Tournament held in Germany from Jan. 2 to Jan. 6.

The Dynamos, a select all-star team comprised of 19 top 11-year-old hockey players from Norwood to Sandwich, earned third place at the tourney by beating Latvia in the bronze medal round game.

Switzerland, the only team to beat the Dynamos during the preliminary round of the tourney, earned the gold medal by beating Sweden 5-2.

The Dynamos were only the third team from the United States to appear at the 25-year-old Regensburg Cup. They were invited to the international tourney after they captured the Mass Tier One State Championship last year.

In addition to their third-place finish in Regensburg, the Dynamos won the Sportsmanship Award.

"It was once in a lifetime event for everyone," said Dynamos coach Joe Griffin of Hingham. "We had 19 players and 45 parents who went on the trip and everyone had a blast. The tournament was a lot of fun and it was great being in Germany. Everyone came away with lots of special memories."

Ten different countries were represented at the Regensburg Cup. Those countries were: Sweden, Switzerland, Germany, Austria, Hungary, Estonia, Latvia, Holland, South Africa and the United States.

Griffin said the tourney was unlike any the Dynamos ever competed in. First of all, the Regensburg rink was an outdoor facility that had a larger neutral zone with smaller offensive and defensive zones than rinks in the United States. There were also different checking rules and more of an emphasis on passing and finesse. Plus the crowds numbered more than 1,500 people at some games.

"The only game we lost was our first game and I think we were still adjusting to the European style of play," Griffin said. "But it was great hockey and I was very proud of our players. They really had a great showing."

The USA players stayed with the players from the other countries at a youth hostel in Regensburg.

"The players from South Africa spoke some English and our guys were able to communicate with them," Griffin said. "But they really hit it off with the players from Sweden. They went to each others games and rooted for them in the finals." In addition to competing in the tourney, the Dynamo players and parents visited Regensburg, Nuremburg and Munich during their stay in Germany.

"Regensburg is a medieval city that was untouched by World War II and has stone bridges and cobblestone roads and was just beautiful," Griffin said. "The majority of our group had never been to Europe before and it was great to experience a different culture with its own language and food."

The members of the Dynamos were: Brad Arthur of Norwood, Trevor Clark of Randolph, John Durkin of Cohasset, Chris Fahey of Milton, Wes Fawcett of Hingham, Greg Genovese of Hingham, John Griffin of Hingham, Josh Helms of Sandwich, Marc Jackson of Bourne, James Lyons of Hanson, Justin Mahoney of Scituate, Pat McGuirk of Hingham, Chris Murphy of Abington, Pat Muse of Milton, Brian Pinch of Hingham, Pat Sampson of Braintree, Kyle Simpson of Scituate, Bobby Smith of Rayham and Pete Wilson of Marshfield. The coaches were: John Durkin of Cohasset, Joe Griffin of Hingham and Peter Muse of Milton.

Coaches, please call in your game results to the Mariner Sportsline at 1-800-649-6661, Ext. 4263 (GAME). Calls received by 5 p.m. on Tuesday will be printed in Thursday's edition of the newspaper.

Quintin nets a grand achievement

featured performer for Cohasset. Without a dominant big man to draw defenders into the paint, and with Jamie DeMichele the only other Skipper capable of consistent 15-point performances, Paul Michael has been double teamed by defenses designed to stop one scorer. Invariably, he has been guarded by the opponent's best defender. Yet, Quintin has still managed to average 22 points per game, earning one of The Boston Globe's nominations as Star of the Week last week.

"It's been a very good year, individually, for Paul-Michael," coach Ford commented. "He's had some spectacular games for us; he's a very prolific scorer. He's hit 65 threes for us this year, and close to half his career points have come on threes."

Ford dubbed Quintin the best shooter that has come through the program since Ford's arrival here and pointed out that the honor roll student has improved his ability to create his own shots this year.

One interesting facet of Quintin's game this year has been his rebounding ability. With no starter over 6'2", the Skippers have been killed on the glass this year. Listed generously at six feet even, Quintin is averaging about eight boards per game, hauling in as many as 15 in one night, an astonishing total for a guard.

Another interesting stat of Quintin's is that he leads the team in charges taken, a selfless act which can be a key play and momentum shift in a close ballgame. Ford pointed to the first Rockland game as an example of that. With his team trailing by 30, Quintin took three charges, a stat which usually won't show up in the scorebook, but the type of which is etched indelibly in the minds of teammates.

Paul-Michael Quintin is one of the great scorers to come out of Cohasset High School, and must score 54 points over his last three games to become the second leading scorer in the school's history. Quintin's last home game will be Wednesday, Feb. 18, in the Joseph "Hot" Sullivan gym.

Gjesteby to throw hat into selectmen's race

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Martha Gjesteby, a former selectwoman, was thought to be mulling over another run for office. Gjesteby, of 81 Old Pasture Road, waited until 48 hours before the deadline to take out papers for a possible run for a seat on the board of selectmen.

There were also two other candidates who will try to get on the ballot for the Apr. 4 town election. Capt. Hugh Morgan, who gave his address as 24 Bow St., will try for a seat on the school board. Morgan, a bus driver for the Cohasset school department, lost a bid for school committee in a previous campaign.

Also, Debra J. Krupczak of 71 Aaron River Road will run for the assessor's board. She is the only candidate so far for the three-year term.

The nomination papers with signatures of 50 registered voters must be returned to the Town Clerk's office by 5 p.m. Feb. 17. So far, five of the candidates have returned papers and are on the ballot. They are:

For health board, Steve Bobo.

For library trustee, June Hubard, Barbara Power, Carol Riley and Jamie Williams.

For sewer commissioner, Henry Rattenbury and Patrick Plante.

For planning board, Robert Sturdy.

For recreation commission, Richard Barrow.

For school committee, Mark DeGiacomo.

For selectmen, Merle Brown and Thomas Callahan.

Register to vote by March 7

The last day to register for the Annual Town Meeting and the Annual Town Election is Saturday, March 7, from 9 a.m. to 8 p.m. at the Town Clerk's Office. Registration forms are available at the Clerk's Office, the Cohasset Post Office and the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. This form may be mailed or hand-delivered to the town clerk's office but must be received or postmarked on or before the deadline.

The last day to obtain nomination papers for the Annual Town Election on Saturday, April 4, is Thursday, Feb. 12, and the last day to return papers is Tuesday, Feb. 17.

Dog licenses are now available. Licenses for female and male dogs are $15 and for spayed and neutered dogs $8, accompanied by a current rabies certificate.

No bus service for Lamberts Lane

The Lamberts Lane residents received a setback from the school board Feb. 5. The school committee told the group it will not yet be possible to provide bus service for the students who live on the private way.

Schools superintendent Stephen Hart said there is currently no place to turn the bus around safely. Hart said that problem would have to be solved before he could consider juggling bus schedules to make extra service feasible.

Hart said the trip down Lamberts Lane would add another 10 or 12 minutes to the bus schedules.

The Lamberts Lane group had argued their street was unusually dangerous for children to walk the distance to the school bus stop. The group also said the bus stop on Route 228 was in a hazardous location, too near a construction company's driveway.

However, the police department failed to support contentions Lamberts Lane was more dangerous than other streets in the town.

Despite the adverse outcome, the committee and the residents will continue to work on the problem, they said.

Board member Joseph McElroy has also committed to representing the school committee before the planning board. McElroy has written to the Chairman Al Moore about plans to expand parking at the Cohasset Golf Club which is located off Lamberts Lane. McElroy said he would also raise issues about 10 new houses to be occupied on the private way.

Brockton man nabbed after seven-town pursuit

Local police stress last Thursday's seven-town pursuit of a man driving a stolen car was just that — a pursuit, not a chase.

"We always want to adjust conditions depending on the time, weather, traffic," said Lt. Charles Souther of the Hingham Police Department.

Hingham police began pursuit about noon Thursday on Route 3A as the driver later identified as Dale Loulakis, 21, of Brockton raced into town in a blue Ford Taurus which he had allegedly stolen from Weymouth.

For the better part of an hour, Loulakis led police in a pursuit through Weymouth, Hingham, Cohasset, Scituate, Marshfield and Quincy. Loulakis finally hit a fire hydrant on Route 3A in Quincy and was later captured on foot.

At times Loulakis traveled at speeds upwards of 90 m.p.h., witnesses said. He passed cars on the right and left, drove along the soft shoulder of Route 3A and went the wrong way over the Fore River Bridge and around the Quincy rotary.

"We tried to keep him in sight. We tried to protect the public as best as we could. We tried to clear the roadway."

—POLICE OFFICER RICHARD YOCUM.

Loulakis, who was taken into custody by Hingham police, faces multiple charges from several towns including assault with a dangerous weapon, operating a motor vehicle negligently to endanger, failure to stop for a police officer, larceny of a motor vehicle, red light violations, and speeding. He plead innocent to the charges at his arraignment Feb. 6 in Hingham District Court and is being held without bail at the Barnstable House of Correction. A competency hearing at Hingham District Court was slated for yesterday (Feb. 11), according to published reports.

Officer Richard Yocum of Cohasset said it was a miracle that no one was killed.

"We tried to keep him in sight. We tried to protect the public as best as we could. We tried to clear the roadway," he said.

Yocum and Sgt. Robert Jackson tried to create a rolling roadblock with their cruisers to contain Loulakis but he passed Yocum on the right by South Shore Nissan.

Yocum said at one point the driver ran the red light at Beechwood and Route 3A and wove between two cars traveling across the intersection on Beechwood.

"I thought there was going to be another fatal at the intersection," Yocum said referring to an accident at the same spot last fall which claimed the life of a Scituate High School student.

Yocum said Loulakis ran the red lights at Beechwood, Pond Street and Stop & Shop.

Souther explained having police back off completely would not have made the situation any safer.

"He was doing his best to get out of the area and the way he was driving he didn't care," Souther said.

Police made 15 arrests last month

Police Chief Brian Noonan said January was "rather routine" for the police department. There were 15 arrests last month, including three for operating a motor vehicle after revocation of license (second or subsequent offense); three for outstanding warrants; one for breaking and entering in the nighttime with intent to commit a felony; one for assault and battery (domestic); one for simple assault and battery; one for keeping a disorderly house and minor in possession of alcohol; one for uttering a false prescription; one for assault and battery on a police officer; one for possession of a class D controlled substance; one for operating under the influence of alcohol and one protective custody.

There was one breaking and entering reported during the month at a residence, Noonan said.

During January, the Emergency Dispatch Center received 114 emergency calls that required a police response.

The yearly in-service training that requires each police officer to attend one week of training at the Criminal Justice Training Academy in Plymouth is about 75 percent complete, the chief said.

Cocaine arrest on Beechwood Street

Police Officer William Quigley arrested David B. Tedeschi, 39, 122 Old Forge Rd., Scituate, early Sunday morning by the Beechwood ball park.

After a traffic stop, further investigation revealed Tedeschi had a quantity of cocaine and marijuana in his possession, Quigley said.

Pursuant to the drug laws, police also seized $1,020 in personal checks and $1,463 in cash, he said.

Police charged Tedeschi with possession of cocaine and possession of cocaine with intent to distribute; possession of marijuana; conspiracy to violate the drug laws; speeding and failure to stay within marked lanes. Tedeschi's passenger, Edward Goodfellow, 27, 553 Beechwood St., Cohasset, was charged with possession of marijuana and conspiracy to violate drug laws, Quigley said.

Both men were arraigned on the charges Tuesday. Tedeschi was released on $5,000 cash bail and Goodfellow on $500 cash bail, police said.

A pre-trial hearing is set for April 21.

Grant to spark electricity project at Deer Hill

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Benjamin Franklin proved it existed with a kite, a key and the help of a lightning storm. Thomas Edison used it to invent the light bulb. Alexander Graham Bell harnessed it and began a revolution in communications.

Now, electricity is going to be a special part of the curriculum at the Deer Hill School. Soon, there may even be reason to speculate about the future inventions and discoveries to be made by the young scientists here.

Their teacher, Robert Bergquist, has recently been awarded a $5,000 grant from the Connecticut Energy Council of Teachers. Bergquist is the sixth grade science and mathematics teacher at the Cohasset school. He will use the funds to teach the class how electric power is generated and how it can be conserved.

> "It just gives the kids a chance to experience authentic learning with real-life applications."
> — ROBERT BERGQUIST, SIXTH-GRADE TEACHER.

Bergquist also said most of the learning would be through experiments, such as the pickle test. It is possible to turn a pickle into a light bulb, the teacher said.

"You run energy from one side of the pickle to the other, and it lights up like a fluorescent," he said.

Bergquist said the light is created when the sulfates and the water in the pickle react to the power surge. He suspects it works because the food has been pickled.

"I tried it with a cucumber, and it didn't work," he admitted.

Bergquist said he started trying to electrify food as a way to teach the youngsters about conducting electricity.

"Water is an excellent conductor," he said. It got him thinking about foods.

Bergquist also said the class will cook hot dogs to learn about resistors. He also has another experiment to make fireworks out of steel wool.

Robert Bergquist, 6th grade teacher at Deer hill School.

"The thinner the steel wool, the more it glows and actually burns," he said.

Bergquist called the experiments "guided discovery," and he plans to use experiments to c[illegible] some other basics such as t[illegible] ferences between AC an[illegible] currents. By the time the cla[illegible] over, the youngsters will know how to build battery cells and how to build circuit boards.

Bergquist also said the grant money will pay for wires and bulbs, as well as for some field trips. The class will travel to Seekonk, Mass. to see a power plant that runs on trash converted to energy.

"They'll see couches being turned into electricity," Bergquist said. "The aroma is stimulating."

They will also visit a fossil fuel power plant at Brighton Point, and hear from two speakers on opposite sides of the nuclear power controversy.

Moreover, Mass Electric is going to send an electric car to school. Finally, a consultant from STEM International will be on hand to teach the students about energy conservation.

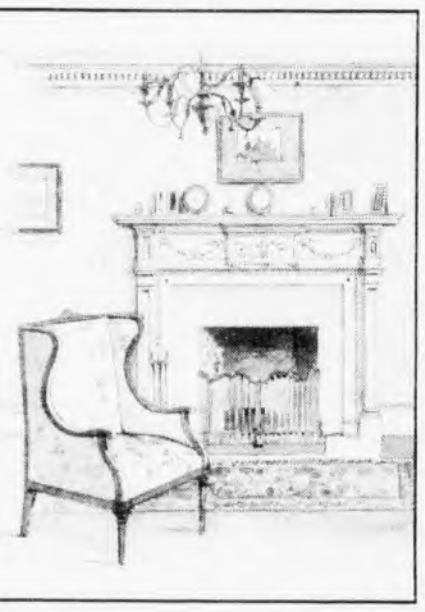
Learning is only part of the program. The students are also expected to apply the knowledge.

"Then they have to use their knowledge to serve some kind of purpose, other than something just within the sixth grade," Bergquist said.

The teacher has already come up with a short list of projects. They include an energy audit of the school, a demonstration of an electronic story board for the kindergarten and possibly another energy audit for seniors under the supervision of Boston Electric workers. (The last would be coordinated through the Council on Aging, and part of the job would be passing out energy-efficient light bulbs to the seniors.)

Bergquist said he would not be taking any of the "pickle" lights to the seniors, however.

"It just gives the kids a chance to experience authentic learning with real-life applications," he said.



Bergquist said he hoped the school energy audit could be presented to the school principal and custodians and maybe even the school board.

If money is left over, he has some other projects in mind — such as working on some motion detector light switches for the girls' and boys' lavatories and a few other items that need improvements.

Schools to battle selectmen over $30K budget cut

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

After the selectmen recently chopped $30,000 out of the school department's spending proposal for next year (FY99) school board member Ralph Kidder sounded ready to do battle. The selectmen's stinging 3-2 vote particularly irked Kidder. He sensed he was being double-crossed.

"My strong reaction is in response to two things," he said Monday. "Number one, I thought we had a deal."

Kidder said $115,000 he thought had been already promised was a compromise. The school board originally asked for $185,000.

But he also questioned the selectmen's ability to make a judgment on school needs.

"Number two, the board of selectmen is in no position to make an intelligent decision about the school budget," Kidder said. "They don't come to school committee budget hearings. And they should."

Election season begins in earnest

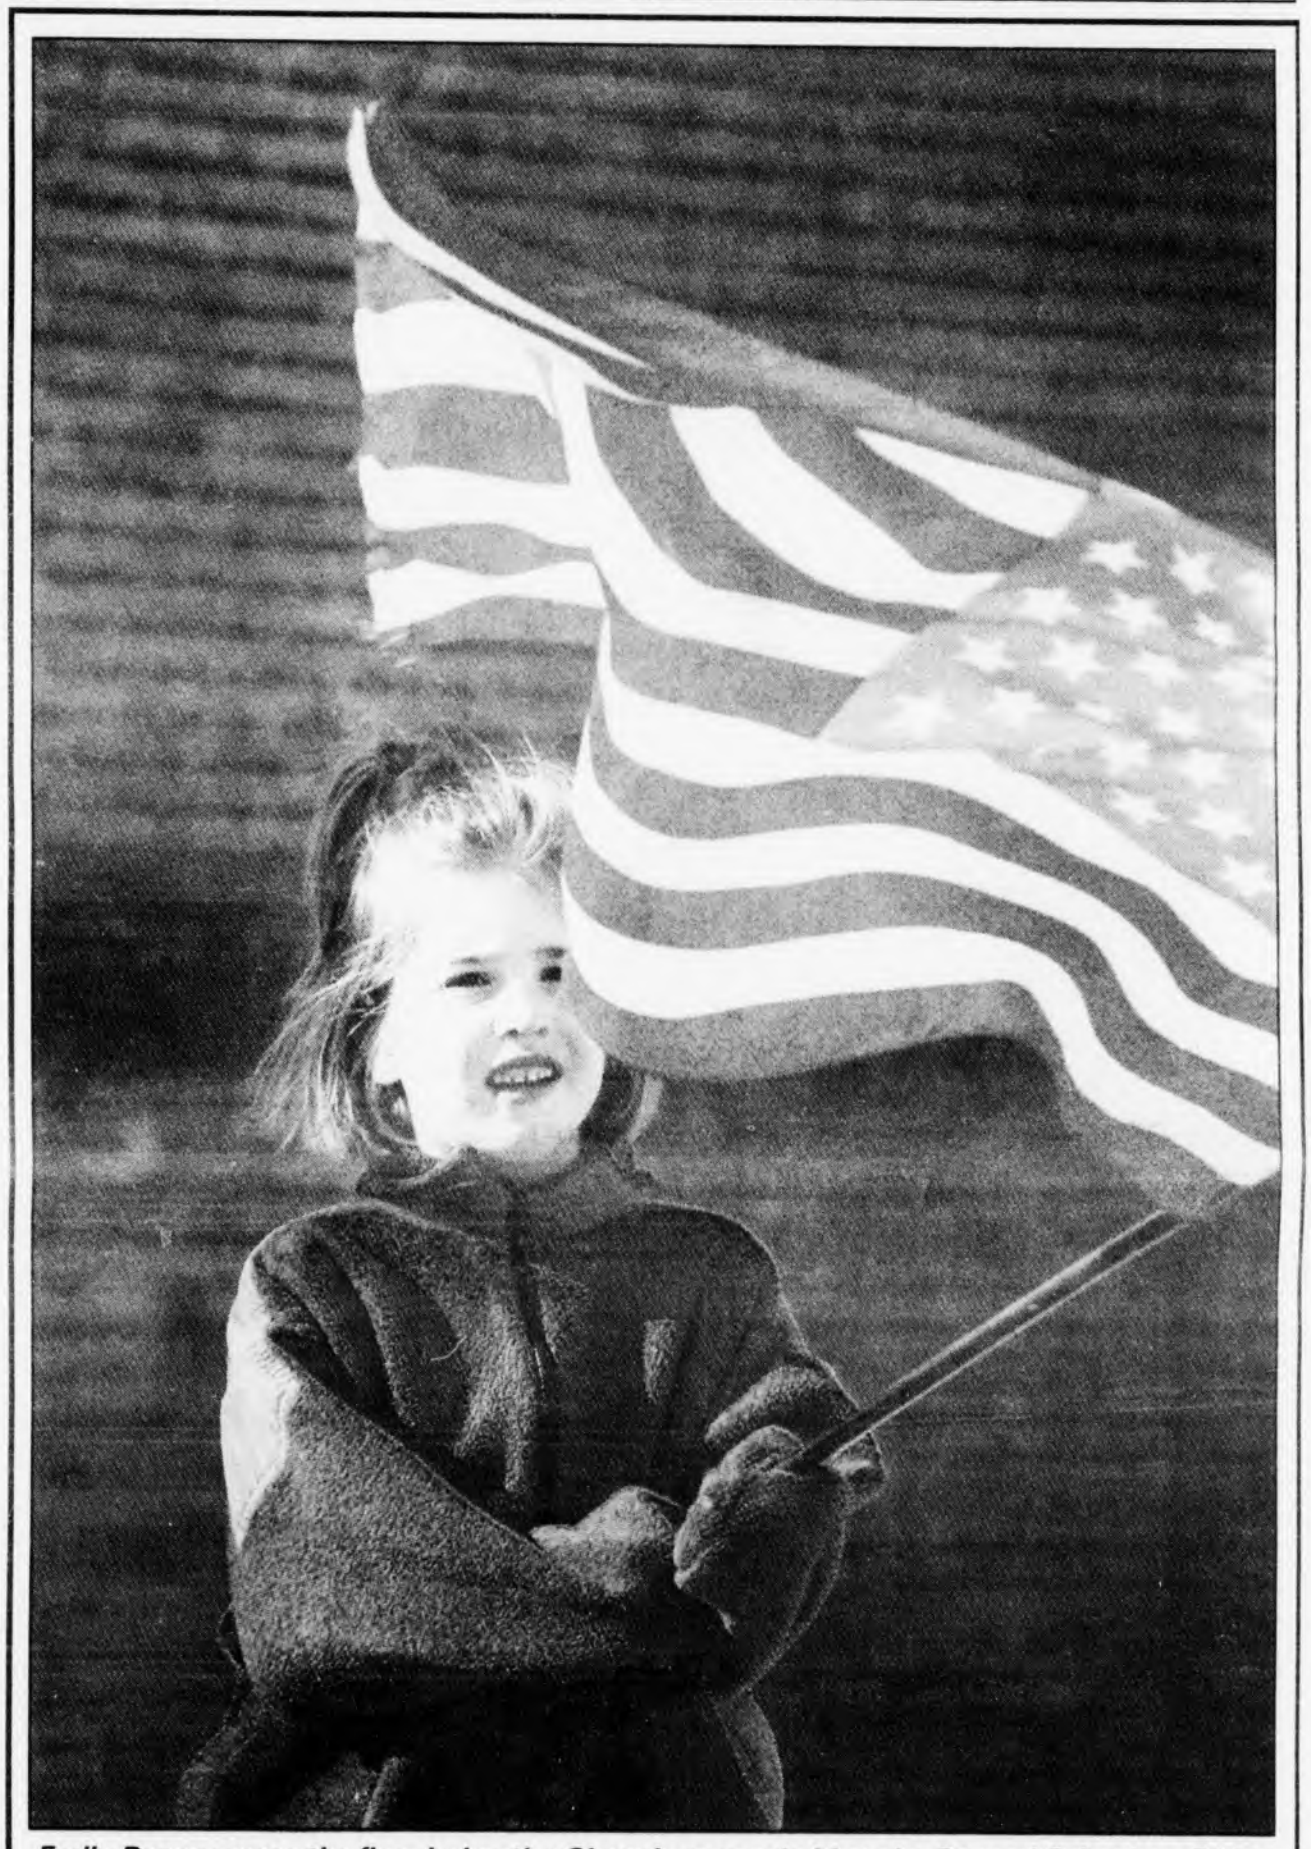
Three people decided at the last minute against a run for office in the Apr. 4 town election. John Fortin, Janyce Brown and Frederick Koed did not get the nomination papers to the town clerk before the Feb. 12 deadline. But all the others who announced they would run are, in fact, on the ballot.



With the ballot now set for the Apr. 4 town election, the veteran candidates have started making the rounds of meetings. The exchanges between the sitting board and the hopefuls might prove early signals of the way the new boards will work together.

For instance, the school board last week welcomed comments from candidates Mark DeGiacomo and Hugh Morgan. Both were at the Feb. 12 meeting.

Similarly, selectmen candidates Martha Gjesteby and Thomas Callahan also were consulted for their views during a recent meeting of the Greenbush Mitigation Committee.

Gjesteby and selectwoman Diane Sullivan got into a humorous exchange about a patch of blueberries in the town-owned sand pit. The T might take the pit to replicate wetlands unless the Corporation cooking up deal to sell Cohasset Chart House

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Officials at corporate headquarters for the Chart House restaurants in California confirmed yesterday they have accepted an offer for the Cohasset restaurant.

Lewis Jackson, vice president of development, said the Chart House has accepted an offer and is negotiating final terms.

"We hope to close on the sale fairly soon so the new party can get in and operate the restaurant in time for the season," Jackson said.

He would not comment on who the buyer is or the price.

However, Tom Fallon and Kristie Henrikson, owner of Siro's on Marina Bay in Quincy, said they understand Peter Roy of Margin Street is the buyer. Roy, whose family owns Kimball's by the Sea motel and restaurant on the harbor, could not be reached for comment.

Henrikson said she bid unsuccessfully on the property.

Fallon, who serves as his wife's adviser, said they initially bid $1.7 million and subsequently raised their bid to $1.85 million.

According to town records, the Chart House bought the restaurant formerly known as Hugo's for $2.75 million in March 1990. The Border Street property is currently assessed at $2.08 million.

When the Chart House closed in early January it employed about 40 people, most of whom were part-time. The Chart House corporation owns 60 restaurants nationwide including ones in

COHASSET'S WEEK

Police want civilian crossing guards at schools

Police Chief Brian Noonan will ask the school department to implement civilian school crossing guards next year.

He is concerned about leaving the school crossings unguarded when police are called away to respond to calls in their sectors.

Currently, the shore car covers the crossings at the Osgood School from 8:40 to 9:15 a.m. and from 2:45 to 3:15 p.m. Deer Hill is covered by the highway car from 8 to 8:30 a.m. and from 2:25 to 2:40 p.m.

"Next year all of the crossings will be at the Deer Hill School," Noonan said in a memo to school Supt. Stephen Hart. (The new school under construction behind Deer Hill is slated to open in the fall). "If school openings remain the same an officer would be required to stay there from 8 to 9:15 a.m. in the morning and 2:25 to 3:15 p.m. in the afternoon.

"To remove the highway car from its sector for these lengths of time could potentially compromise the safety of the town and is totally unacceptable to me," he said.

In an interview, Noonan said Scituate, Norwell, Marshfield and Hingham all use civilian crossing guards not police officers.

Ten minutes for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their weekly meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-9900 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. Mondays.

Reebok donates to garage project

Reebok, the Stoughton-based athletic footwear and apparel company recently donated $500 to the "garage" project being spearheaded by Tony Bramblett and other Cohasset teenagers who are working to convert the old DPW garage into a teen center.

Last fall, Reebok made a similar $500 donation to help support after-school busing programs for Cohasset METCO students who would otherwise find it difficult to participate in late afternoon extra-curricular activities.

Reebok sponsors a program called "HuRah" which encourages its employees to be active in local community service programs.

Pilgrim Co-operative has counted on Mulvey for 40 years

By Jennifer R. Horan
STAFF WRITER

The Pilgrim Co-operative Bank on South Main Street has seen many changes since it was first established in 1916. During the past 40 years, bank president Edward T. Mulvey has stood at the forefront of these changes.

"It's convenient and it's a good job," said Mulvey, 62, a Cohasset native.

As large banking chains have bought out other banks in town, Pilgrim Co-operative — which services about 4,000 local customers — has tripled in size and increased its annual worth from $3 million to $76 million.

"I feel sorry for the consumer," he said of the disappearance of single-branch, community bank. "There goes another opportunity for you to price somebody else. The more choices you have, the better off the consumer is."

Following in his father's footsteps, Mulvey started at the bank as a teller in 1938 after graduation from Boston College with a business and finance major.

"I miss being a teller more than anything," he said. "You meet a lot of people. The same people come in all the time."

By 1969, Mulvey had worked his way up to the position of manager and became president of the bank four years later.

Mulvey remembers how the advent of computers into the banking industry drastically maximized the bank's productivity.

"It's just such a change since I first came," he said.

Before automated computer records, employees had to sit for hours and add ledger cards by hand.

> "It's convenient and it's a good job."
> — ED MULVEY.

"It was such a cumbersome, detailed operation at times to run. Computers do it so much faster," he said.

As president, Mulvey oversees 10 employees and serves as the bank's manager, mortgage officer and policy maker.

"I am responsible for the health and soundness of the bank and making sure we respond to the needs of the community," he said.

Pilgrim Co-operative, a member FDIC/SIF, offers its clients savings, N.O.W. and money market accounts, home, auto and personal loans, IRAs, travelers checks, direct deposit, notary service and a 24-hour automated teller machine.

Many of the fees on services charged at the larger banking institutions are free at Pilgrim Co-operative, he said. A mutual bank as opposed to a stock bank, Pilgrim Co-operative is owned by its depositors and can offer certain savings, Mulvey explained.

"The bank makes certain commitments to service the product this way because that's the bank's philosophy," he said. "There are not a lot of frills. The bank is not for that. This is what the customers want."

Ed Mulvey, shown here at his desk, has been on the job at Pilgrim Co-Operative Bank for 40 years.

In addition to offering competitive banking services with a small-town touch, Pilgrim Co-operative also goes out of its way to play an active role in the community.

The bank donated the $12,000 80-foot fiberglass flagpole now standing at the town common after the previous pole rotted after standing at the site for more than 50 years. A special flag-raising ceremony was held on Veterans' Day to commemorate the event.

Other gifts to the town in recent years include the restoration of the clock face at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, the MacIver Reddie murals in the library depicting Cohasset's history and the electronic scoreboard for the athletic field at Cohasset High School.

A longtime member of the Cohasset Rotary Club, Mulvey plans to retire from the bank within the next few years.

Search for school's new leader may yield fewer candidates

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

The school board studied the realities of the job market recently when they decided how to advertise for a new leader for the school district. According to school committee member, Ralph Kidder, Cohasset wants to bring on an excellent person. To do so, the school board will have to learn some unwritten rules.

The board faces a dwindling pool of qualified candidates, Kidder said. (He was reporting the opinion of their consultant James Hardy.) Hardy told Kidder he expected at the most about 35 applications for the job, which is being vacated by Stephen Hart who plans to step down in August. In past years, 60 resumes would have been typical.

Hardy, from the state association of school committees, also previously told Kidder and school committee Chairwoman Maureen Jerz they would have to drop the idea of bringing semi-finalists in to meet with the community. Candidates want to be sure they are one of the finalists before they take time out of their busy schedules to visit a community, Kidder said.

"No semi-finalist is going to come here and spend the entire day being interviewed," Kidder reported, due to the realities of the job market.

But Kidder said he still expected the three or five finalists to come to Cohasset the week of May 18. The board members will also take on a visit to the finalists' school districts.

During a recent in-private session with the consultant, Kidder and Jerz came up with some recommendations. They addressed the job profile, the job qualifications and the time frame for interviews and hiring. In Jerz's absence last week, Kidder tried to get some unity from the rest of the panel. The purpose was to establish the next steps in the hiring process, prior to advertising the post in The Boston Globe March 1, in Education Week March 4 and in letters nationwide to school committees and superintendents. The board disagreed about some of the recommendations. But they generally solved the dispute by following other school boards' example.

> Wanted: An experienced school administrator with at least 10 years of experience and established track record in school finance or business management. Must be enthusiastic, dynamic, high-spirited leader. Doctorate preferred. Master's degree required.
> Salary range: $90,000 to $105,000.

The school board established three qualifications:

- Graduate education;
- Prior work experience as a teacher or a school administrator;
- Track record in school finance or business management.

The education of the superintendent proved to be a sticking point. Board members Richard Shea and Kidder differed over the issue of giving preference to candidates who earned their doctorates. The two were at extremes since Kidder said he personally would make the doctorate a requirement. However, Shea said he viewed the superintendent primarily as a manager.

"I don't particularly prefer a doctorate," Shea said. "I have an M.B.A. To me, a doctorate means you did some research. And you took some courses. And you wrote a thesis."

Shea said he thought job experience "infinitely more important."

Kidder said the superintendent also had to be the educational leader of the community. He also thought the Ed.D. would be better qualified to deal with curriculum issues.

Kidder said the focus groups did not want to make the doctorate a requirement. The board eventually agreed to follow the trend and say the doctorate degree was preferred, not required..

State law requires superintendents have only a master's degree, Kidder said.

Kidder and Jerz also recommended the candidates must have 10 years' minimum experience in education, though they did not specify how teaching experience and administrative experience should be weighted. The board finally chose wording that did not rule out "someone who has a tremendous amount of managerial experience and some teaching," Kidder said.

Shea wanted to know if experience on school committee would meet the qualification, but Kidder said it would not. Kidder said a member of the school board is a volunteer, not a professional. He also said all of the focus groups were against importing a superintendent from the business world.

"Nobody thought we should have someone from the business world," Kidder reminded the board.

Finally, the board agreed proven financial management skills should be a job qualification. Shea said the budget and long-range planning were part of the Cohasset superintendent's job, since the district lacks a business manager to handle money matters.

The board decided against a fourth qualification. The last requirement would have opened the job only to candidates who had experience implementing school-based technology. The board felt they would eliminate a number of good candidates if they adopted the fourth criterion.

The salary range also sparked a debate. Board member Joseph McElroy worried the board had settled on a figure higher than it needed to pay, if it published $95,000 as the low end of the range. Kidder said printing a number lower than $90,000 would send a signal to applicants. The signal would mean Cohasset was not in the market for a proven professional, he said. Kidder did not want to hire someone who would "learn to be a school superintendent in Cohasset," he said. Once again, market forces limited the amount of speculation on the issue. The board agreed they had to start at least with a $90,000 salary. Otherwise, the best candidates would not apply.

The board differed little about the new chief's main job responsibilities. Basically, they adapted a brochure previously used by the town of Mansfield. After they edited and reworked the brochure, the board had described a candidate prepared to:

- Lead the staff in teaching the curriculum;
- Understand the Education Reform Act;
- Raising test scores;
- Encourage the staff to continue professional studies;
- Build good relationships with the school committee and the community;
- Make the school district's goals work within a budget the town can afford.

The board intends to name Hart's replacement by the middle of June. They want the new superintendent to start work Aug. 3.

Kidder said the board would not begin interviews of the eight or ten semi-finalists until the beginning of May. The interviews with the semi-finalists and the finalists will be held in public, though the audience will not be able to ask questions.

He also said the consultant would screen the applications.

Fire department wants commercial lock boxes

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The fire chief wants to require all commercial buildings in town to install lock boxes.

The boxes, which would contain the keys, would be accessed through a master key held by the fire department.

Currently the fire department has a bag of more than 100 keys to different commercial buildings in town.

"It is much more efficient to have a key on the premises," Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said. "Now we're carrying over 100 keys in our pumper and we've outgrown our ability to carry them."

Selectmen were luke warm to backing a by-law requiring the lock boxes. But they felt Lincoln could require the boxes as a matter of policy.

Lincoln explained that lock boxes range in price from $200 to $300. The fire department would keep the master key which would open all the lock boxes.

That way there would be only one key on the truck and firefighters would be able to get into the building much faster, Lincoln said.

Selectman Diane Sullivan worried that the boxes could be opened "with one whack from a sledge hammer."

> "Now we're carrying over 100 keys in our pumper and we've outgrown our ability to carry them."
> — FIRE CHIEF ROGER LINCOLN.

But Lincoln said the boxes are strong and resistant to vandalism.

"It would create a lot of attention to hammer on one to get it open," he said.

The town's new DPW garage has a lock box. Selectman Merle Brown said all municipal buildings should have one.

Town Manager Mark Haddad will check with town counsel to see if Lincoln can require the lock boxes as a matter of policy. If so, selectmen will pull the warrant article asking for a by-law to require them on new buildings or after substantial renovations.

School board raises concerns about Lamberts Lane plans

School board member Joseph McElroy planned to be at the planning board meeting Feb. 18 to address questions about Lamberts Lane.

A report of hazardous conditions on the private way reached the school committee's ears Jan. 22. At that time, a group of mothers complained their school children faced a dangerous walk on Lamberts Lane to get to a school bus stop on Hull Street. McElroy is worried about plans to add 75 spaces to the parking lot of the Cohasset Golf Club. He said the move will bring more traffic to Lamberts Lane.

In a recent letter to planning board Chairman Al Moore, McElroy wrote he sees the a "likelihood of additional functions that may include the daytime consumption of alcoholic beverages," due to the golf club's expansion.

McElroy said he wants the planning board to consider the school children's safety before it approves the parking plan. He also seemed to link the planning board's approval to a proposal to create a safe bus turn-around on the private way. Currently, there is no place for the bus to make the turn around safely.

Finally, McElroy raised questions about a separate development. The developer is reportedly putting 10 more houses on Lamberts Lane. McElroy said the residential development might add to the number of school children on Lamberts Lane.

Board: MBTA is sending mixed signals

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Michael Dick took a hard line at a recent committee meeting. His group is dealing with the Greenbush commuter rail line that is coming through town.

Dick was fed up because the MBTA continued to waffle, on promises the committee has already won in writing. He came out against "interpreting" any more of the T's statements. At issue, he said, was a recent "curt" letter from the T's engineer, Robert Egan. Egan's letter said the T has already complied with Cohasset's requests for information. The authority does not need to do any more complying, Egan claimed.

The letter from the T tested the limits of local diplomacy. Dick found the Egan letter offensive. He suggested the panel turn down flat the T's request for a Feb. 25 joint meeting on Greenbush.

"Our basic requirement has not been met," Dick said. He said until it was, the committee should not deal with the T again about Greenbush.

Greenbush is the third prong of the T's Old Colony train restoration. Bogged down by legal challenges and behind schedule, the restoration of the third segment faces formidable obstacles. The T has nonetheless vowed the railroad will be built, even though the authority has to pay the town for "adverse impacts" due to the train.

Cohasset's Mitigation Committee was formed last year to deal with the challenges the train will bring to town. The committee's mission is to identify houses, businesses and sections of town that will be damaged by the Greenbush line's return. The panel also is supposed to research a variety of potential problems, such as vibrations, noise, safety and air quality. It also is to work with the transit authority on compromises.

But after making a bit of progress last fall, the Mitigation Committee is facing up to recent actions by the T that suggested bad faith. In question this past week was an apparent decision by the T. The authority has consistently opted to ignore new information about the scope of flooding in the James Brook watershed. The watershed abuts the right of way where the T plans to build the rail. Cohasset's engineer Domenic Tutela has said in a storm the tracks could be six inches under water, if the T goes ahead and designs the rail using inaccurate maps.

"I'm very confused," Dick said. "I think we've made a mess of this. Who's driving this flood issue? We have allowed the T to muddy the waters by disagreeing with so many of the things we've asked for. They've engaged us in some kind of shifting debate. We're not asking them to fund our flood control. Yet. We're not asking them to fund anything."

Dick then said the Mitigation Committee should nix the next meeting with the T until the transit authority came across with accurate flood numbers.

> "We have to be face to face."
> SELECTMAN NAN ROTH.

But after a spirited debate, the rest of the board decided the meeting would have to go on. Selectman Nan Roth said giving the T the "cold shoulder" would not work.

"We have to be face to face," said Roth.

Roth also said the upcoming meeting should be televised. Roth also pointed out that the T and the committee have gotten into a habit. "We tend to go away thinking different things," Roth said.

The selectman suggested the two sides sign a written statement at the end of future meetings to agree what was decided. She also said the committee should agree to the Feb. 25 meeting by letter. In the letter, the committee should reset the agenda for the meeting. The board also decided to repeat the requirement for more information about flooding.

The response from the T has not been forthcoming, Dick said.

And the response has been confused, Roth said.

Selectman Diane Sullivan also favored meeting with the T. She said there were some other questions on the agenda that could not be put off. Also high on the agenda were questions about the alternate train station at Nantasket Junction and questions about private grade crossings. (The T has denied the town's request and opted to close Lincoln Lane and denied the town's proposal to reconfigure the Sestito Lane gate.)

Nonetheless, flooding, the committee agreed, was the single most important issue in the talks between the town and the T. It has also been the thorniest since the state Environmental Protection Agency understated the extent of flooding in Cohasset.

"They have been working off the MEPA flood maps," committee Chairman Thomas Gruber said. Gruber also said the maps were flawed. Using bad data would allow the T to underestimate the amount of flood damage Cohasset would suffer in a severe storm, similar to the one of October 1996. Rising water then effectively put much of the village under water.

"They're effectively running a dike down the rail bed. Our ability to manage water is obviously affected."

Gruber said the T engineers, Sverdrup, and the town's engineer ought to be able to agree about numbers, calculations and assumptions.

Finally, the committee decided not to join with Hingham on an air quality study. Sullivan said the air quality was a safety issue for children and people with lung problems. The mitigation board needed to deal with the problem on that narrow basis rather than get into regional studies about air pollution that would be meaningless ultimately, since Cohasset would be only a small part of the study.

Sullivan said such joint studies had previously turned out unsatisfactory, due to Cohasset's small size.

"We're a small town," Sullivan said. "We'd be paying for something that doesn't directly benefit Cohasset. I only care how our people are impacted."

The committee also planned an executive session meeting with the board of selectmen Monday to deal with pending litigation over open space issues.

town can prove it is using the area. There's also concerns about air quality. So, when Gjesteby mentioned there were blueberries in the sand pits, Sullivan had a question.

"We're worried about people choking to death. You're worried about blueberries?" Sullivan laughed.

Callahan also had a suggestion the board could go into executive session to discuss "potential litigation," though he knew that was not right, according to the open meetings law.

"You can stretch it," Callahan said, though he allowed "pending," not potential litigation was a sufficient reason to take a meeting behind closed doors.

Now that the contested races are known, there should be many more such moments from the candidates running for selectmen and school committee. There are also contests for one seat on the board of health, one on the sewer commission, and one on the board of library trustees.

The candidates are:

- For health board, Steve Bobo faces Michael Spirito. Both are political newcomers.
- For library trustee, Carol Riley and Jamie Williams vie for one unexpired two-year term.
- For sewer commissioner, incumbent Henry Rattenbury gets a challenge from Patrick Plante.
- For selectmen, incumbent Merle Brown, former selectmen Rocco Laugelle and Martha Gjesteby, who were defeated a few years back, are in the race with Thomas Callahan and William Ross. Callahan, the conservation commission chairman, lost a bid for board of selectmen last year. Ross is a newcomer to politics.
- For school committee, Mark DeGiacomo, the chairman of the zoning board, is in the hunt for one of two terms that expire in April. Also in the field are Patricia Martin, a social worker, and Hugh Morgan, a school bus driver. Morgan made an unsuccessful run for school committee previously. He found many reasons to run for school board.

"The main thing," he said, "Being a graduate of the Cohasset school system, I see a lot of things. I'm in the schools every day."

Morgan cited "falling apart" buildings, an "ancient" library system and transportation as key issues. But the main reason, he said, was his "love for the children." Morgan said he wanted to be on the school board to make sure "each child gets the best opportunity money can buy."

Both the incumbents on the school board, Maureen Jerz and Ralph Kidder, decided not to try for another term.

The other races are not contested. The candidates are:

- For assessor, Deborah Krupczak.
- For three library trustees, the three incumbents June Hubbard, Sarah Pease and Barbara Power.
- For planning board, Robert Sturdy.
- For recreation commission, Richard Barrow.
- For water commissioner Robert Kassameyer.

Chart House deal is in the works

Aspen, Col., Rhode Island and the Hawaiian Islands. The Chart House pulled the plug on the Cohasset site because it didn't attract the numbers corporate headquarters wanted.

"We had to do a heck of a lot of business to do a respectable return," Randy McNamara, vice president of operations, said.

Henrikson said she wished the new owners well.

"Hopefully, they'll do something wonderful," she said. Henrikson added she is looking forward to dining out at a great restaurant in Cohasset.

Some in town have expressed concern about what would locate to the restaurant. Closing the Chart House dealt a slight blow just as the town embarks on a plan to revitalize Cohasset's "downtown."

At the time of the closing, Dean Rizzo, vice president of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce said the restaurant is a "big draw" in bringing out-of-towners to Cohasset.

The restaurant was a popular spot for wedding receptions and other functions.

SPENDING MORE TIME IN TOWN

Bette Edminster retired Dec. 31 from Keyport Life Insurance Company where she had worked for 22 years. Two hundred guests gathered to wish her well at a gala retirement party given for her in the Omni Room at the Parker House. Among those attending were Bette's son, Norm, and his two children Brett and Liz, who came down for the celebration from the University of New Hampshire. Bette's daughter, Lynne, flew in from San Francisco. Music added to the festive atmosphere, while the guests enjoyed a superb meal. The president of Keyport, John Rosenfield, presented Bette with two years' of airline tickets, generous American Express checks and an exquisite pin. Bette is now able to spend more time in Cohasset, and relieved to be getting away from Boston's icy streets! Those of us who missed seeing Bette during her busy career days are delighted she will be more available in the weeks and months ahead!

MAY I PRESENT

Sallyann Chatterton

Are your children at the point during this school vacation where they "don't have anything to do?" Well, this might just be the answer! This recipe is simple enough for a youngster to prepare, but it will satisfy the heartiest of appetites! And, Mexican Lasagna is as good to look at as it is to eat!

This is a family favorite, as well as being one of the recipes that everyone asks for when I bring it to any occasion!

MEXICAN LASAGNA

1-1/2 pounds ground beef
1-1/2 teaspoons ground cumin
1 tablespoon chili powder
1/4 teaspoon garlic powder
1/4 teaspoon red pepper
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon black pepper
1 can (16 ounces) tomatoes, chopped
10 to 12 corn tortillas
2 cups small curd cottage cheese, drained
1 cup grated Monterey Jack cheese with peppers
1 egg
1/2 cup grated cheddar cheese
2 cups shredded lettuce
1/2 cup chopped tomatoes
3 green onions, chopped
1/4 cup sliced black olives

Brown ground beef; drain thoroughly. Add cumin, chili powder, garlic powder, red pepper, salt, pepper and tomatoes; heat through. Cover bottom and sides of a 13-in. x 9-in. by 2-in. baking dish with tortillas. Pour beef mixture over tortillas; place a layer of tortillas over meat mixture and set aside. Combine cottage cheese, Monterey Jack cheese and egg; pour over tortillas. Bake at 350 degrees for 30 minutes. Remove from oven; sprinkle rows of cheddar cheese, lettuce, tomatoes, green onions and olives diagonally across center of casserole. Makes 6 to 8 servings.

COHASSET MARINER

EDITORIALS & OPINIONS

'Tis the season

No one can accuse Cohasset of governmental apathy. With five races on the April 4 town election ballot, this is going to be one of the hottest election seasons in recent memory.

There are races for seats on the board of selectmen, school committee, board of health, sewer commission and library trustees.

In keeping with our tradition, we will pose a Question of the Week to the candidates for contested seats.

Thomas Callahan, Martha Gjesteby, Bill Ross, Rocco Laugelle and incumbent Merle Brown will compete for two seats on the board of selectmen. Chairman Michael H. Sullivan will not seek a third term.

Mark DeGiacomo, Hugh Morgan, and Patricia Martin are vying for two open seats on the school committee. Ralph Kidder and Maureen Jerz are not seeking reelection.

Patrick Plante will challenge incumbent Henry Rattenbury for his seat on the sewer commission. Stephen Bobo and Michael Spirito will go head to head for the open seat on the board of health. Tom Cook is not seeking reelection.

And Carol Riley and Jamie Williams will vie to fill a two-year, unexpired term on the board of library trustees.

All candidates, opposed or unopposed, who have not already done so, are invited to submit photographs and formal statements announcing their candidacies.

Starting next week, we will feature candidates' answers to the Question of the Week. Responses should be brief — no more than 250 words — and must be received by 2 p.m., Monday. Candidates are asked to be specific and make every word count. Submissions will be cut if they exceed the word limit. (We use the word count feature on the computer to add up the number of words).

The following is the first Question of the Week. (In subsequent weeks, separate questions will be posed to each group of candidates running for the different boards).

'What is the most controversial issue facing the board you would like to represent? Where do you stand on the issue?'

Candidates may reply by the FAX at 781-741-2931 or by mailing or dropping off their responses at the Cohasset Mariner office in Hingham, on 73 South St. by 2 p.m., Monday. Be sure to leave enough time for mail delivery. Items may also be dropped off at Cohasset News on Brook Street.

We will also publish a candidates' corner but it is limited to a few lines (about 100 words) from any candidate who chooses to submit dates of coffees, fund-raisers and the like.

The Mariner will not accept Letters to the Editor from candidates or letters endorsing or attacking candidates. The Mariner will publish letters about campaign issues up until the March 26 edition before the election.

Candidates are encouraged to advertise their campaigns in the Mariner. For information about deadlines and costs of political advertisements, please contact Claudia Oliver at 781-837-4519.

If you have any questions, please call us at 383-8139.

CANDIDATES' CORNER

Gjesteby announces candidacy for selectman

Martha Gjesteby

For more than 30 years, Martha Gjesteby has served the town in numerous ways. Currently, she represents Cohasset on the Metropolitan Area Planning Council.

Her former elected offices include: nine years on the board of selectmen; six years on the school committee and two years on the planning board. In addition, Gjesteby was appointed to the capital budget committee and the tri-town commission, the joint regional transportation committee and the citizen advisory committee to study the feasibility of restoring the Old Colony Railroad.

On the state level she is a past member of the governor's Local Advisory Council, second Vice President of the Massachusetts Selectmen's Association, Treasurer and Secretary and executive committee member of the Metropolitan Area Council.

Her civic memberships are as follows: the South Shore Community Center of which she is a former director; the Community Garden Club of which she is a former board member and The Cohasset Historical Society in which she is presently a board member.

Gjesteby underlines that the town needs a more comprehensive approach in planning for such vitally important projects as sewerage and the schools. "The capital budget committee has done some good work but our selectmen must be more involved," she continues.

The issues in both projects are complex, Gjesteby emphasizes. She notes her experience in such areas as funding availability and requirements, both state and local. And, she feels that the sewer plan approved by the most recent town meeting does not include sewering Lily Pond and Little Harbor, both of which have been identified as priority areas in the Tutela Environment Report.

Public safety is another concern. It is important to remember that Gjesteby both as a private citizen and a town board member has consistently opposed what is now known as Cohasset Heights since 1975. "I've always been concerned about the effects on our town's water supply," she explains. She also points to the need for a four-way traffic light at the intersection of King and North Main Streets.

Gjesteby was educated in Boston public schools and holds a B.S. from Simmons College. She was formerly employed by the Dana Farber Center and Harvard Public Health. She has served as clerk of the board of a family-owned business for many years.

She has lived in Cohasset since 1961 with her husband Arne and their four children, Erik, Rolf, Ingrid and Nils — all of whom graduated from Cohasset High School.

Schools to battle selectmen over $30K budget cut

will go face to face with the selectmen Monday to settle the question.

Though Kidder was fiery at the recent school board meeting, he might not have to fight hard when he gets to the selectmen. A new compromise is likely, according to Town Manager Mark Haddad.

"We have a disagreement here," Haddad said. "But that doesn't mean it can't be resolved."

Haddad said with just $30,000 in contention, he was confident a solution could be worked out. Moreover, the Town Manager said he would like to have the school committee's backing when the town budget goes to the voters at town meeting.

But Haddad dismissed the view the selectmen lacked information when they voted on the school budget.

"The school board made a presentation," Haddad said. The majority of the selectmen said the school department failed to prove their case. He also said he had worked hard to keep lines of communication open.

Other school board members also appeared in the mood to mull over a settlement. Joseph McElroy and Richard Shea said the selectmen were probably well-intentioned when they voted to cut the school budget.

"Our job is to argue strongly and compellingly for what we think is required. But if the selectmen, the Town Manager and the Advisory Committee are being fair, we have to accept that."

McElroy favored taking another stab at the explanations. As before, he said a number of issues was driving the budget, among them contractual obligations, special education costs and enrollments.

Meantime, schools superintendent Stephen Hart has taken the budget proposal (for fiscal year 1999) back to the principals. Hart said the total proposal is $8.1 million, but the summary lines were not yet available, due to the new round of alterations. The administration is looking for places to cut the $30,000 in expenses, though he will attempt to make the case for a bigger budget Feb. 23.

"I'm not sure how much more (information) we can add," Hart said about the upcoming meeting with the selectmen. The superintendent, who is set to retire in August, also signaled he was in no mood for a fight.

"I'm trying to get through these next couple of months with as little wear and tear on my psyche as possible," Hart said.

Kidder also is leaving the school committee after nine years, but he said he was ready to go out fighting.

"I guess I should feel that way," Kidder said after Hart spoke about leaving. "But I don't feel that way. I am willing to fight."

Kidder said if the selectmen previously failed to grasp the school department's "rational" presentation, he favored trying a new tack.

"I'll present it to them in an irrational way, then," Kidder said. "They made an 11:30 decision that makes no sense. They have acted arbitrarily. They acted capriciously. They completely overstepped their bounds. Their behavior was outrageous."

At their meeting last week, selectmen Ronnie McMorris and Michael Sullivan wanted to give the schools $115,000. They were out voted by Merle Brown, Diane Sullivan and Nan Roth who voted to cut that request by $30,000. Plans are to use the $30,000 for drainage projects on Beach and Beechwood streets.

McMorris said she was convinced any less than the $115,000 would "seriously impact" the schools.

Budgetary process is different this year

This year marks the first time Cohasset has had a Town Manager as its top executive. In prior years, the town had a different form of government with a Town Administrator. Then the budget was ultimately the selectmen's budget, although the administrator drafted it.

This year's $18.5 million budget is the Town Manager's budget, however. For the first time, he, not the selectmen, has the final say, though Haddad said he has adopted all the selectmen's recommendations.

Haddad also said there will never be a split between the board and the Town Manager while he has the job. In theory, if they disagreed, Haddad's budget would go before the voters. If the selectmen wanted to change it, they would have to amend it on the town meeting floor. But Haddad said that scenario is not a real possibility.

"That won't happen while I'm here," Haddad said. "I will always work with the selectmen to find a compromise."

ATLANTIC BAGEL & DELI

COHASSET, MA

What makes our bagels the best?

We make all of our dough and use only natural ingredients. There are no artificial flavorings or preservatives. It is used fresh, it is never frozen. We boil, then bake our dough daily. We never serve "day old" bagels. That is the only way to ensure the fresh and chewy taste of a really fresh bagel. Many bagel shops use dough that contains preservatives or artificial flavorings. Few shops bother to boil dough before baking it. Many bagel shops will bake dough that comes frozen, others use bagels that are partially cooked at the factory and "finished" on site. Finishing partially cooked bagels gives them a "day old" taste. It is no wonder that the large chains that offer bagels are facing difficult times. Analysts are wondering why the stock price of publicly traded bagel chains has dropped by as much as 50% in the last years. We feel that this drop is because the shareholders have now tasted their own bagels. Stop by and taste a real bagel.

In the mood for something different?* Try one of these:

• Roast beef and bacon with red onion and thousand island dressing on an onion bagel
• Turkey club on a toasted "triple decker" bagel • A crock of chili or onion soup with melted cheeses on top (for in-store eating only) • Homemade beef stew with a bagel for dipping
• Hot pastrami and swiss cheese on a plain bagel • Pepperoni bagel pizza
• Turkey, stuffing and cranberry sauce on a plain roll-up
• Grilled chicken breast with cheddar cheese, grilled peppers and onions on an herb and garlic roll-up

Or mix and match

Over 14 types of bagel, 15 types of cream cheese, 15 meat and sandwich toppings, 5 types of roll-up bread, 10 vegetable toppings, 3 mustards, and more. We have soups, chili, quiches, salads and ice cream for dessert.

Catering Special

Award winning food at unbeatable prices. Our Executive Chef, Marilyn Chasen-Brunoli (winner of three People's Choice Awards, Chili Cook-off, and rated 93 by the Phantom Gourmet) will plan and prepare your functions. Soup by the cup or gallon, sandwiches of any type, prepared foods cooked or ready to cook.

Party ideas for $50 or less

COHASSET MARINER

One grand achievement for Hamill

Cohasset native Sally Hamill, with the ball, recently became the first person ever at Notre Dame Academy to reach the 1,000 career point mark.

NDA junior guard nets 1,000th career point

By David McKee
STAFF WRITER

Sally Hamill is a lethal weapon.

Whenever the Notre Dame Academy junior guard steps on the basketball court, she is a serious threat to wear out the bottom of the basket.

And last Wednesday against Rockland, the 17-year-old former Cohasset resident became the first-ever NDA basketball player to score 1,000 career points.

Needing 24 points against the Lady Bulldogs to reach the magic number, Hamill ended up with 25 as the landmark point came on a three-point bomb late in the second half.

"It was a big relief for me," Hamill admitted. "I knew going into the game that I had a chance that night and was shooting pretty well early on. I cooled off some in the second half, but my teammates started feeding me the ball at the end and it was nice to get it done with a three."

What makes Hamill's grand accomplishment even more impressive is that it came in only three years of varsity basketball. She has been a three-year starter at NDA at point guard.

"I really didn't know how close I was at the start of the year," she said. "But my coach (Don Edmonson) and my father (Berny) kept track of my point total and I started to really feel the pressure when I got within 150 points or so. I'm just glad I made it. Now I can move on to other things."

While Hamill was pleased to hit this grand number, she is more concerned with the upcoming Division II state tournament. The tourney pairings will be known at the end of next week.

The NDA Aces, who have already wrapped up the Catholic Conference league championship, went on to beat Rockland 63-33 and improve their record to 14-3.

They are considered one of the top teams in the Division II south bracket. Last year while playing in the Division I tourney, the Aces beat Silver Lake and EMass top scorer Marche Strickland in the opening round of play.

"Reaching 1,000 points was one of my goals this year but I have bigger things on my mind for the team," Hamill said. "We've clinched the league title already and I'm hoping we can end up with a good seed heading into the state tournament. And once we're there, I'd really like to win it all. I know there's a lot of basketball to be played but it would great to win the championship."

Hamill is used to playing championship basketball. Last year the 5' 5" point guard helped her AAU basketball team, the Eastern Mass Black Magic, win the state championship. The team is coached by her dad, Berny Hamill. One of her teammates on the Black Magic is Strickland.

Sally began playing basketball at an early age while growing up in Cohasset and attending St. Paul's in Hingham. (She never attended public schools.)

When she was 12 she started playing AAU ball with her dad as the coach. Last year her family moved to Scituate.

"I was out in my backyard shooting baskets when I was in first or second grade and I enjoyed the game right from the start," she said. "I've always been a pretty good shooter but I also enjoy passing the ball and helping my teammates score."

Hamil realized she had some basketball talent when she was in the fourth grade.

"I was in the fourth grade but I was playing on an eighth grade team and holding my own," she said. "I knew at that point that I had a chance of being pretty good. And I've had a lot of fun playing basketball over the years. I've made some great friends and traveled to some cool places along the way."

After she completes her junior season at NDA, Hamill will play AAU ball in the spring and attend a few basketball camps in the summer. She is hoping to have an even better year at NDA as a senior.

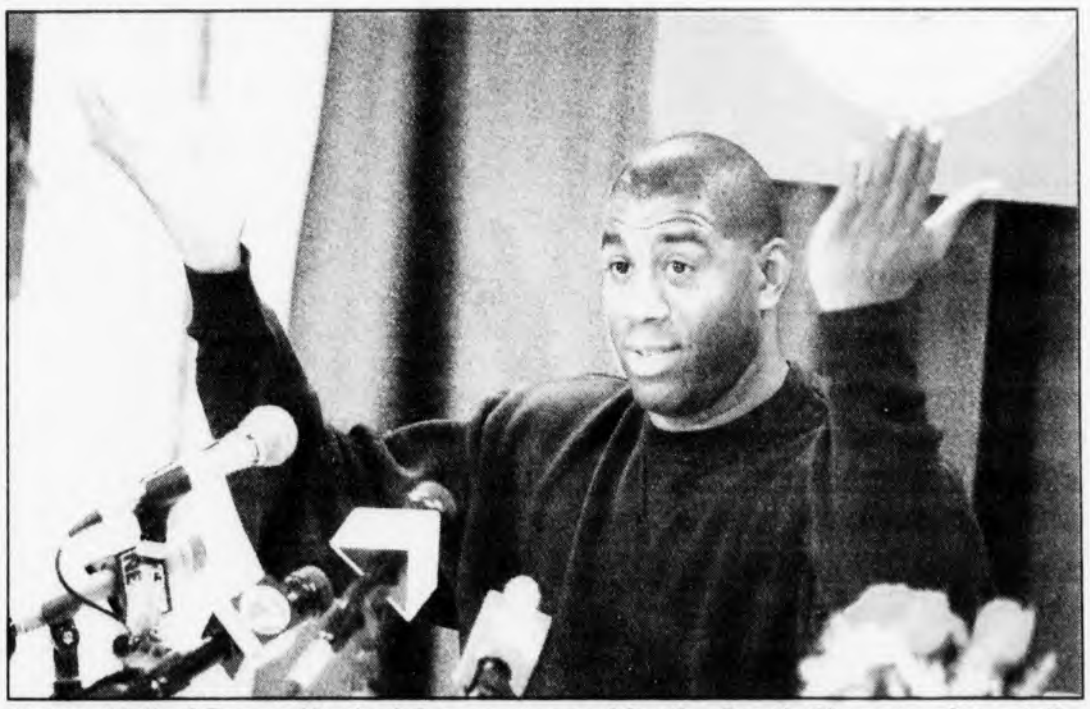
EXTRA POINTS David Wolcott

A Magic moment that needs to be shared

I used to hate Magic Johnson.

Growing up a true Celtics fan, to me he stood for everything that was wrong with the world.

He was all glitter and glamour, not the stuff champions were made of. He strutted, he posed and threw the no-look-through-the-legs-behind-the-back pass when a simple bounce pass would have been easier, but it wouldn't have gotten him some face time on SportsCenter.



And that darn smile. Was he ever not grinning?

And wherever he went the beautiful people were sure to follow. Jack Nicholson, Dyan Cannon, Arsenio Hall, Billy Crystal and all the rest of those Hollywood types were all over the front row of the "Fabulous Forum" during the memorable Celtics-Lakers championship battles in the 1980s, hoping that one shot of them on television would get them some acting work.

At least devout Knicks fan Spike Lee knows something about the game of basketball. These Hollywood people were as fake and plastic as your average Baywatch actress.

So when Johnson came into enemy territory last week, namely Bridgewater State College, to give a talk at my alma mater sponsored by the Student Government Association, I expected to find the man I used to hate at the press conference held before his talk.

Small team shows big heart in winning Pilgrim title

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Of the four South Shore League titles the Cohasset High girls gymnastics team has won over the past five seasons, this year's championship the Lady Skippers are sharing with Hanover came as the biggest surprise.

True, the team was loaded with young talent (see Kristen Sheerin's All-Around tie in the league championship), but head coach Ruthann Ardizzoni had just seven girls on the squad. In past years Cohasset would attack its schedule with 10 to 12 strong.

Still, there was the thought of a championship banner in the back of the girls' minds. When they defeated the Lady Indians for the first time, Cohasset knew for sure a title was well within reach.

"They were hoping to be league champions," Ardizzoni said, "but I'm not sure they thought it was possible. They figured they'd finish second or third.

"I'm really pleased. It was amazing what the seven girls could accomplish. Once they realized they realized they could be league champions they went at it very hard."

Cohasset wound up its season on Saturday as the 12th seed in the South Sectional meet at Algonquin Regional School in Southborough.

> "I'm really pleased. It was amazing what the seven girls could accomplish. Once they realized they realized they could be league champions they went at it very hard."
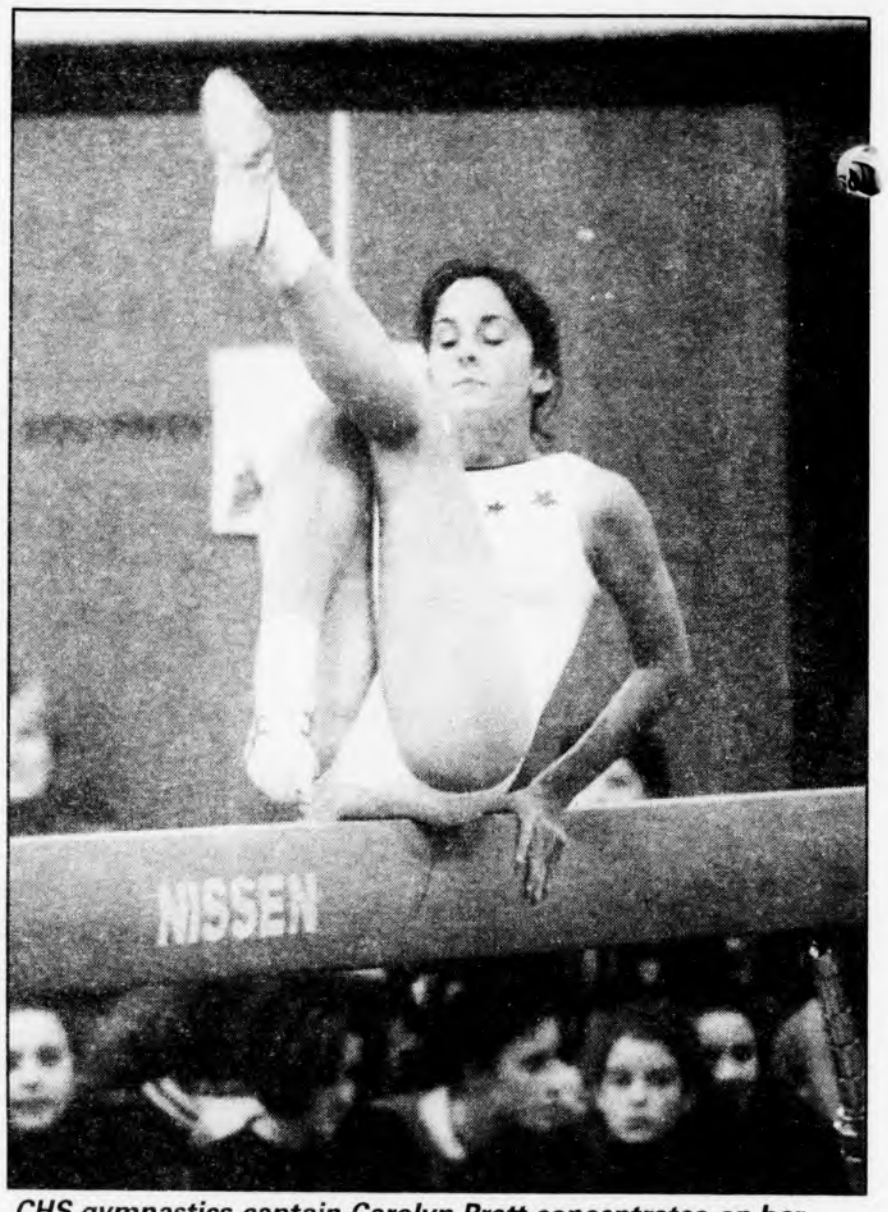
> RUTHANN ARDIZZONI

The Lady Skippers, led by a fine 8.1 from Sheerin on the balance beam, finished with a credible 117.3 score. Co-captain Tara Hettstrom, still feeling the effects of a painful back strain, was only able to compete in two events, compared to her usual three or four.

The real story this season was not the South Sectional competition, but the manner in which the Lady Skippers attained their 9-1 record to tie the Lady Indians.

Ardizzoni was quick to credit team captain Carolyn Pratt and youngsters Kate Grimm and Amanda Watts. Pratt, the lone senior on the squad, proved to be the consummate team player. She competed in events she wouldn't have had to on a larger team and was happy to do it. Ardizzoni didn't hear a peep from her all season.

"Carolyn did whatever was asked of her to help the team," Ardizzoni said.



Grimm and Watts "improved a great deal," according to Ardizzoni and were key members of the squad. "With only seven girls on the team, we needed the kids who competed in one or two events as much as those on three or four," she said.

The Lady Skippers also could have used the help of seventh-grader Meredith Bixby. But because of her junior-high status, Bixby's scores didn't count in the varsity meets. There were times this season when her performances drew higher marks than some of the varsity scores that figured into the overall results.

Despite sharing the league title, Ardizzoni firmly believes the Lady Skippers were never able to put forth their best performance of the season. Injuries and sickness figured into more than a couple of meets, leaving Cohasset shorthanded. They did record a season-best 119.8, but Ardizzoni knew the Lady Skippers had a 122 in them with a healthy squad.

"We never hit our best performance," she said.

No, but there were plenty of SSL teams that would trade places with Cohasset in a minute for that league banner.

CHS gymnastics captain Carolyn Pratt concentrates on her beam routine. The young squad turned a lot of heads this season, finishing in a tie for the Pilgrim Conference title with Hanover.

Future is looking a little brighter for CHS swimmers

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

Under the enthusiastic tutelage of coach Gordon MacKinnon, the Cohasset High School swimming team enjoyed a successful season this winter. With MacKinnon's guidance and the leadership of five talented seniors, the squad posted two wins, two more than any of the previous three seasons combined.

The swim team finds itself hindered when it competes against other towns. Competing in both the Bay Colony League, which is a mixed gender league, and the Pilgrim Conference, which is exclusively male, the team only has 17 swimmers, 11 of whom are female.

Thus, MacKinnon noted, this "puts us at a disadvantage. We'll sometimes have a ninth-grade girl swimming against a 12th-grade boy from another team. There will be a difference in there, not only in age, but also in strength and speed in the water."

But for the most part, MacKinnon was very positive about his team's performance.

"We're a young team; next year we won't have any seniors. This is a team who hadn't won a meet the last two or three years, and we were able to win two this year, which I think bodes well for the future."

The swimming program is indeed young, heavily numbered by junior high and early high school students. The five seniors are Greg Bilton, Colin Kilroy and tri-captains Derek Bugley, Sue Gill and Pat Leahy.

MacKinnon had nothing but praise for Bilton, who has been swimming competitively for years, but not for the school team until this year. According to his coach, Bilton shattered seven conference records.

> "We're a young team; next year we won't have any seniors. This is a team who hadn't won a meet the last two or three years, and we were able to win two this year, which I think bodes well for the future."
> GORDON MACKINNON

"He will go on and do very well at States. Bilton is really every coach's dream; I can't take any credit for developing Greg," MacKinnon chuckled.

The team had no juniors, but five sophomore girls, Jen Chastain, Mora Duffy, Jen Meehan, Kate Stone and Jesse Zerendow. MacKinnon pointed to this group as the cornerstone for the team over the next two seasons, singling out Duffy as a very talented swimmer and diver. Duffy only dove in three of the team's 13 meets, but took home victory each time she did.

The team's freshmen are Cara Foley and Chris Golden, both of whom MacKinnon cited as very talented, and its underclassmen included Yasmine Afshar, Alexis Bugley, Ashley Leahy, David Crowley-Buck and Kelly Stone. With such a stable of young talent, MacKinnon should be ready to continue to improve the Skippers' record next winter.

However, he noted that there has been discussion about combining the teams of Cohasset and Scituate.

"We have just enough swimmers to participate in all 12 events. This step would be taken to prevent this program from dying a slow death."

MacKinnon pointed at an abundance of other winter activities and a sheer number shortage as reasons for his small team, mentioning that some teams attended meets with 30 or 40 competitors.

The idea of combining the Cohasset and Scituate squads is an intriguing one and deserves some speculation, but Coach MacKinnon seems to be doing a fine job of improving Cohasset's program.

To my surprise, one of us has changed a great deal over the past decade as what I found was a true gentleman with a message he wanted to spread and, best yet, a growing disgust for what the NBA has become since shoe contracts became more important than a properly executed pick-and-roll and the $100 million contract became a realty and not a sick joke.

More importantly, I found a man who has a mission to help others. Diagnosed with the HIV virus in 1992, the Magic Johnson Foundation has awarded more than $8 million in grants for AIDS and HIV research in the past five years and Johnson has worked tirelessly as a fund-raiser for other organizations such as the MDA, the United Negro College Fund and the Boys and Girls Clubs of America.

In business, Johnson has pledged to bring back neighborhood pride to the inner cities like where he grew up in Lansing, MI. Putting his money where his mouth is, his theaters in L.A., Houston and Atlanta now employ more than 400 inner city kids.

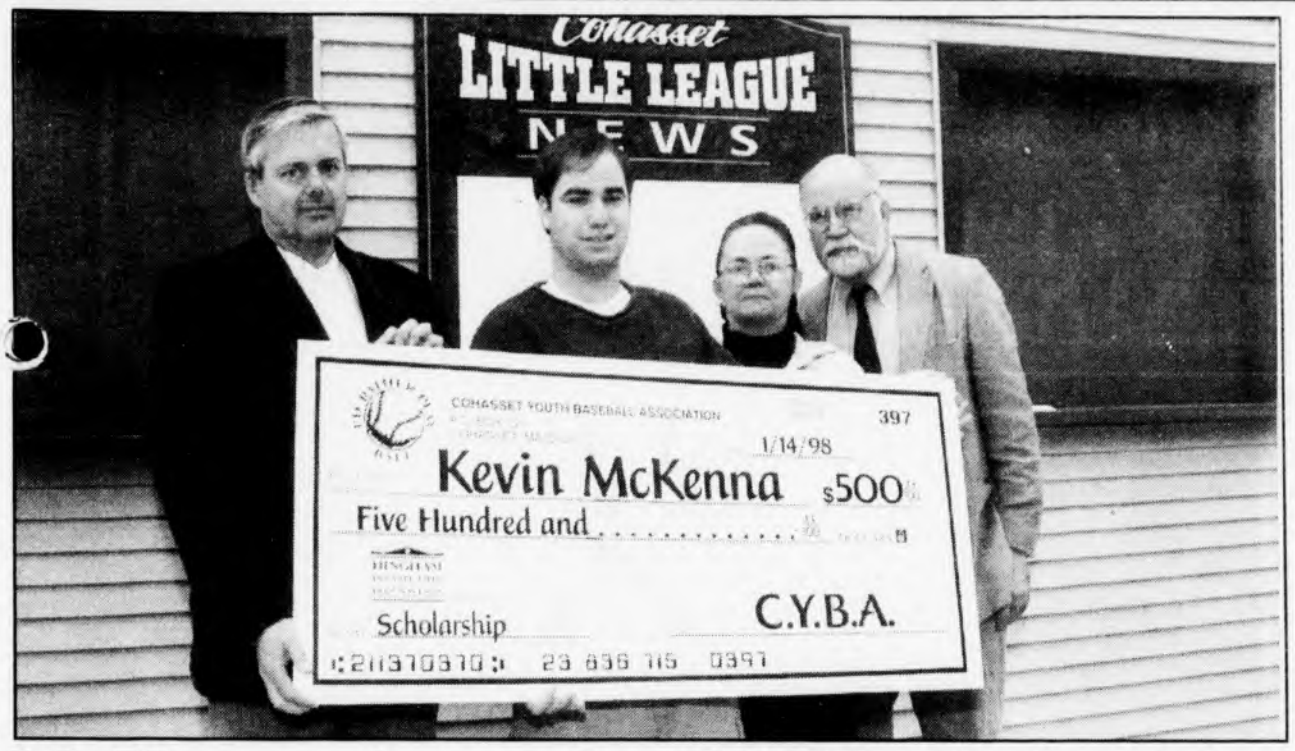
And you can now count me in as a convert to Johnson's Church of Hoopology.

"What gets me is the attitude of today's player. Some think that they alone are the reason that they are getting a $17 million a year contract," said Johnson with just the appropriate amount of disdain. "The reason that money is available is because of the television contracts and the reason for those contracts are players as Larry Bird and myself. Today's player fails to recognize that fact.

"If these guys are getting these contracts today, imagine what Larry and I would be getting if we were still playing," he added. "Larry would own Boston and I would own L.A. Together we'd own the whole NBA."

Can I get an Amen.

There wasn't one single ounce of boasting is Magic's comments, it was the simple Gospel truth. I was stunned to hear his comments about how tradition and team values had been lost on your average team player and how the obscene amounts of some of these contracts had replaced hard work and sweat at the top of the players agenda.



It was then that I realized how wrong I had been about Johnson. He may have worn the sissy purple and gold uniform of the Lakers, but deep down he was both a basketball traditionalist and a Celtic.

He made it official when talking with his new friend Elizabeth, a young lady who he pulled out of the audience that was just about young enough to have missed the Celtics-Lakers rivalry of the 80s and the great games that came out of it.

"Elizabeth, I'm going to tell you a little bit about Larry Bird," said Johnson, officially opening up school for the evening. "Larry could not jump over this microphone cord, but could he play the game of basketball. Once her got tired of scoring on you, he'd make you look foolish by passing the ball of or setting a pick. There wasn't anything that he couldn't do on the basketball court."

Recounting the trademark Bird pump fake and fall-away jumper, Johnson added that Bird was simply "the best I've ever seen".

Magic, don't sell yourself short. When the "Best Ever" do get together, you've got a seat waiting for you at the head table.

McKenna chosen for CYBA scholarship

On Jan. 14, the Cohasset Youth Baseball Association (CYBA) formally presented its first annual CYBA College Scholarship in the form of a $500 check to Kevin F. McKenna, son of Roselyn and William, 8 Todd Lane, Cohasset.

In his freshman year at Assumption College, Worcester, Mass., Kevin was selected last spring out of a number of candidates, all of whom were previously involved in the local Little League program, announced Dan Leahy, president, CYBA. This scholarship, founded in 1997 by then CYBA President Bob Moody, is presented annually to a former member of the major league level of this Cohasset baseball program, who still resides in Cohasset and submits the winning essay titled "What Little League Meant to Me." Forms for the 1998 award can be found at the guidance counselors' office at Cohasset High School. Applications must be completed and submitted by April 1, 1998.

McKenna has the unique distinction of being the first ever to receive this acknowledgment. He hopes to pursue a career in education upon graduation from college.

One grand achievement for Hamill

"I'd like to develop more of my overall game," she said. "I think I need a few more moves. I'd also like to lift more weights and get a little stronger and quicker."

She praised NDA coach Edmonson for his help over the last three years.

"He is a very supportive coach and gives everyone a fair shot at playing," Hamill said. "He has been very helpful to my game and I'm happy he had faith in me when I was a freshman."

Eventually, Hamill would like to play basketball in college. She has hopes of possibly playing in Division I in two years.

"I know that's a long way off but it would be great to go on and play basketball in college," she said. "Given my choice I'd like to play in the Ivy League or the Patriot League." During the fall, she plays field hockey at NDA. And when she isn't playing sports, she likes to hang out with her friends.

Hamill lives in Scituate with her parents Berny and Lynda. She has an older sister Molly.

Lenten breakfast series

Wrestling with Angels is a Lenten Video Series. Like Jacob, who wrestled with the angel of the Lord, many struggle with the seemingly unanswerable questions of life. "Why did this have to happen to me?" "What does God want me to do?" Or "Why don't my prayers get answered?" This six-part series tackles these issues head on. It features moving stories from ordinary people and is hosted by well-known authors sharing from their own experiences. Breakfast served at 7:45 a.m., at Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland Ave., Cohasset. Discussion to follow the video.

Henrikson caters to customers and helps feed area's homeless

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Kristie Henrikson of Cohasset has earned success with her restaurant Siro's. The eatery is a favorite with politicians, such as U.S. Rep. William Delahunt of the 10th Congressional District. But it also has a loyal following of neighborhood regulars who seek out a table laden with Italian specialties three or four times a week.

Henrikson's husband ,Thomas Fallon said the people come to see Kristie as well as to enjoy the view of the skyline and the food at her restaurant at Marina Bay.

"People come in to see her," Fallon said.

About 450 dropped by for Valentine's Day, according to Fallon. He said Siro's is "a very romantic spot."

Henrikson won a place in many people's hearts because of her work for the homeless. She spearheaded Quincy Restaurants for the Homeless. The co-operative provided meals for the Quincy Crisis Center.

This month, Quincy Mayor James Sheets recognized her community work. The mayor proclaimed her birthday, Feb. 5 Kristie Henrikson Day. Henrikson also was honored by the Marina Bay neighborhood organization and the City Council.

"I was kind of embarrassed," Henrikson said. "I'm sure a lot of people do a lot more than I do."

Henrikson said the restaurant business afforded some unique opportunities to do some good for people. Charitable work is but one of the many aspects of the business that she savors.

Restaurants became Henrikson's passion after college.

"At first, it was kind of a part-time thing to pay for school," she said. "Then it became a passion."

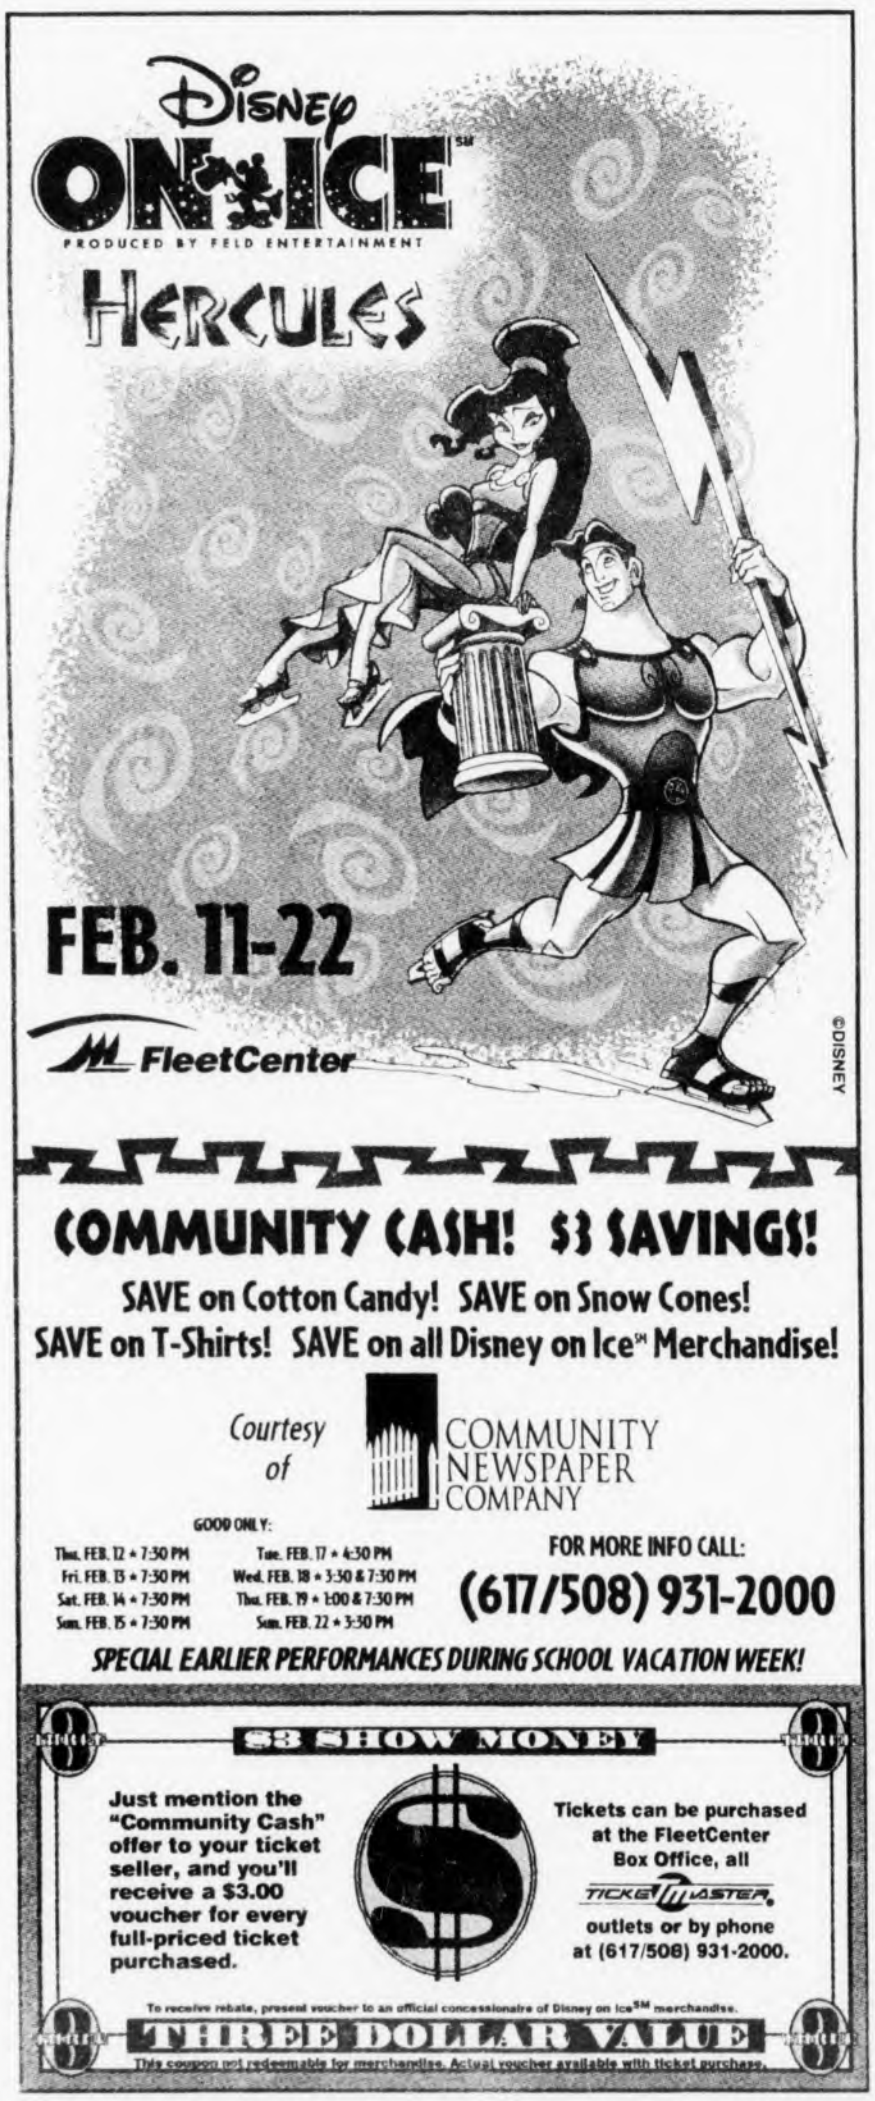
Henrikson's mother was a waitress for 35 years, and the daughter learned much about the trade from watching her parent.

Henrikson's mother, now 72, worked in Siro's for the first three years it was in business. She was the one most-requested by the customers, she said. The rest of the family has also played a role in her success. Her brother is her accountant. Her sister is a restaurant manager.

Peter Kolson, president of the Quincy City Council, Cohasset's Thomas Fallon and Kristie Henrikson, Bruce Ayers a member of the Quincy City Council, and U.S. Rep. William Delahunt.

Yet, few believed Henrikson would be a success when she started her own restaurant. Being a woman, she said, turned out to be one strike against her in the early going. But Henrikson, who worked 18 hour days getting the business off the ground, said she strongly believes in hiring women.

"They work a lot harder" (than men), she said.



Henrikson has all women chefs and women managers in her restaurant now. Moreover, she does not share the view that men are the best in the kitchen.

"I've hired the right people," she said. "We all pitch in together. Nobody really is the boss."

Henrikson also said very few of the staff quit. Hopefully, she said, the low turnover is because Siro's is unlike some of the Boston restaurants where she was once employed.

"I worked for a lot of people who treated me horribly. They even treated their customers horribly. You spend half your life at work. It's nice to be in a place you enjoy."

Henrikson is opening another Siro's in Braintree in the fall.

Fleming's helps raise funds for historical society

About a year ago, Frank Smith, proprietor of Fleming's of Cohasset Village, had an idea to help raise funds for the Cohasset Historical Society.

Smith's idea was to create a "Minot's Light 1-4-3" gold-plated collectible ornament for tree decorating, gift giving, or dressing up the top of a gift. In honor of the historical subject and local society efforts, he decided to give $2 to the Cohasset Historical Society for every ornament sold.

With the help of his wife, designer Joy Smith, the finely detailed ornament was crafted with such precision that the lightkeeper can be seen climbing the ladder to the top of the light. The ornaments were produced by a Massachusetts company known for high quality. The Fleming's Minot's light ornament is non-tarnishing gold plate, attractively packaged, and includes a story card about the lighthouse history. Say "1-4-3" (I-LOVE-YOU) to your sweetheart to help support an organization that preserves and cherishes the past!

Frank Smith presents Cohasset Historical Society president Ernest Grassie with a check. Fleming's is donating $2 for every Minot's Light ornament sold to the historical society.

Some Things to Know About Political Advertising

Newspapers reach almost 90% of adults each week. Their heaviest readership is among groups that are most likely to vote. These are the people who are actively involved in and concerned about their communities and the quality of life: professionals, high-income earners, well educated, ages 35-64.

Community Newspaper Company South offers an unparalleled variety of creative options with which to state your political case – page and placement options, large and small space opportunities, continuity, color along with customized slipsheets.

Whether you're a candidate, campaign manager, or media director, we'll help you decide how to best utilize your campaign dollars.

POLITICAL ADVERTISING GUIDELINES

★ Placement of political advertisements will be accepted on a first come, first serve basis. Guaranteed preferred placement allows the candidate to pick a specific page number, not a specific location on that page. Guaranteed preferred placement will be charged an additional 25% premium. Minimum size for preferred placement is 10 column inches.

★ Pre-payment of all political ads is required, with no exceptions. Cash, check or credit cards are accepted.

★ Deadline for political advertisements is 5 business days prior to publication date. Proofs will be available if submitted at least one week prior to publication.

★ Retail rates apply. Contract rate may apply if the candidate signs a contract and pays in advance the total dollars committed per the agreement.

★ In accordance with Massachusetts laws Chapter 56, Section 39, all political advertisements must be accompanied by a signed authorization statement. Political advertisements must also be accompanied by a Community Newspaper Company indemnification and Limitation of Liability Agreement. Forms are available from your local Community Newspaper Company office. You are welcome to as many as you require.

★ The designation "Political Advertisement" must run above each column of the advertisement.

★ The advertisers/candidates are responsible for the accuracy of the content of material being presented in their advertising, including written permission for the use of photographic likenesses for persons other than the candidate and endorsements.

★ All ads must be submitted in legible handwriting or typewritten form.

★ In the last issue of the newspaper prior to any election, political advertisements in which it is clear that the intent is to deny opponents time for rebuttal will not be accepted. All ads are accepted at the discretion of the publisher.

★ All advertisements must be bordered and use a typeface distinct from the news typeface.

★ All political ads need to include the affiliation of the organization placing the ad, name, title and address (i.e., Citizens to Elect John Doe, Mary Smith, Treasurer, 123 Main St., Weymouth, MA 02190).

Students head for nation's capital

By Jennifer R. Horan
SCITUATE MARINER

Tomorrow's leaders are getting a head start today in high school. Three Cohasset High School seniors are receiving a "crash course in politics" at an educational conference in the nation's capital this month.

One of the students, Kelly Tufts, is taking part in a national program called "Presidential Classroom," which involves a week of seminars by government, military, media and lobbying organization leaders. Along with hundreds of students from across the country and abroad, Kelly will also tour the White House, meet with legislators and visit a foreign embassy.

"We're supposed to meet the president, but I don't know. He might be busy," said Tufts, who planned to be in Washington DC for the first time during school vacation Feb. 14-21.

A member of her school's student council since seventh grade and the council president this year, her active involvement in student government prompted Kelly to participate in the program. She has also attended leadership conferences at Holy Cross and local high schools.

"I'm really looking forward to it. I think it will be very fulfilling," she said recently.

Kelly, 17, has already been accepted to Boston College next fall, but said she is still awaiting a response from some other schools. Although politics ranks high among her interests, she said she plans to study medicine.

"You never know if I might pursue a career in politics," she said.

Next week, two of Kelly's peers will experience the international program offered by "Presidential Classroom."

Alia Afshar and John Kasameyer will participate in the Future World Leaders Summit from Feb. 21-28.

Their program includes seminars headed by a variety of world leaders and international organization chiefs. They will visit the U.S. State Department, the World Bank, the floor of the U.S. House of Representatives and the National Defense University.

"In college, I'm hoping to study international relations. On this trip I will be exposed to what it's all about," Alia said. "I'm looking forward to seeing all of the aspects of international relations and how it all works and how it all fits together."

John said he has a particular interest in touring the World Bank. He plans to study political science, international business and investment banking. Two years ago, he participated in a one-week program called "Boys State" which focused on state government.

"I've always had an interest in that," he said. "In general, (the program) looks like something that will be interesting and I will take away from it a better understanding of international politics."

Seminars Alia and John will be taking during the summit include "The Role of Diplomacy," "Issues Facing Congress — A U.S. Representative's Perspective," "International Development," "The Role of Multi-National Organizations," "The Role of the Media in International Politics" and "Human Rights and the Holocaust Example." Throughout the week, students will be holding working group and delegation meetings. The week will culminate with a summit meeting.

CHS typically sends two or three students to the program each year. Students are nominated by teachers and must send in an application for acceptance to the program, as well as pay the $895 tuition. Kelly, Alia and John have received some contributions from local civic organizations to help pay their trip expenses.

Since 1969, more than 74,000 American students have participated in "Presidential Classroom," providing them with an opportunity to experience Washington first hand.

John Kasameyer and Alia Afshar are participating at the Future World Leaders Summit next week in Washington, DC.

Experts charge state's emergency medical system fails to deliver consistent care

By Chris Szechenyi and Linda Rosencrance
CNC STAFF WRITERS

A head-on collision at the intersection of Burt and Tremont streets in Taunton a year ago left 6-year-old Angela Stewart with a severe head injury, trapped in her family's car for more than 10 minutes.

Police and an ambulance arrived at the scene, but 911 personnel failed to notify nearby firefighters, who alone had the equipment and the training needed to free Angela from the wreckage.

"There was too much time taken at the scene to get her out of the car," said John E. Frye, a Canton firefighter and emergency medical technician who stopped at the accident to help. "There was no heavy equipment to pull the car apart. We were so shorthanded and time was of the essence."

Finally freed and rushed to a hospital, Angela lapsed into a coma. Nine days later she died.

Derailing response times

Chief looks for solutions to train's impact

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Lincoln's Lane is a small private way near the Scituate line. After the transit authority announced a plan to shut off traffic here permanently, Fire Chief Roger Lincoln went out to the private way. The chief has talked with the residents there about the T's plans to block up the street.

The T wants to close the lane to clamp down on the number of streets the tracks will cross. If the Greenbush rail line eventually comes through Cohasset, the track will probably cut the west side of Lincoln's Lane off from police and fire response routes. Ultimately, residents might have to rely on Scituate for a fast response in an emergency when and if the train comes in. (T officials are still ironing out plans for the train and hope to have it running in town by 2002).

The situation on Lincoln's Lane is an isolated example of the type of new obstacles the town can expect to confront when the train arrives. But it is not the only potential trouble spot. The trains will speed across about 13 streets and private ways on every trip, coming to a full stop only once at the station near

Concerns about golf club unfounded, members say

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

The Cohasset Golf Club has kept the green sward manicured on Lamberts Lane for more than 100 years. But now the club is at the center of a controversy about drinking and driving. Some of the club's new neighbors and a member of the school board raised the issue and say they are worried about the safety of children.

About 20 children travel Lamberts Lane to the school bus stop on Route 228.

Clifford Mitman, president of the Cohasset Golf Club, said the club members want to be good neighbors. But he objected to the school board member's characterization of the club. He said he was upset about charges the club bartender was putting drunk drivers on the road. Mitman said the club follows the law and does not serve liquor to people who already had too much to drink. He also said he did not understand why the school board member said people were drinking during the daytime at the club.

Nichols Road group celebrates change in septic district plan

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Citizens for Equitable Environmental Solutions (CEES) is not opposed to the use of septic systems. What the group does oppose is any plan that seems to arbitrarily force homeowners to replace septic systems at costs that can soar to $80,000.

CEES has been fighting the town's plan to force 136 homeowners in designated priority districts to submit to mandatory septic system inspections and the possibility of expensive repairs and replacements. A recent decision by the state Attorney General's office to recommend that the town sewer 36 homes on Lily Pond has members of the group claiming a major victory.

"We are considering the letter from the Attorney General's office as a major success and it will be a suitable replacement," said Lisa Bumstead, a Nichols Road resident and founding member of CEES. "The efforts of CEES have made this whole thing happen."

CEES is comprised of residents placed into the town's priority districts around Lily Pond, Little Harbor, Jerusalem Road, Atlantic Avenue and Nichols Road to fulfill the terms of the Second Amended Final Agreement for Judgment.

The Second Judgment is an agreement between the town and the state to prevent water pollution in Cohasset by adequately managing waste water. The Second Judgment initially grew out of the town's failure to comply with the federal Clean Waters Act and violations of that act that date back to 1975.

COHASSET'S WEEK

Telephone number changes at town hall

The following departments have changed their phone numbers as follows:

Town Clerk	383-4100
Town Treasurer/Tax Collector	383-4102
Board of Selectmen/Town Manager	383-4105
Recreation Department	383-4109
Town Accountant	383-4110
Building Commissioner	383-4112
Board of Assessors	383-4114
Board of Health	383-4116
Planning Board	383-4118
Sewer Commission	383-4118
Conservation Commission	383-4119

Weekly pay to be considered

Selectmen are considering allowing town employees to be paid weekly rather than every two weeks.

They were responding to a petition from town DPW employees stating that bi-weekly pay creates a financial hardship that is unfair and unnecessary in light of the fact the town uses a payroll service.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the same request has appeared in every union contract proposal.

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan asked Haddad to figure out the financial impact of returning to weekly paychecks and report back to the board Monday.

Four-way stop objected to Hamilton Tewksbury, 81 Elm St., wrote to selectmen objecting to a four-way stop at N. Main Street, King Street and Forest Avenue.

"You're all intelligent, thinking individuals," he said. "I mean it but in this case a four-way stop at that intersection is crazy and I emphasize crazy."

Tewskbury said North Main Street is a commuter road and not a back road or a country road.

"Please think about it, think what you're doing," he said.

Tewksbury said traffic lights which are triggered by pressure sensitive actuators are the best solution. Otherwise he recommended stop signs on King and Forest and caution signs on North Main.

In a May 1994 report, Police Chief Brian Noonan said four-way stops are safer and more effective on less heavily travelled roads with a more uniform amount of traffic entering from all directions. He said traffic lights would be his first choice at that intersection.

Selectmen have ruled lights out because of the cost and recently opted for a four-way stop on the recommendation of the traffic committee. Signs have been placed at the intersection warning motorists about the pending change.

A four-way stop will be in effect Monday at the intersection.

B&B's article gets mixed reviews

Selectmen are split on whether or not to support a town meeting article that would allow Bed and Breakfast homes in town without a special permit. Under current zoning regulations, anyone wishing to operate a bed and breakfast must obtain a special permit from the zoning board of appeals.

Dorothy Keville, lead signator on the citizens' petition article asking for relaxed zoning rules for smaller B&Bs with one or two bedrooms, said the change would not create a problem. She asked that a smaller B&B be subjected to the same parking requirements as a single family home. She pointed out there are not enough motel rooms to accommodate the people who would like to come to Cohasset.

But a minority of selectmen said the existing zoning by-law protects the town and neighbors.

"It is healthy for the town to have a monitoring system in place," Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan said.

Planning Board Chairman Al Moore said the zoning board is the best way to handle the permitting process relating to parking issues.

"We think of a B&B and imagine a Mercedes and a golden retriever leaping through the autumn air," he said. "Leave it to the ZBA to look at each example and grant a permit if they deem it right."

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said relaxing the rules for smaller B&Bs would serve a need in the community.

Selectmen McMorris, Merle Brown and Nan Roth voted to recommend approval of the town meeting article, with Sullivan and Diane Sullivan opposed.

Dredging project slated for September

Harbor silt passes the test

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

There's some good news about all that silt in the harbor: it passed the test.

"The tests came in with flying colors," Harbormaster John "Moose" Winters said.

That means it will cost the town $10-$12 a cubic yard to dispose of the silt off shore as opposed to $110 a cubic yard for upland disposal.

The dredging project which has been in the works for four years is slated to begin in September with completion estimated by January, 1999.

Winters and David Vine of Nucci Vine Associates, town consultant for the project, will meet with selectmen Monday to provide an update on permitting issues and where the fishing fleet will be moored while dredging is underway..

There are a total of about 100,000 cubic yards of silt or 50 barge loads to be removed.

The project has cleared several hurdles, the latest of which was the re-testing of silt samples from four areas in the inner harbor.

Due to disagreements among federal agencies about testing protocol, such as water temperature, the town was forced to perform another round of testing silt samples.

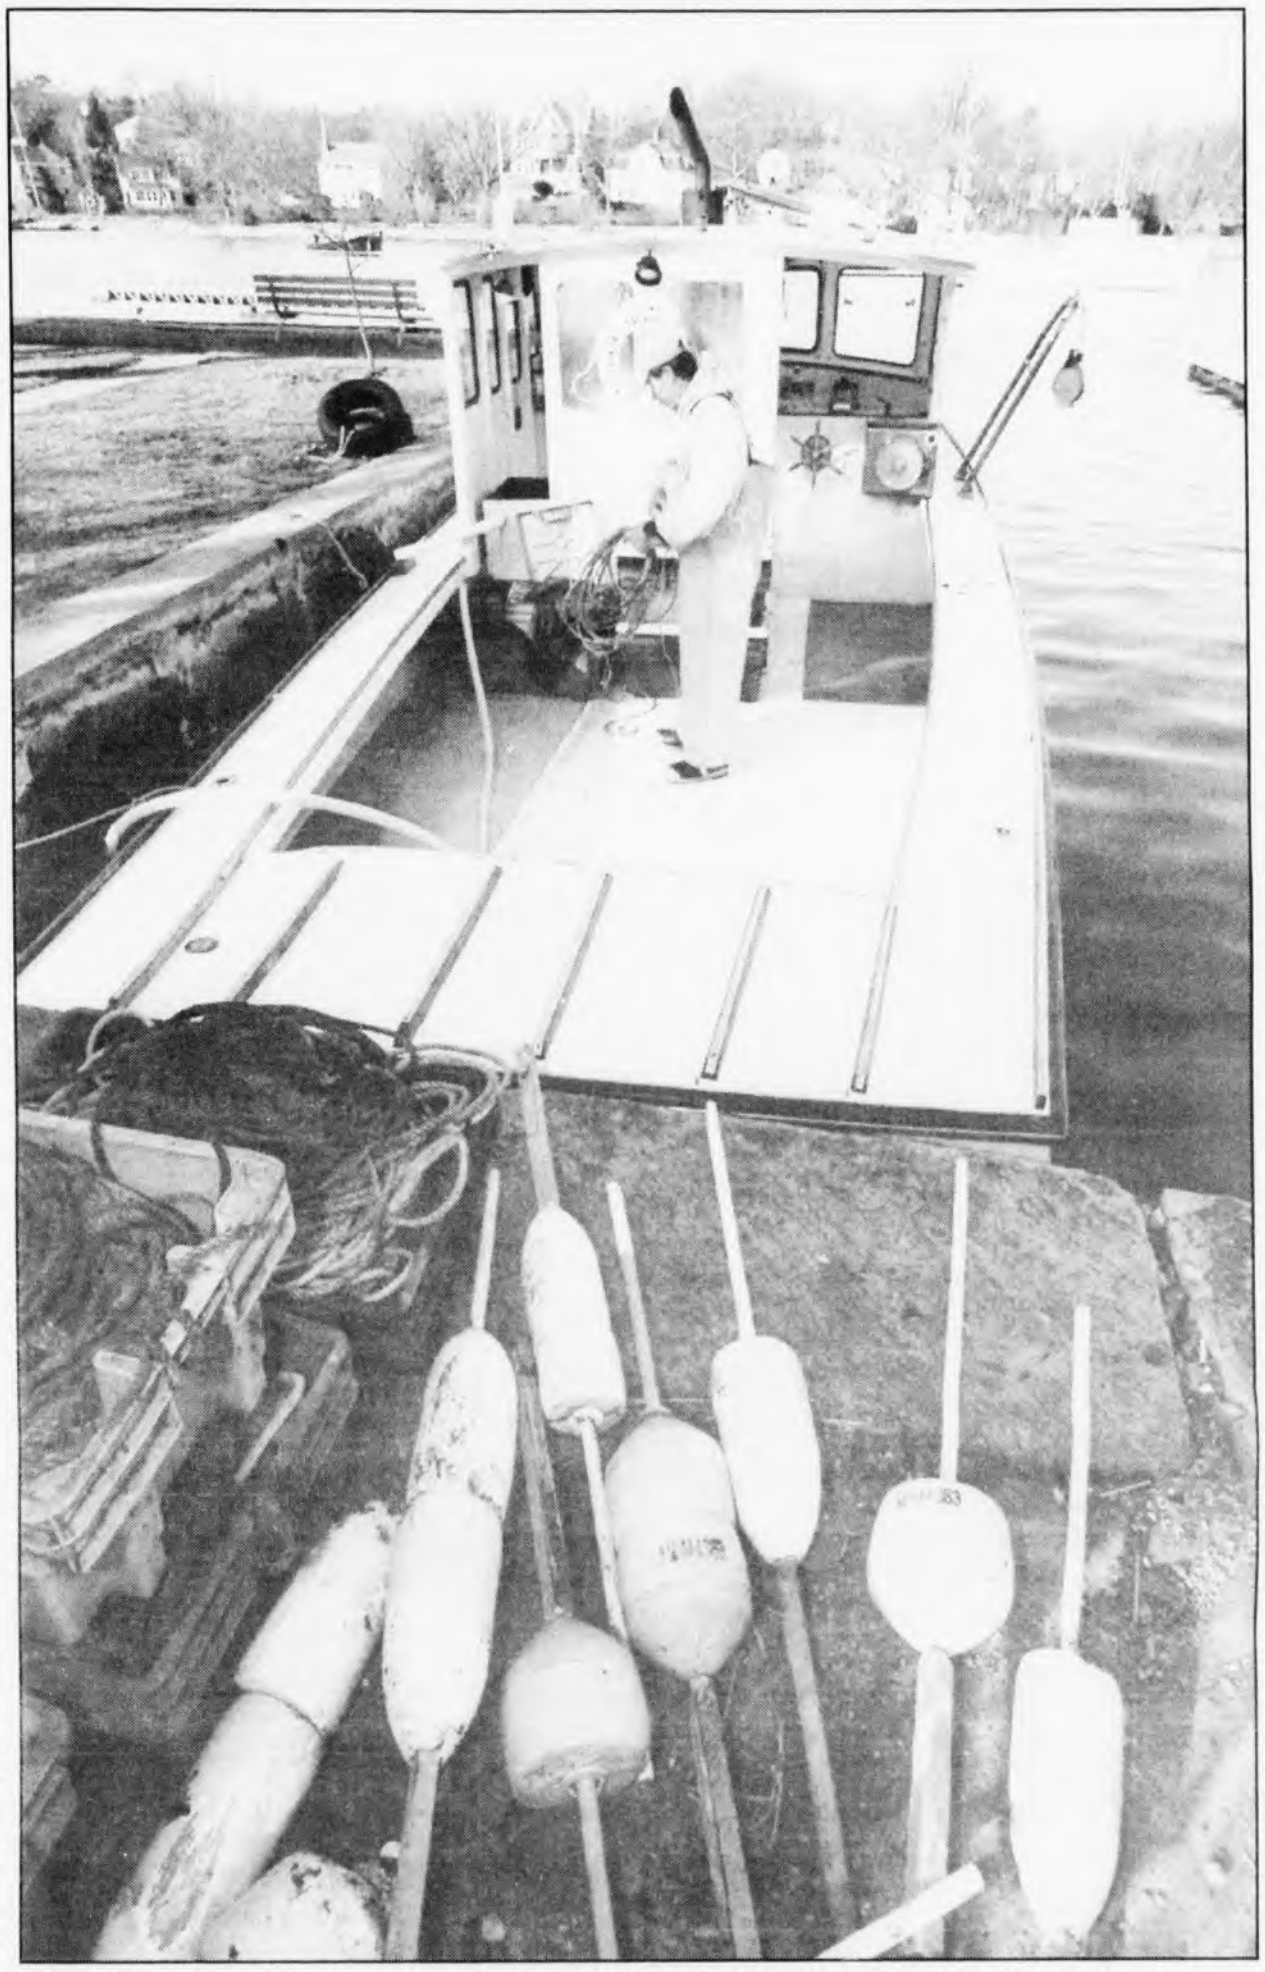
The town is responsible for dredging about 7,500 cubic yards of silt from the Parker Avenue boat ramp, Cox's Point, Lawrence Wharf and the area between Cox's Point and the Cohasset Yacht Club.

Winters said he is negotiating with the yacht club to leave its main string of floats out for the fishing fleet. The yacht club is outside the area to be dredged.

"But liability is a problem," Winters said.

Otherwise, he said the moorings would have to be moved around the harbor to keep ahead of the dredging, a fall-back plan that Winters doesn't relish.

"It would be darn near impossible to pick up 31 lobster boat moorings and shift them back and forth," he said.



Winters explained Cohasset harbor is a pilot project for the Army Corps of Engineers which will take the dredged material to the ocean dumping site of Newburyport. The material will be used to cap the disposal area which is about 25 miles off shore. The area to be dredged might change day to day as the project supervisor tests the "granular size" of the dredged material which has to meet certain criteria to be suitable for capping. Therefore, the moorings have to be out of the way so the project can move about the harbor quickly.

The federal channel, which is getting narrower and narrower due to silt buildup, hasn't been fully dredged in 35 years. There has been periodic maintenance dredging of the harbor and federal channel since then but the last time a federal/town dredging project of this magnitude was undertaken in Cohasset was in 1939.

With the state's financial help, the town is responsible for dredging areas in the harbor while the Army Corps of Engineers, a federal agency whose civil mission is to develop and manage the country's water resources, will tackle the harbor channel which falls under federal jurisdiction. Because of the entangled environmental permitting process for the two projects involving about a dozen agen-

Rail bed park to trip up T, officials say

By Mary Ford

Officials hope a strategic move will put the town in a better bargaining position with the MBTA.

To that end, selectmen were unanimous in their support to declare the Old Colony right of way — which the town owns — as park land.

Town meeting will vote on the proposal March 28.

This means for the T to take the right-of-way by eminent domain, it would require a 2/3 vote of the legislature, selectmen said.

The MBTA plans to restore the Greenbush Line of the Old Colony Railroad Project along the existing right of way through several South Shore towns including Cohasset.

The Mitigation Committee, charged with negotiating measures with the T to protect the town from the adverse effects of noise, vibration, diesel air pollution and exacerbated flooding potential, has not been happy with the T's response to its concerns.

The press and interested members of the public were barred from the deliberative process Monday because selectmen voted to discuss the issue in executive session. Reporters from the Mariner and Patriot Ledger objected but selectmen said they were advised by town counsel they could call an executive session in this instance.

The open meeting law allows executive sessions to discuss strategy relating to pending litigation. However, it was not clear what pending litigation was involved.

The Mitigation Committee was slated to meet with representatives from the MBTA last night after the Mariner went to press. MBTA environmental affairs manager Andrew Brennan could not be reached for comment.

The committee is upset the T provided them with incomplete data relating to the effect the restored rail bed would have on the James Brook basin which is prone to flooding.

Chairman Tom Gruber said the T's position is that the train will not affect flooding in James Brook.

"We've gotten half-baked calculations," he said. "By their own criteria the rails must be 18 inches above high water. At Sohier Street, they'll never make it."

The T says it has enabling legislation in place to allow it to take land for Greenbush by eminent domain. But conservation land is protected from development by the state constitution. The T could take conservation land

Flood data leads town list

MBTA officials were scheduled to stop in Cohasset Wednesday for a meeting about the commuter trains coming to town. The Greenbush rail line is the third prong of the T's Old Colony train restoration. Bogged down by legal challenges and behind schedule, the restoration faces formidable obstacles. The T has nonetheless vowed the railroad will be built, even though the authority has to pay the town for "adverse impacts" due to the train.

Cohasset town officials have stressed they can both work with the T and protect the town's in-

Nichols Road group celebrates change in septic district plan

The recommendation from the Attorney General's office was in response to a meeting it held with town officials two weeks ago to address residents' concerns about the town's plans and to gauge progress on fulfilling the terms of the Second Amended Judgment.

The Attorney General has also recommended that the town initiate a study of Little Harbor within one year to examine nitrogen contamination and other pollution in the waters. The study would look at the Little Harbor watershed to determine where the contamination is coming from, including an examination of septic systems that could affect the water. Once the study is complete, the town would have six months to come up with a plan that could include sewering Little Harbor, continuing with priority districts and promoting shared septic systems.

Selectmen have proposed an article for the town meeting warrant for $45,000 to fund the study.

Health board member Kevin Ulmer said parts of this provision are unclear. Does the town have to perform full Title V inspections of the septic systems on Little Harbor? Or can town officials request a lesser examination that does not trigger the Title V process? Despite the ambiguity, Ulmer felt the Attorney General's plan was an excellent solution.

"The logic of sewering around the town's water drinking supply makes perfect sense," Ulmer said. "This is a good move by all parties and the most health-conscious solution."

CEES members have been fighting the town's priority district by complaining to the state Attorney General, proposing town meeting articles, and hiring a lawyer to represent them and take legal action if necessary.

"Whether we fight this on the town level, the state level or in the courts, we will use all three avenues to the extent that is necessary to win this battle," said Stephen Marcus of Marcus Gooden Emmer and Brooks in Braintree, the firm representing CEES. "If there can be no sensible solution, then we will fight this to the bitter end."

CEES submitted two articles for this year's town meeting. One article would delay for at least one year the implementation of the on-site waste water management plan and the other would allow the town to amend the Second Amended Final Judgment for Agreement.

Bumstead said CEES would meet next week to consider pulling its articles from the town meeting warrant.

"I think the state has, with its requirements for Cohasset to comply with the Attorney General's recommendation, made our articles a moot point," Bumstead said. "The selectmen's article will be a suitable replacement."

Members of CEES are outraged at what they see as the town trying to force them to pay for mistakes made by previous town officials.

"Title 5 says you don't have to submit to septic system inspections until you sell your home, but now the town picks 136 homes and says you people have to have inspections now," Marcus said. "No other community in the commonwealth has to do this."

Marcus said the town had access to federal funds to sewer these sections of town many years ago, but chose not to go forward with the project. Marcus claims the town even had access to between $10 million and $30 million in federal funds, but returned the money.

Marcus and members of CEES say the sewer commission is responding to pressure from people within the town to control growth by limiting the amount of sewer pipe in town.

"How is it that 136 people have to pay for the sins of sewer commissioners in years past?" Marcus asked.

Sewer Commissioner Ted Guild said the sewer commission is an elected body that is subject to the mandates, decisions and directives set forth by town meeting. Guild pointed out that the zoning board and the planning board are part-time boards, sometimes populated by amateurs, that must deal with professional developers who want to push through projects.

"Cohasset is one of the most beautiful towns in the state and perhaps even in New England," Guild said. "We'd like to maintain that atmosphere by controlling growth, and the town is growing on a controlled and appropriate basis. Successive town meetings have approved the sewer commission's program as it has evolved over the years."

The creation of CEES is a direct result of the town's on-site waste water management plan.

Bumstead first became involved in battling the on-site plan when a friend urged her to attend a health board hearing that listed Nichols Road as a priority district. The health board hearing was held well after the on-site plan and the Second Amended Final Judgment were approved at town meeting.

That was the first time Bumstead heard that Nichols Road was in a priority district.

Bumstead said the priority districts were picked and approved in a deceptive way. She said the town meeting warrant did not contain specific information about where the priority districts were located and who would be in them.

"Fourteen days before town meeting we got a warrant that mentioned priority districts only in article 13," Bumstead said. "But then one to two hours before town meeting, the selectmen changed the language of the article to include Lily Pond and Little Harbor as priority districts. If you watch the tape, the moderator reads the new language, which is moved, seconded and approved."

Bumstead said the change was made so quickly and at the last minute so voters did not understand the scope of the new language. Bumstead referred to a transcript of the selectmen's meeting that took place five days before town meeting (March 24, 1997) in which selectmen discussed priority districts.

According to the transcript, several hours into the meeting, former health board Chairman Tom Cook entered the meeting saying he had never seen article 13 nor discussed priority districts with the sewer commission. Dan Coughlin of Tutela Engineering advised selectmen to amend the language of article 13 on the floor of town meeting to promote its passage, Bumstead said.

"It seems clear to me from Coughlin and Cook's comments that the board of health had never heard of these priority districts," Marcus said.

Zoning board holds special hearing on CHL violations

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The zoning board of appeals will hold a special hearing tonight at 8 p.m. in town hall to specifically deal with two zoning violations committed by the Cohasset Heights Limited landfill. CHL is appealing two cease and desist orders issued last January by the building inspector.

On Jan. 26, Building Inspector Robert Egan issued a cease and desist order directing CHL to cease operations because prior owner James Tyeryar failed to file a zoning board special permit with the Norfolk County Registry of Deeds. CHL owner Paul Barry also failed to file the permit after he purchased the landfill.

John K. McNabb Jr., vice-president of the anti-landfill group Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE), discovered the violation after checking with the Registry of Deeds.

On Jan. 28, CHL's attorneys informed Egan that they had filed the special permit that morning. CHL attorney Anton Moehrke asked Egan to rescind the order, but Egan refused, saying the permit was not recorded before the town enacted its Water District Resource bylaw. CHL has argued that filing the permit fulfills the intention of the law.

The bylaw prohibits landfills from operating in the Water Resource District unless it was in operation prior to the enactment of the bylaw. A large portion of the landfill sits in the district. Egan ruled that the special permit was invalid and CHL could not claim "grandfathered" status for being in the district lawfully before the enactment of the bylaw.

"This is basically a legal argument," said zoning board Chairman Mark DeGiacomo. "There doesn't appear to be any facts in dispute, but there is a legal argument over whether they were actually grandfathered into the Water Resource District."

On Jan. 29, Egan issued another cease and desist order against CHL for placing refuse in an area of the landfill not approved for dumping and ordered the removal of all refuse. McNabb discovered the illegal dumping when he compared several engineers drawings against the contours of the landfill. The illegal fill encompasses an area of about 7,800 square feet.

CHL is appealing Egan's removal order.

"I think CHL's primary complaint is that they can't remove the material by the date specified by the building inspector because the state must approve any plan," DeGiacomo said.

DeGiacomo said the zoning board is being asked by CHL to override the building inspector's decisions. The zoning board has the discretion to uphold the building inspector's decision, overturn it, or remand it back to Egan for further action.

SAFE is urging residents to attend the hearing.

"People need to attend the hearing to urge the ZBA to uphold the orders of the building inspector," McNabb said. "CHL is trying to get away with their illegal dumping of 21,600 tons of waste and with operating illegally since day one without a valid special permit."

CHL post-closure deal nears completion

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The board of health is closing in on a final plan to protect the town from the costs of closing the Cohasset Heights Limited landfill in the event that the company goes out of business.

Health board Chairman Alix White had hoped to finalize the deal by Jan. 22, but that deadline was not met. CHL and DEP signed off on an earlier agreement, but Cohasset was not a signatory to that arrangement. DEP must dig out the original copies of the agreement so Cohasset can sign off on the deal.

Health board member Kevin Ulmer said the delay was frustrating.

White said she felt confident that the package gave the town the appropriate financial protection, particularly since the bulk of the post-closure costs, including leachate collection, would be handled by the Massachusetts Highway Department.

State law requires landfill owners to take responsibility for post-closure costs for 30 years after the landfill closes. The indemnity package the town has negotiated with CHL totals $2.9 million in materials, surety bonds and letters of credit according to the health board's special environmental consultant, Michael Scott.

According to Scott, the financial assurances are being issued by the Chubb Insurance Group, which is owned by BFI, the largest trash disposal company in the world. The financial assurances would be held in a trust managed by Fleet Bank.

The $2.9 million deal represents just a portion of a larger $13 million post-closure plan. Most of the post-closure costs will be borne by the state to deal with leachate runoff from the landfill in the future.

The health board also has a letter of credit for $500,000 that gives the town the right to mine soils off other CHL-owned property in sufficient amounts to cap the landfill if necessary, according to Scott.

Concerns about golf club unfounded, members say

"I don't understand why they're somehow picking on us," he said. Much of the school year the club is not even open mornings until after 9 a.m., long after the last school bus has departed, according to Mitman. Furthermore, the only people there in the morning are the accounting office staff.

Mitman also said he doubted golfers who got to the club afternoons were drinkers. He also said he wanted to correct the misperception the club expanded the parking lot because the members planned to hold more functions than before. He said one of the school board members had talked about the parking expansion and surmised it meant more activity at the club.

School board member Joseph McElroy wrote a letter to the planning board and was received Jan. 28. In the letter, he stated the parking lot expansion for the golf club meant "the likelihood of additional functions that may include the daytime consumption of alcoholic beverages."

"That's not true," Mitman said. He said the club did not plan to hold any additional functions. It built up the parking spaces because the existing lot was too small. He said the club was trying to be a good neighbor and keep cars off Lamberts Lane when weddings and functions are held there.

Mitman said he worried about safety on Lamberts Lane, too. "It's tough being on a residential street. We're forever warning trucks to go slow," he said. He also said the club did some "extra work" to fix the road and tried to offer a place for the school bus to stop.

Mitman called the schools superintendent last month after he read the story about Lamberts Lane in the newspaper. He offered to let the school bus use the access road inside the club, so the drivers could avoid the cul de sac. It is too narrow for a wide bus turn.

"We're willing to let the bus turn around on our road," he said. Schools superintendent Stephen Hart said the access road was too narrow for the bus to travel. Hart and two school bus drivers drove Lamberts Lane last month to survey it.

"It really was still difficult for us to turn," Hart said. Hart and Mitman both said the club's new parking lot was not a good alternative for the bus, either.

"I don't see how it would work," Mitman said. During September and in April, May and June, cars are in the lot mornings.

"The bus would have to wend its way through," he said.

Patience Towle, a member of the golf club and a Lamberts Lane resident, said the club was also committed to being a good neighbor and making Lamberts Lane as safe as possible.

"The neighborhood is really changing. No matter how they got here, these houses are here. Now we've got to do something about making it safe," Towle said. "I see those little strips of pink tape in the woods. It makes me believe more houses will be built."

But she also said the statements by McElroy about drinking at the club misrepresented the situation. "I had a personal reaction to it," Towle said with good humor. She has lost count of the number of people who have stopped her to mention her street has been in the news, she said.

She said McElroy also was not right to surmise the bigger parking lot signaled changes at the club.

"We have about three weddings a year," she said. Towle said the Cohasset Golf Club was not like others that generated a stream of revenue due to functions.

Nonetheless, she was sympathetic to the residents who worry about their children. Towle said she drove her son to the school bus stop on Route 228 every day from the time he was in kindergarten until he finished eighth grade. The conditions are dangerous, she said.

"My car was only rammed one time," she said with wry humor. "The situation at the end of the road is unsafe."

Towle said she gave credit to Lamberts Lane resident Mary Foley who was successful in getting the town to make some safety improvements on Lamberts Lane. "Mary Foley did a tremendous job," said Towle.

Foley, a Lamberts Lane resident, said the dilemma is not yet solved.

"Mr. McElroy is trying to get the different parties together," she said. She said the planning board seemed to think the parking lot might be a place for the bus to turn around.

"That's what the planning board was going after, but the parking lot itself was never on the table," she said.

Foley was one of several mothers that reported hazardous conditions on the private way to the school committee Jan. 22. At that time, she complained the school children faced a dangerous walk on Lamberts Lane to get to a school bus stop on Hull Street.

Dorian Brady, a Lamberts Lane resident, said then the situation would only get worse, if officials did not act. More new houses are being developed on Lamberts Lane, she said. She also said the Cohasset Golf Club was adding 75 spaces to the parking lot.

Brady charged the golf club traffic was a lot of the problem on Lamberts Lane. She also cited the danger from "large delivery trucks leaving the golf club" and "drivers whose ability to operate a car may be impaired due to alcohol consumption at the residing golf club bar."

McElroy officially took up the neighborhood cause at the Jan. 22 meeting. He initially blamed the planning board for issuing too many permits for construction on Lamberts Lane.

"I don't know how the planning board got us in this pickle," he said.

Planning board a dead end for Lamberts Lane residents

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Al Moore said Thursday he felt sympathy for the residents of Lamberts Lane. But Moore doubted his panel could solve the dilemma about the school bus. The board was both "sympathetic and kind of helpless," Moore said.

Moore, the planning board chairman, summed up his views about the board's role after hearing Feb. 18 about the long list of problems on Lamberts Lane. The chairman said the board's "hands were tied" a long time ago when they dealt with a developer. When he wanted permits to build houses on Lamberts Lane, then town clerk Charles Marks signed a certificate that Lamberts Lane was a public street. Under state law, the certificate was as good as a town meeting vote to make the street accepted. It meant the developer only needed to get permits from the health board and the building inspector before he could start construction. The planning board had no say in the matter.

Marks retired in 1984.

Planning board member Robert Sturdy agreed with Moore's views. He said even if the town clerk made a mistake, the certificate forced the board to allow the construction. State law says the condition of the road is not a sufficient reason to stop building on a public street, he said.

Sturdy and Moore made an effort to explain why housing kept going up on Lamberts Lane. It appeared to be a development sprouting there. It also appeared to be happening without control from the planning board. The question came up after school board member Joseph McElroy wrote Moore a letter asking for advice about Lamberts Lane. McElroy and several residents went face to face with the planning board Feb. 18.

McElroy said then he wanted the planners to act as "honest brokers" between the Cohasset Golf Club and the residents. He said his idea was to "keep the lawyers off to one side at least initially." He also asked the planning board to write a letter to the golf club and to a developer who built houses on Lamberts Lane. He said he wanted to invite them to help solve the safety problems on the private way "without getting the legal beagles involved."

Moore eventually agreed to come up with letters after McElroy suggested the tone might be "conversational."

"Yeah, we can do that," said board member Robert Sturdy. Sturdy previously raised objections about the board's right to contact the golf club. Moore said the school committee should write the letter.

Sturdy also said the residents should do a search of old records to prove Lamberts Way was a public street when it belonged to Hingham in 1737. Ultimately, he said, the board of selectmen should widen the cul de sac and fix up the road. If they refused, the residents could play hardball with the selectmen once they had proof Lamberts Lane was public.

"The town builds a sidewalk. The town builds a cul de sac," Sturdy said. "The town has to pay for it."

He said the turn-around and the bus stop should be on town-owned land. Another solution, he said, would be to go at the problem from the other end. Though now a dead end, Lamberts Lane is a through street on the maps. The road could be "punched through" and a bus stop put somewhere on the other side, he said.

Sturdy said he has a personal stake in the Lamberts Lane situation because his grandchildren live there. He also said the golf club created a hazard, due to reported drinking and driving.

"There's a barroom. People are having a good round and traveling that road as kids are coming back from school."

The golf club president has denied the members are leaving the club drunk. He also said there are no plans to have more functions at the Cohasset Golf Club. The club is completing a parking lot expansion. The expansion will add 75 spaces to the parking lot. The plans, however, already won approval from town officials.

WHEN POOR POSTURE BECOMES A HEADACHE

Poor posture can cause tension headaches, particularly when the head juts forward of the shoulders or looks downward. The muscles at the back of the neck then become stressed and strained as they work to move the head into correct alignment. In time, these overworked muscles become fatigued and begin to spasm. This results in constriction of the blood vessels that supply the scalp, causing other muscles of the scalp to tighten and constrict. The neck vertebrae also become restricted in function and movement. The result is the classic tension headache that starts at the base of the skull, rides over the head, and settles behind the eyes. Relief often comes with a combination of vertebral adjustments and muscle work.

The most obvious benefit of good posture is efficiency and comfort. At SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, we are specialists in body mechanics. It's time to improve our emergency care system

This year about 80,000 people will be involved in car crashes in Massachusetts. As many as 10,000 people will suffer heart attacks.

This is an unpleasant subject — no one wants to contemplate the possibility that disaster will strike themselves or the people they care about. It is also a compelling news story, because an investigation of the state's emergency medical system reveals a network that is inadequate, out of date and disorganized. According to some experts, its failings are responsible for the death of as many as 100 people a year.

The good news is that we are served by thousands of dedicated men and women who accept the stress and responsibility of being there first when someone is stricken. The bad news is that during crises where minutes literally mean the difference between life and death, we have failed to provide on a consistent statewide basis the tools and the organization they require to deliver life-saving help.

- Communication fails because equipment is broken, out of date or inadequately staffed;
- The wrong people appear on the scene first, delaying vital services;
- Ambulances are late because they travel too great distances; or
- Critically injured people are taken to the wrong medical facility.

The last is especially devastating in Massachusetts because we can boast medical facilities that stand among the best in the world — a billion-dollar resource wasted every time a victim is delivered to a hospital that cannot deliver the precise help that person needs.

The reason for these failures and the deaths and injuries that result is that today we still see emergency medical care as a local service. Each town must determine for itself how much emergency service it can afford and what rules it will follow. This guarantees that — even with the greatest good will possible — we will have a patchwork of care that falls far below the standard set in places such as Maryland, where emergency care is given a regional perspective. It poses a threat even to those fortunate enough to live in a town with the resources and the oversight to buy the best care available. Once you cross the border into the next town, in all likelihood you leave that better care behind.

We can't plan our disasters. But we can plan so that wherever they occur, we can be sure we will be adequately cared for.

The answer stands today on Beacon Hill, in the form of House Bill 2307, usually referred to as EMS 2000. It would begin to create the statewide oversight and consistent standards we need to improve the quality of emergency medical care in Massachusetts. Those who understand best why an integrated system of care is essential have stood up in support of this bill — emergency room doctors, firemen, emergency medical technicians — and we stand with them.

We bring this week's special report on the state's EMS system to you with an understanding of just how powerful the tradition is here for the town to be the unit of oversight. A state authority with augmented powers to deliver emergency care does diminish the power of the community. We are convinced, however, that the exchange is necessary and we all will be better served, on balance, by an emergency medical services system that is truly regional.

In support of EMS 2000 — of House Bill 2307 — we ask you to consider exchanging a sliver of autonomy to help us rest assured that when disaster strikes our families, our neighbors or ourselves, the men and women who dispatch calls, drive ambulances and staff emergency rooms will have the tools they need to protect us from harm.

Those who support the EMS 2000 legislation and want to be heard on the subject are advised to call the following:

Acting Gov. A. Paul Cellucci, Office of External Relations, 617-727-6250; Speaker of the House Thomas M. Finneran, 617-722-2500; Senate President Thomas F. Birmingham, 617-722-1650; Sen. Stanley C. Rosenberg, chair of Senate Ways and Means Committee, 617-722-1481; and Rep. John A. Stefanini, vice chair, Health Care Committee, 617-722-2130. Or, by all means, get in touch with our own lawmakers, Sen. Bob Hedlund or Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray.

Better management of school resources needed

To the Editor:

Until recent intemperate statements by a school committee colleague and their sensationalized news coverage, I had chosen to avoid discussing specifics on the school district budget dilemma. I did not want to complicate the town manager's task of negotiating several other Town of Cohasset personnel contracts.

A lot of good things are happening within the Cohasset School District. Teacher-student contact hours have increased by more than 25 percent. Grades 7 through 12 have been reorganized into separate middle and high schools. Block scheduling is now a reality. Our community benefits from dedicated teachers and outstanding leadership at the Osgood, Deer Hill and Middle-High schools. Generally, we maintain an outstanding teacher-student ratio that makes it possible to address the individualized needs of our students.

Unfortunately, overhead costs associated with running a small school district are disproportionately high under the best of circumstances. Special education costs have increased 48 percent during fiscal years 1996-1998. A recent audit of the school district indicates that a lot of work needs to be done to improve management of school resources.

These pressures have been exacerbated by a three-year teachers' contract that has seen many faculty members receive 30-percent salary increases over the life of the contract. The contract includes an "early retirement incentive program" that is not functioning as envisioned and is a costly "perk." The large salary increases were justified based on a fairness principle of realizing comparability with neighboring communities and to compensate for state-mandated added teaching hours. I was not on the school committee when the contract was negotiated. However, I have seen documentation which confirms that Cohasset teachers did not experience comparability. In any event, it is clear to me that the financial impact of the teachers' contract was not understood by the school committee (or, they did not choose to share it). Likewise, the advisory committee and selectmen should have realized its financial implications.

I believe the school district budget is very poorly put together and extremely difficult to analyze. The lack of a strategic plan with a strong financial component deny Cohasset residents the information needed to make intelligent decisions. It is projected that the School District will have 20 employees earning $60,000, or more, during the 1998-99 school year. We must look at the organizational structure of the school district from top to bottom. Job responsibilities should have value ranges and compensation should be tied to merit; not just seniority. We must do more in terms of objective personnel evaluations with summary feedback information to the school committee and the public. We grossly underfund the area of professional development. It is tragic that the Osgood and Deer Hill school facilities will not be in one building with all the potential that would have offered for better common-use facilities and lower overhead costs. Regardless, "the die is cast." Now, we must put that epic dispute behind us and work together to support a first-class educational program at minimal cost.

Frankly, I don't agree with some of the current school spending priorities, but I believe it will be Nov. 1998 before a five-year plan and top-notch budget can be presented to Cohasset citizens. Better late than never. In the meantime, I do not want to see a further deterioration of the school infrastructure in the areas of efficient operations and maintenance as well as other non-personnel essentials. In particular, I hope that my school committee colleagues and town officials recognize the wisdom of converting an existing part-time position to a full-time operations manager. Results of the recent audit confirm our need for such a position. I guarantee you that there will be a positive return on in-

LETTER, PAGE 13

QUESTION OF THE WEEK

The following candidates responded to the Question of the Week.

What is the most controversial issue facing the board you would like to represent? Where do you stand on the issue?

SELECTMAN/Martha Gjesteby

The selectmen coordinate and support the appropriate boards to solve problems such as sewer expansion, education of our youth and clean water initiatives. Some of the particular selectman issues are:

- Recycling—The marked trash bags will not be cost effective for the townspeople. It may increase illegally dumped trash around the town. Recycling other items such as an expanded list or plastics can help reduce trash.
- James Brook Watershed—In recent years, flooding has occurred from storms and will be acerbated by construction of the Greenbush track. The town should continue to work with the MBTA to mitigate potential future flooding.
- Town Budgets—The expectation with a town manager form of government is that the manager should find enough savings in his final budget to cover his own salary. The tax rate should be at a reasonable level.
- Infrastructure—Many of the private ways should quickly become public ways in order to build sewer lines, reduce potential liability on bus routes, and to replace water lines. Traffic lights on North Main/King Forest are critically needed.
- Town buildings—Maintenance of all buildings under one authority is efficient and saves money.

SELECTMAN/Tom Callahan

The most controversial issue facing the selectmen is the continuing wastewater treatment issue. We have already seen how costs, tax rates, opposition to septic management plans, the desire for fairness and financial parity and inter-board conflicts make any discussion of this issue controversial. We have danced around the issue for 22 years, but with the state court judgment now held against us, the town has no choice but to squarely confront these issues, with no easy solution at hand. The selectmen should take the lead in devising a long term goal and plan.

The ultimate question is what are we to do about the continuing financial hardship of septic ownership in this town, which remains a problem with or without a management plan. I propose that we once and for all sewer the whole town, the best answer both environmentally and financially. I propose we not begin work until the tax rate spike of the next few years has passed. Once begun, we should use longer term financing and phasing of the work to make the project financially palatable (together with sound overall budgeting via a financial Master Plan). By limiting plant capacity, out of necessity due to cost and limited availability of land, and by revision our zoning bylaws, I believe we can do this while also managing growth and preserving the character of the town.

SEWER COMMISSION/ Henry Rattenbury

The most controversial issue facing the Sewer Commission is the cost overruns on the bids for the North Cohasset project. The commissioners went out to bid twice and the second round of bids came in roughly $1,000,000 lower, but still very substantially over budget. Therefore, the Sewer Commission has an article in the March Town Meeting requesting $2.7 million to be paid by the users. Also, the selectmen have an article which would provide 50/50 funding by the taxpayers subject to a Prop. 2-1/2 override as was done last year for both the North Cohasset project and the Central Cohasset project.

Since I have always favored the 50/50 funding, I shall support the selectmen's article at the Town Meeting.

I feel that this project must go forward and expect to see the central Cohasset sewer expansion project continue progress.

Over the past decade, I have seen these projects through some difficult times. I would like to remain on the board to see these projects through to completion.

SEWER COMMISSION/ Patrick Plante

Cohasset residents are now entering the most expensive capital expenditure of a municipal project in the history of this town.

Article 5 of the Special Town Meeting of March 29, 1997, voted to appropriate $6,649,300 for the North Cohasset section of the sewer project. Article 6 of the same Special Town Meeting voted $322,500 for the pumping station entering into an Intermunicipal venture with Hingham. The bids for North Cohasset came in at 45 percent OVER the appropriated cost, and I find this totally unacceptable.

Also, under Article 5 of the Special Town Meeting (3/29/97), $13,496,800 was appropriated for the Central/Hillside sewer project, and this portion has yet to go out to bid.

The Cohasset taxpayers should not be held hostage to these outrageous increases in costs, and the Board of Sewer Commissioners is presenting an Article at our 1998 Town Meeting to add $2.7 MILLION MORE TO THE NORTH COHASSET SEWER PROJECT!

I feel that now is the time for Patrick Plante to be elected to the Board of Sewer Commissioners to represent the taxpayers of Cohasset in asking the "tough" questions and returning to the contractors to "sharpen" their pencils and come back with an affordable price. I also want to address the 50 percent of our residents presently to remain with on-site septic systems. Federal support for long-term bonding should be addressed so that the burden of complying with the Clean Water Act is not borne on one generation.

HEALTH BOARD/Stephen Bobo

As a retired engineer who successfully worked all his business life in disciplines and policy initiatives similar to those addressed by Cohasset's Health Board, it was natural to look for ways to use these skills to help the town that provides such a beautiful and healthy place to live. The town has a problem that will have an enormous impact on everyone: limited resources to cope with a growing demand for waste disposal. Landfills, sewers, septic systems and also clean water, are all part of the same system of land resource management, and to attack this problem piecemeal is to invite expense and litigation that the town can't afford. Failure of any part of the system will result in an unhealthy, possibly toxic environment for our town and its inhabitants. We are running out of time remaining to solve these difficult problems. We must meet and structure a unified plan for the whole town which addresses the towns health bill of rights:

Every citizen has:

1. the right to expect our elected officials to act in the interests of all our residents.
2. the right to a healthy environment for all citizens.
3. the right to a healthy waste disposal solution for his property. No one has the right to release effluent into our ecosystems by way of failed or defective systems. If a system is satisfactory, in good condition, and well maintained, its owner should be left alone.
4. the right to get what he pays for.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Pat Martin

Nothing stirs debate more than issues associated with increased taxes and no issue is more hotly contested than school funding. In Cohasset, like school districts across the country, the controversy is "How do we maintain our school facilities and ensure a quality education while remaining fiscally prudent?"

Answering this question is never easy, but particularly so when followed with questions such as: "How do we stay sensitive to seniors on limited incomes? How do we remain thoughtful to residents facing tax increases due to new sewers? How do we support other much needed municipal services?

An unlimited amount of tax dollars, obviously, cannot be the answer.

In regard to this controversy, I believe that areas of revenue outside the tax base must be constantly explored and considered. The school committee must ask itself, are we making the most of available grants? Have we fully examined fee-generating programs? Are we exploring public and private partnerships as well as regionalization and shared costs? Are fund raising components at their maximum potential?

As a grant writer, program developer and seasoned fund raiser, I secured hundreds of thousands of dollars for school districts across New Jersey. I believe Cohasset has the similar potential to find new moneys while possibly increasing services to the community. We must be open to looking in all directions and finding new ways.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Hugh Morgan

Clearly, the principal challenge of the School Committee is to establish a long-range plan and budget that identify minimum essential financial funding levels. On the one hand, there are many areas that are under-funded in the current school budget. We need to make up for past neglect. For example, the Deer Hill and middle/high school physical plants require significant upgrading. Everything from maintaining boilers at the high school to leaking windows at both schools and compliance with state code. Currently, the school public address system is inoperable and I regard that as a significant safety issue. In many instances, textbooks are outdated and school library collections are not in good condition.

On the other hand, increased funding needed in the aforementioned areas may be realized by emphasizing management efficiencies in other areas. Next year, the Deer Hill and Osgood students will be in close proximity to each other. Their co-location may offer the opportunity for a reorganization of administrative support. At the same time, personnel resources may need reshuffling within the middle/high school to recognize their new separateness. In view of the recent audit results — I think we may actually save money by converting our part-time operations position into a full-time responsibility.

Contract negotiations have to be very open and very fair to all school employees while taking into consideration the Cohasset taxpayer. Bottom line: we have to justify our minimum essential financial needs and work cooperatively with town officials and the taxpayers to support a first-rate school system.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Mark DeGiacomo

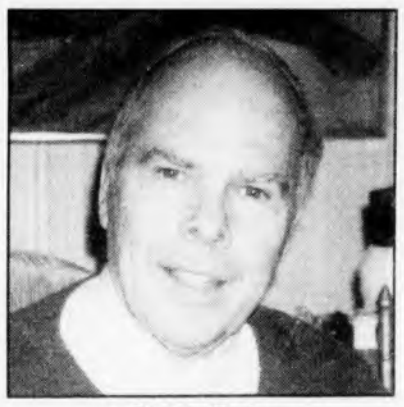
One thing the school committee does not lack is controversial issues. While it is difficult to identify the most controversial issue, the most current controversy involves the budget. Since I was not involved with the most recent budget process, I will not comment on it other than to observe that there is clearly something wrong somewhere when two weeks ago three of our selectmen indicated that they were not convinced that the entire $115,000 "compromise" amount was needed.

I believe that the school committee must immediately commence work on at least a conceptual model for the Fiscal 2000 budget. This task should be undertaken on two tracks. First, we should consider holding open forums to discuss the budget, line by line if necessary, and the budgetary needs of the schools. We need to reach out to all members of the community, especially those who disagree with our views. If we all keep open minds, I would like to think that together we can reach a consensus on a budget that will truly meet the school's needs.

Second, although we should attempt to reach a consensus, we must also be prepared to fight for the funding out schools need. Toward this end, the school committee must be prepared to play a leadership role in bringing our budget concerns to the town manager, the board of selectmen and, if necessary, to the town meeting floor and the election booth.

Next week's questions:

For selectman candidates:
If elected, how would you improve communication between the school committee and selectmen?



For school committee candidates:
The new school superintendent will be paid $40,000 more a year than the town manager and as much as the current superintendent. Why so much?

For sewer commission candidates:
Do you think a case can be made for sewering the entire town?

For health board candidates:
Do you support a total smoking ban in Cohasset restaurants?

Responses must be received by 2 p.m. Monday. Answers, which must be limited to 250 words or less, may be faxed to 741-2931 or dropped off at the Cohasset Mariner office in Hingham at 73 South Street. Call 741-2933 for more information.

CANDIDATES' CORNER

Steve Bobo

Bobo is candidate for health board

Steve Bobo is a candidate for the Board of Health. After his retirement from a successful engineering career, he looked for ways to pay Cohasset back for the joys of living here for the past 33 years. Soon, a more important concern appeared: one that could have a heavy impact on everyone in town and concerns the town's well being. Cohasset is a beautiful town, but if it's to keep its quaint charm, there needs to be a better job done of protecting its natural resources which are being assaulted in ways most people can't imagine. Without change, each Cohasset homeowner will be paying the bills for a dual system of waste disposal and expensive litigation which won't come close to giving us the clean waters or sanitary back yards we need.

It's a complicated problem, but after a careful study of Title 5, the state's waste treatment law, it became clear what DEP is trying to achieve. He read about waste disposal systems and learned how they are supposed to work. Not perfectly, but enough to know that without a unified plan, which includes sewers, waste disposal, control of septage, and oversight of waste and water management, we'll be paying fees which will make Boston's problems look like penny ante.

We already have much of the knowledge we need to develop a joint plan for Cohasset. What we have to do is stop depending on expensive and ineffectual patch jobs by incompetent suppliers, stop giving money to lawyers, and start discussing ways to have the town live with a system which takes advantage of septic systems where sewers are not indicated and the economies of large waste treatment systems where warranted. This isn't rocket science; most of the solutions have already been found, and most of the checks and balances are in place.

As a candidate for Cohasset's Board of Health, Steve Bobo's been successful in engineering disciplines and policy initiatives like those addressed by Cohasset's Health Board. He has the expertise and no other interest than the desire to help.

DeGiacomo is candidate for school committee

Mark DeGiacomo, 41, a lifelong Cohasset resident, has announced his candidacy for one of the two open positions on the Cohasset School Committee.

A product of the Cohasset Public School system, DeGiacomo completed all of his elementary and secondary education in the town and graduated from Cohasset High School in 1974. He received his undergraduate degree from Boston College and his law degree from Suffolk University Law School.

Mark has served on the Cohasset Zoning Board of Appeal for 13 years, most recently as chairman. As a baseball and basketball coach, and as a Sunday School teacher, DiGiacomo has worked with hundreds of Cohasset's youth. He is a member of the Cohasset Little League Board of Directors, serving as that board's "Player Agent" in charge of resolving issues with both children and parents.

Basing his candidacy on a commitment to the highest standards for education, DeGiacomo will draw from his experience as a lifelong resident and as a longtime active participant in the community. As a parent of two children currently attending Cohasset schools, DeGiacomo clearly understands the issues and challenges that parents, teachers and school administrators face every day to maintain quality public education.

"My candidacy is premised on the principal that ensuring quality education for our children should be a paramount issue for every resident, regardless of whether he or she has children currently in the Cohasset school system," DeGiacomo said.

"I was raised in Cohasset, and my wife, Lynne, and I have chosen to make this town the place where we raise and educate our children. I believe I can be an effective advocate for the schools and the students. While I understand that the town can not issue a blank check to the school department, there are certain operational and capital items that need to be funded if we are to educate our children properly. I hope to prove to the residents of this town that I would make the best choice for school committee member and I look forward to an open discussion of the issues surrounding our school system over the course of this campaign," he said.

DeGiacomo is a partner at the Boston law firm of Roche, Carens and DeGiacomo, P.C. In the legal community he possesses a reputation as an effective advocate for his clients and as an attorney who can bring disputing parties together to settle differences. He has authored several articles and books and has presented more than two dozen lectures to attorneys and judges throughout the Commonwealth.

Persons interested in volunteering or participating in the Mark DeGiacomo for School Committee campaign should call Ann Musto, chairman, at (781) 383-0401 or Margie Steele at (781) 383-1319.

Martin to run for school committee

Linden Drive resident Pat Martin has announced her intention to seek a position on the Cohasset School Committee.

A mother of three, Martin holds a Master's degree in Administration, Policy and Planning from the Rutgers University School of Social Work.

Before locating to Mass., Martin was the head of Martin and Associates, a consulting firm that specialized in need assessment, strategic planning, policy analysis, program development, grant writing, fund raising and special events. Ms. Martin's particular expertise within the firm was substance abuse prevention.

Martin has worked with school districts on almost every level. She taught as a substitute for two years before accepting a position at The Milford Academy as a seventh grade teacher. She has provided training to school administrators and faculty, analyzed and developed school policy, arranged special events for students, raised funds and developed new programs. The after school enrichment program she created for the Cranbury School District was recognized one of the best in the State of New Jersey.

Prior to starting her family and establishing her own company, Martin was the executive director of the Princeton Council of Community Services. This planning council studied the 13-town geographic region surrounding Princeton to identify emerging human service needs.

Martin believes if she is allowed to use her skills and expertise on the school committee, services to the community can be increased while new streams of revenue can be established. "The Cohasset School System is on the verge of a new dawn of development and leadership. I believe my experience can play a vital role in guiding it in the most positive direction," Martin recently stated.

Hugh J. Morgan candidate for school committee

Hugh J. Morgan announces his candidacy for Cohasset School Committee. Morgan is graduate of Cohasset High School. After serving in the Navy during the Vietnam period, he joined the MBTA. He worked through the ranks, from a bus driver to supervisor of revenue collections.

After retiring during 1991, he joined the Cohasset School System as a bus driver. Morgan is known to hundreds of Cohasset students as "Captain Morgan." Morgan is also the proprietor of "Captain Morgan's Dugout Galley" at Barnes Little League Field.

Hugh is a member of the George H. Mealy Jr. American Legion Post in Cohasset. He is an active volunteer for both St. Anthony's Church and the Cohasset Elder Affairs.

Hugh's goals include each child having an equal opportunity for a quality education while giving the taxpayer full value for each dollar expended. Morgan wants to see added emphasis given to maintenance and better support of school libraries and other areas that have been neglected. His in-depth knowledge of the school system also gives him insight into areas where economies and increased efficiencies can be realized. He is committed to creating a co-operative partnership between the schools, town officials and Cohasset residents. Citizens interested in supporting Hugh can call him at 383-0199. Donations would be welcome c/o the "Committee to Elect Hugh J. Morgan to the Cohasset School Committee," 24 Bow St., Cohasset, 02025.

Nichols Road group celebrates change in septic district plan

Marcus agrees with Bumstead's assessment of the meeting. Marcus points out that if Cook had not discussed the specific priority districts with sewer commissioners just days before town meeting, how is it possible that the list of 136 homes was listed with the town clerk's office at least 14 days before town meeting as required by law?

Bumstead said there are other problems with the list of homes in the priority districts and there doesn't appear to be any "reasonable explanation" for the way some homes were chosen and some were not.

The sewer commission held a public hearing on the priority districts Dec. 9, 1997. At that hearing, several people wanted to know how homes were chosen for placement in the priority districts. According to the transcript of that meeting, Sewer Commissioner Ted Guild said the Department of Environmental Protection chose the priority districts. Guild recommended that residents contact David Ferris of DEP's Northeast Region Office. Guild said Ferris was very involved in choosing the districts and met with Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik 30 or 40 times.

But Bumstead said Ferris denies ever choosing any homes. Guild said he is aware of Ferris's statements to the contrary, but insists Ferris was involved in choosing districts.

Marcus said DEP has yet to even approve the priority districts, which raises questions about the validity of the on-site plan.

"To my knowledge, neither the priority districts nor any funding have been approved," Marcus said.

Guild refuted that claim, pointing to references in the Attorney General's letter to the existence of priority districts as agreed to in the Judgment.

Marcus said he believes he has legal grounds to declare Articles 4 and 13 of the 1997 town meeting invalid.

Bumstead said she has no faith in the sewer commission.

"The idea that people at town meeting voted for this plan knowing what it was is untrue," Bumstead said. "The language was cleverly masked and we voted for it because it was written benignly. You would like to think you could trust a town board if they advise you to vote for something because it will be good for you and the town."

Bumstead said it is also odd that the sewer commission did not include the Aaron River, which is the town's backup water supply, in the priority districts.

Marcus said the town is concerned with saving money on sewer costs instead of actually protecting the environment, which was the intent of the Second Judgment. He said if the town was really concerned about the environment, it would focus more on finding out what kind of contaminants are in Lily Pond and where those contaminants originated from. He added that the best solution for the environment would be to sewer the priority areas so the town would not have to worry about septic discharges into the town water supply.

Marcus said the sewer commission should not be in the business of controlling growth. That is a job for the planning board and the zoning board of appeals.

"The sewer commission has sacrificed the citizens of Cohasset and our drinking water to control growth," Bumstead said.

Bumstead said she believes the original intent of the First Judgment for Agreement was to sewer the priority areas, not force homeowners to endure restrictions far harsher than Title 5.

CEES has also hired an expert hydrogeologist, Peter Dillon of Geoscience, to critique Tutela Engineering's performance. Tutela is the sewer commission's engineer and technical adviser.

"Based upon review of the Tutela report, it is clear that additional work is required to evaluate the effectiveness of on-site sewage systems in both the Lily Pond and Little Harbor priority districts to solve long-term impacts to public health and the environment," Dillon said.

Marcus said his clients would not give up under any circumstances.

"My clients don't want to flush $80,000 apiece down the drain for 136 septic systems for no good reason," Marcus said. "The problem has been dodged for 23 years and the town has yet to address it. My clients are basically saying they want to be sewered."

FROM THE D&A COMMITTEE

Each decade turns the public's attention to another law enforcement issue. In the 1980s and the 1990s, the more notable court cases were those involving drunk driving or domestic violence. Since then, the public's awareness about the two issues has increased dramatically. Currently, the court cases of significance seem to be those which involve juveniles. The outcome of recent judicial proceedings, and the issue of community based juvenile justice, indicates that the legal climate for teens is changing. Inexperience and immaturity, once the standard excuses for juvenile misbehavior, are no longer an adequate defense for criminal conduct.

In 1993 and in 1996, two laws were enacted in Massachusetts that directly relate to juvenile justice. The Education Reform Law of 1993 provided school officials with specific language concerning the standards and procedures that must be met by school personnel when administering disciplinary measures in cases involving dangerous weapons, hate crimes or illegal substances. The law, in some ways, limits the discretion of school personnel by mandating certain disciplinary action be taken when student conduct offenses occur. One effect of the Education Reform Law is that tough school sanctions may be imposed on students who commit disciplinary infractions.

The Youthful Offender Law was enacted in 1996. The law makes it possible for a teenager between the ages of 14 and 17 to receive a stricter sentence when they are found guilty of a crime. The law allows for a juvenile to receive an adult sentence, a commitment to a Department of Youth Services (DYS) residential program, or a sentence that combines the two options. With the enactment of the youthful offender statute, it is now more probable that teens will be receiving harsher sentences when they are adjudicated as youthful offenders.

For a teen to be prosecuted as a youthful offender, one of three criteria must exist. The youth must already be a ward of DYS because of past criminal behavior, or must be charged with a crime that involves the threat of serious bodily injury, or has actually committed a crime that results in serious bodily injury to another, or involves certain offenses with firearms. If a teenager's case does not warrant prosecution as a youthful offender, he or she will be charged as a delinquent.

Juvenile delinquency cases are more common than those prosecuted as youthful offender cases. A juvenile who is found delinquent can receive a range of sentencing options. The maximum sentence for a delinquent teen is a commitment to DYS until the youth reaches 18. In an effort to provide appropriate intervention and services to juveniles before they become youthful offenders, Quincy District Court and other area courts have reinstated Juvenile Diversion. The diversion programs attempt to provide early intervention and individual accountability. The youths are given a choice whether or not to enter the program. If the youth agrees to a diversion program, an arraignment is postponed and a contract between the youth and juvenile court staff is written. If the youth meets the conditions of the program and successfully completes the agreed upon contract, then the formal charges are not brought forward by the court.

Every eligible youth's case is monitored through the legal system by the diversion program staff. The youth and their families are then introduced to various service agencies that can help encourage individual responsibility and teach appropriate behavior. If the teen fails to meet the court-imposed requirements, or successfully completes the diversion program but later goes on to commit another crime, a prosecution for the crime will take place. A teen is allowed only one opportunity to participate in the diversion program.

Youth diversion is based on the principles of early intervention and prevention strategies. These are the keys to deter young people from becoming further involved in the criminal justice system, but when youths continue to commit crimes, laws such as Education Reform and Youthful Offender send the message that antisocial behavior will no longer be tolerated.

Better management of school resources needed

vestment and that the day-to-day management of the school district will be more efficient.

Despite some disagreements that I may have on spending priorities; the fact remains that per student costs are close to the state average. This is remarkable considering higher overhead costs associated with such a small school district. Too often, Cohasset voters have failed to invest in the future. One result is the current need to "play catch-up." For years, Cohasset school committees and Superintendent Hart have tried to comply with spending guidelines. They correctly placed their priority on the classroom but operational areas have grievously suffered.

I can tell you right now that school operating costs will continue to exceed normal guidelines so long as we poorly plan, lack focus and do not confront issues associated with the special education portion of the budget. Later this year, when we present the strategic plan, you must read it thoroughly and work with us to make difficult choices. The single biggest issue will be whether the Cohasset School District can offer comprehensive electives or whether we will have to narrow our offerings to a core curriculum. We will tell you the cost and you must make the choice.

Luckless Skippers look forward to some better times

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

Finishing with a disappointing record of 7-15, the Cohasset High School boys' basketball team marked the program's worst season in several years. However, the news is not all bad. The season didn't go as poorly as the numbers indicate and, more importantly, next year looks to be more like old times.

This year's Skippers did not get blown out on the scoreboards as often as their record may indicate. Indeed, they dropped six games by four points or less. In other words, a 24-point swing over the whole season would have put CHS at 13-9, a record with which they would have cruised into the state tournament. Alas, it was not to be.

With seniors Andy Hamilton, Pat Hurley, Justin McNamara, Paul-Michael Quintin and Eric Wenmark forming the core of the team, Cohasset struggled through a season in which they were hobbled, both by inexperience and injuries. Quintin managed a personal highlight when he hit the 1,000 career point mark, becoming only the fourth CHS player to do so, and moving into second place on the all-time Cohasset point total list, behind only Bryan Edwards.

Coach Ron Ford often started five seniors this year, but it was no secret that some of the team's major talent spent the game's first few minutes on the bench. Jamie DeMichele, a junior who has been named one of next year's co-captains, was the team's second leading scorer, trailing only Quintin. DeMichele's intense style of play and superb offensive skills hint at a monster year for him next season.

> "This team was not as bad as our record made it out to be. We were very competitive in most games and we saw several of our young guys really develop this year, namely Jamie (DeMichele) and Daniel (Trowers). It was a learning experience for everyone involved. We haven't had a lot of experience on this side of the coin."
> RON FORD

DeMichele will be joined in the Skipper backcourt by freshman Daniel Trowers, who saw some time this year at point guard. Manning the point, Trowers will be able to fully utilize the quickness, driving ability and brilliant court awareness that he displayed this year.

Top 10 reasons why March Madness is better than the Olympics

As we here at the Extra Points home office in Marshfield sit around the lodge waiting for Alberto Tomba to make his final run down the mountain, we offer to you the Top 10 reasons why the high school basketball and hockey tourneys will be better than the recent Winter Olympics debacle.

10. We're pretty sure that David Letterman's mom is not going to be at any of the games. Last time out, very funny. This go around was sad, very sad. As lovely a lady as she is she just couldn't pull off the television magic once again.

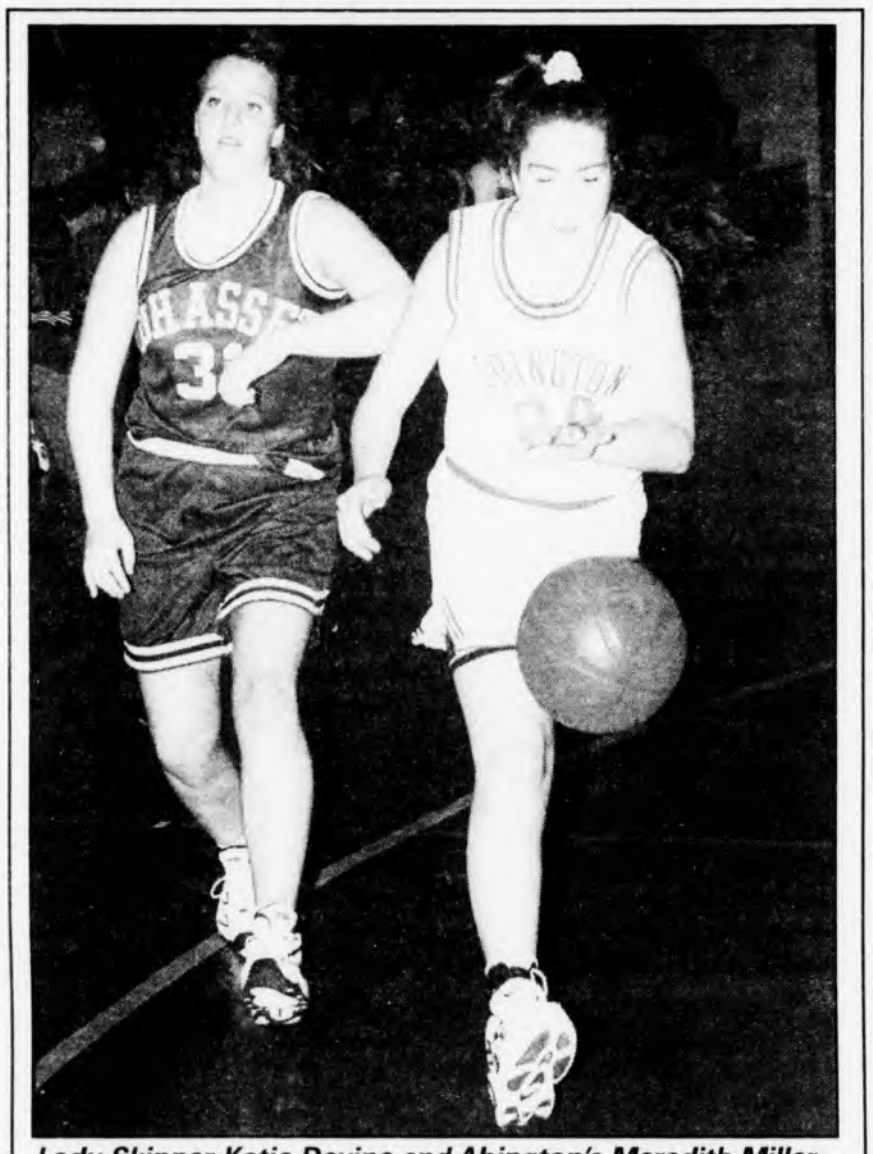
9. Win or lose, both teams still have to be in Biology class first period the next morning. It's all a matter of perspective. There are no shoe contracts or a soda endorsement deal hanging in the balance of these tourney games. It's done for competition and the love of the sport. And speaking of keeping everything in perspective...

8. Neither Keri Flynn, Alex Wilson nor Marche Strickland have ever gone out and trashed a hotel room after losing an important game. Losing to the Czech team in the semifinals and failing to qualify for a medal in men's ice hockey was not embarrassing for Team USA. Going back to the athletes village, getting drunk out of your mind, trashing your hotel room to smithereens and then not standing up to be held accountable for your actions, now that's embarrassing. If 1980 was "The Miracle on Ice", 1998 will have to stand out as the year of "Morons on Ice."

7. All games are played at a reasonable hour for reasonable price. You pay your $4 or $5 admission, get to your seat about 6:45 p.m. and strap yourself in for two hours of as good a show as you will ever get for your entertainment dollar. There's no waiting up to 3 a.m. to watch the first period of the Belarus-Finland hockey game or turning away from SportsCenter and contact with all other media forms because you don't want to know who won the Gold in curling until CBS shows the finals as part of the prime-time coverage 72 hours after the fact.

6. The participants actually want to be there. Now here's a concept, participants actually interested in stepping into the game and giving it there all.

5. Opening ceremonies in the tourney last no more than five minutes. Player introductions and maybe the National Anthem. Tops. No dancing children acting out the history of their nation or sultry divas horribly lip-synching the words to one of her own hits. That's the way it should be.



4. There are no bad guys. You don't have to be a fan of Team X or Team Y to cheer them on, you just have to be a fan of great action and players diving all over the place and getting floor burns that they will speak about with great pride for the rest of their life.

3. The high school tourney is a Scott Hamilton free zone. On a serious note, Mr. Hamilton gets nothing but respect from the Extra Points crew for his class and grace while fighting off a recent bout of cancer. Okay, enough with the seriousness. As an announcer, Hamilton may have surpassed Kathy Lee Gifford as the most annoying thing ever to wear a microphone with his color work in the figure skating competition. We know that you know more than anyone else in the world about the triple-toe-loop and backspin combination, but enough already. An announcer is not reason people turn into the Olympics, it's the athletes people come to see. Scott, please remember that for the 2002 games in Salt Lake City. For my money, we'll take Bill Wilhelm and any of those crazy local access cable announcers over Hamilton each and every day of the week.

2. For many of the players in the tourney, this is their Olympics. And their Super Bowl. And their World Series. And their Wrestlemania. For a good deal of the seniors on the tourney teams, the next time they lose will be their last experience in organized sports. And for those few who do get to go on to play in college, it really will never be the same. These are the last games these kids will play simply for the joy of it.

In addition to completing a registration form and paying the registration fee, parents are also required to provide a copy of the player's birth certificate if one was not supplied last season. Registration is open to all children who will be at least five-years-old by August 1, 1998.

Snow Row is this Saturday

The Hull Lifesaving Museum Inc. will have their 18th Annual Snow Row Open Water Rowing Race at 11 a.m. on Feb. 28 at the Pemberton Point Boathouse, Hull.

Entry fee for the race is $10 per person. Spectators are admitted free.

The Snow Row has gained a well-deserved reputation as Hull Lifesaving Museum's signature race. We've had snow squalls and shirt-sleeves, and everything in between on race day, but nothing tempers the excitement of this hard-working winter event or the enthusiasm of the athletes.

The race starts with all boats on the beach at the Musuem's Pemberton Point Boathouse in Hull. Then, at the shot of the starting gun, the competitors race into their boats LeMans style, creating a whirlwind of disorganized havoc ashore and afloat.

The 3 fl mile triangular course starts through Hull and Hingham Bays, continues around Sheep Island, past the Peddocks Island Day Marker and back to the beach.

The whole event is within view of the boathouse, so this is a particularly good event for the spectators. It is also a rare opportunity to see an amazing array of wooden pulling boats on the beach and in action—peapods, dories, wherries, whitehalls, ocean shells, pilot gigs, captain's gigs and Irish curraghs.

The race has five boat categories: workboats, livery boats, coxed boats, ocean kayaks and ocean shells. A few notes to all race participants: 1) all racers must be members of the USRA or the HLMI Rowing Association, 2) all boats must carry PFDs, bailers and whistles, 3) all coxed boats must begin the race bow on the beach, and 4) the HLMI Race Committee reserves the right to cancel the race or keep individual boats from setting forth due to weather conditions or rower skill level.

After watching the excitement of the Snow Row's one-of-a-kind LeMans start, come inside the Boathouse to warm up with a cup of hot coffee or cocoa. The Station Museum, one mile down the beach from the Boathouse, will be open following the race with free admission for all. For more information about the Snow Row, please contact Ed McCabe at 925-5433 or Box 221, Hull, MA 02045.

ATLANTIC BAGEL & DELI
COHASSET, MA

What makes our bagels the best?

We make all of our dough and use only natural ingredients. There are no artificial flavorings or preservatives. It is used fresh, it is never frozen. We boil, then bake our dough daily. We never serve "day old" bagels. That is the only way to ensure the fresh and chewy taste of a really fresh bagel. Many bagel shops use dough that contains preservatives or artificial flavorings. Few shops bother to boil dough before baking it. Many bagel shops will bake dough that comes frozen, others use bagels that are partially cooked at the factory and "finished" on site. Finishing partially cooked bagels gives them a "day old" taste. It is no wonder that the large chains that offer bagels are facing difficult times. Analysts are wondering why the stock price of publicly traded bagel chains has dropped by as much as 50% in the last years. We feel that this drop is because the shareholders have now tasted their own bagels. Stop by and taste a real bagel.

In the mood for something different?* Try one of these:

• Roast beef and bacon with red onion and thousand island dressing on an onion bagel
• Turkey club on a toasted "triple decker" bagel • A crock of chili or onion soup with melted cheeses on top (for in-store eating only) • Homemade beef stew with a bagel for dipping
• Hot pastrami and swiss cheese on a plain bagel • Pepperoni bagel pizza
• Turkey, stuffing and cranberry sauce on a plain roll-up
• Grilled chicken breast with cheddar cheese, grilled peppers and onions on an herb and garlic roll-up

Or mix and match

Over 14 types of bagel, 15 types of cream cheese, 15 meat and sandwich toppings, 5 types of roll-up bread, 10 vegetable toppings, 3 mustards, and more. We have soups, chili, quiches, salads and ice cream for dessert.

Grapplers finish another superb season

Rossi readies for state finals on Saturday

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

It's Hoosiers in a singlet. A small school with barely enough students to field a team scraps its way to the top. And it's happening at Cohasset High. Nope, this year it's not the basketball team, which has had such success in the past, or the soccer team, with its tradition of winning. Rather, it's the CHS wrestling squad, under the tutelage of coach Torin Sweeney, that is ranked 11th in Division II and continually on the rise

The smallest high school in the state to have wrestling as an athletic option for students, Cohasset has one of the most solid teams around. Even with an injury to a talented wrestler and despite forfeiting two matches every meet, the Skippers have still climbed to be one of the tougher teams in the state.

In the recent Division II South sectional meet, Cohasset came in third for the third year in a row in the team competition behind Carver and perennial champion Foxboro.

Junior captain Luke Caldwell credits the work ethic of his teammates for the success. When asked whether he was surprised by the team's record, he replied, "No, I'm not afraid to say that I'm not. All the work that people put in in the off-season, both lifting and wrestling for Orange Crush (an area wrestling club) has paid off. We had good numbers in Orange Crush this year."

Loaded from 145 lb. and up, according to Sweeney, Cohasset is also talented at the lower weights. Many of those wrestlers did very well in the recent Division II south sectional meet and the overall final help on the past two weekends.

Mike Rossi (first in the sectionals, fourth in the Division finals) is the lone Skipper wrestler that will definitely compete this weekend at the state wrestling finals in Brockton. Both freshman Craig Sheerin (second and fifth) and junior Ben Littauer (second and fifth) are first alternates at the state meet, meaning they will only get to wrestle if one of the top four grapplers cannot compete.

> "Mike (Rossi) is in one of the top weight classes in the state, but he has always done very well for himself. I expect that he'll do very well once again this weekend."
> TORIN SWEENEY

"Mike (Rossi) is in one of the top weight classes in the state, but he has always done very well for himself," said Sweeney of Rossi, who will trade in his headgear and singlet for catcher's gear once baseball season begins. "I expect that he'll do very well once again this weekend."

A number of other Cohasset grapplers also had a strong postseason.

Chris Pratt at 112 lb. placed fifth in the sectionals.

Dan Littauer, a mere eighth-grader, placed seventh in the sectionals at 119 lb.

Mike Baird was impressive at 125 lb., which Sweeney calls "the toughest weight class in the state." He took a fourth in the sectionals and a sixth place at the Division II meet.

Dan Duffy and Justin Langham, both freshmen, split the duties at 130 lb. and will continue to get stronger in the coming years.

Liam O'Donnell takes the mat at 135 lb, He placed sixth in the sectionals and pulled off a major upset when he defeated the #2 seed at the division meet.

With the loss of Jordan Fiore to a shoulder injury, Cohasset is forced to forfeit the 140 lb. weight class, but from there they are quite capable of winning the rest of the matches.

Justin Golden was dazzling this season at 160 lb., taking second place at the sectionals and Luke Caldwell did the same at 171 lb.

Sophomore Kevin DeVito saw time both at 160 lb. and 171 lb.

Despite a nagging knee injury, sophomore Joe Carbone looks like he's going to be a solid performer for the next two years at 189 lb.

J.P. Laugelle is in the 215 lb. class and he took a fifth at the sectionals while just missing a chance to move on to the next level.

Looking towards the future, Sweeney said the talent and popularity around the middle school wrestling program only bodes well for the team.

"Our middle school team finished 5-1 on the year and there was a lot of interest in the team, especially since the program is still fairly new," said Sweeney. "The early training gives the kids a great experience and allows them to be that much more prepared when they arrive at the high school." Sweeney also credited assistant coach Doug Sheerin with being a great help to him during the season.

Skippers point towards better times

More help is on the way. Junior Paul Hussey will see time at the off guard position next year, and his outside shot will place him in a long line of distance shooters at Cohasset. Classmate Alex Russell saw limited time this year because of a knee injury, but he also has been dubbed a co-captain.

Sophomores Kevin Andrews, Sean Conte, Khalil Madyun, and Craig Parker all helped lead a JV team this season while also seeing time at the varsity level. Andrews and Conte are both excellent candidates for a guard position next year, and Madyun and Parker should be imposing forces inside.

Ford was realistic about the team's performance this year. Acknowledging that his squad's results were subpar, he also pointed out the silver lining.

"This team was not as bad as our record made it out to be. We were very competitive in most games and we saw several of our young guys really develop this year, namely Jamie and Daniel. It was a learning experience for everyone involved. We haven't had a lot of experience on this side of the coin.

"But hopefully, we've lit another fire. We have another group coming up, that could be very good if they want to be."

As for the way in which this year's seniors ended their careers, Ford had this to say.

"I feel bad that those guys had to go out with a losing record, but the fact is they played good basketball for the most part. Take a kid like Paul-Michael Quintin; he had an exceptional career for us, and you can't take anything away from that.

"This group worked very hard for us for a long time. I'm glad that we didn't get blown out in a lot of games and that they all got a lot of minutes."

Hopefully, this season was a fluke, just a down year for the program. Look for the Skippers to bounce back next year with a talented squad that learned the ropes this year.

Fire chief looks for solutions to train's impact the Hingham side of Route 3A. Such crossings can be dangerous in any community, due to the chance of an accident. But in Cohasset, the crossings pose an extra hazard. About seven of them happen to be on the regular response routes used by rescue workers to get to the scene of an accident. They will shut down for as long as 45 seconds when the train passes through.

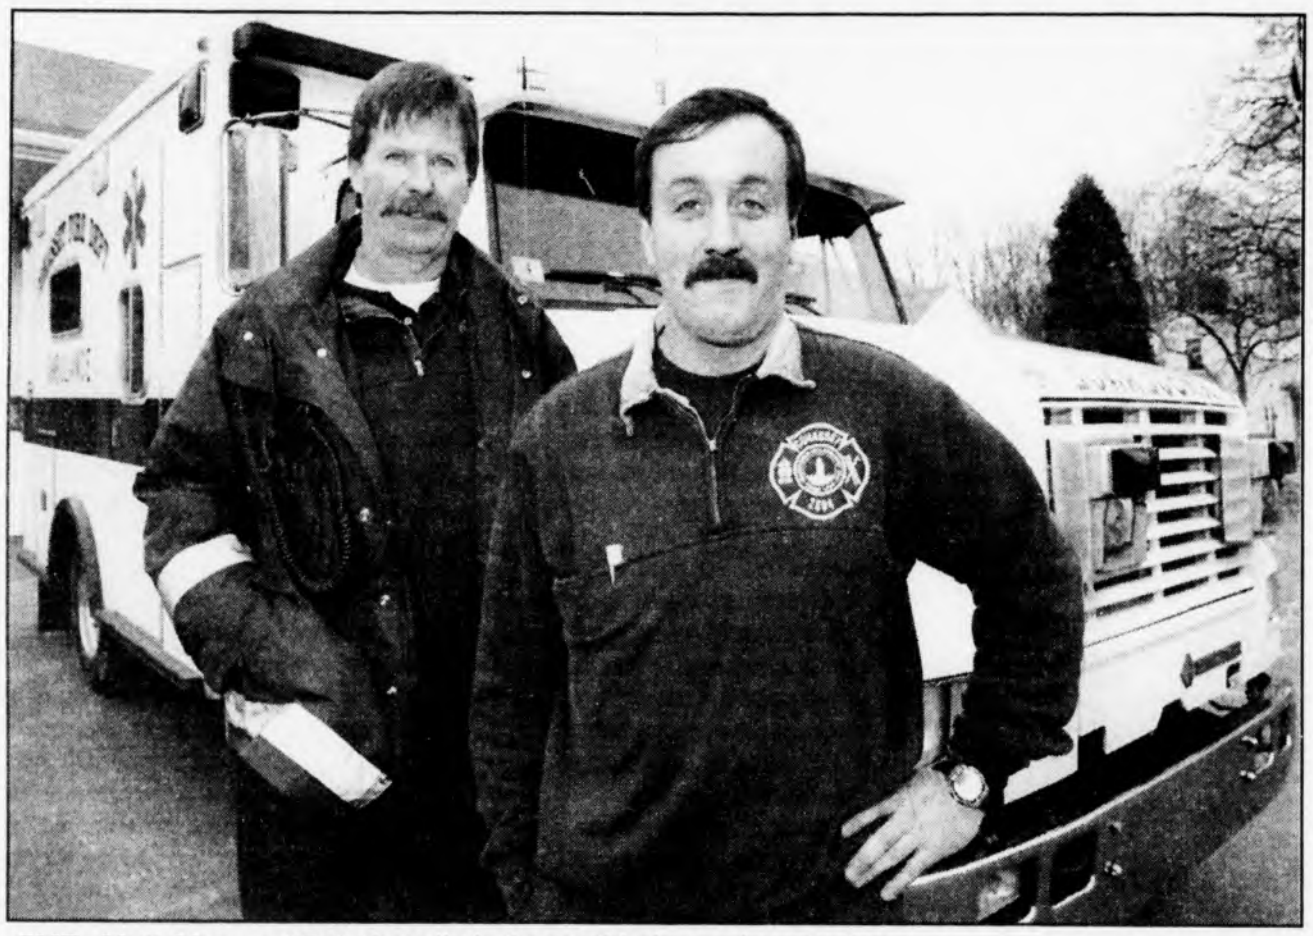
"We have only one fire station, and it's on the east side of the tracks," the chief said.

All the regular response routes basically cut east to west across the rights of way where the T intends to lay tracks. The Greenbush tracks will divide the village and much of the town on an east-west axis. As the rail line meanders through the town, it will run roughly west of South and North Main streets starting from the Scituate line until it crosses east of North Main Street near Turkey Hill. Once the track is built, the east side of South Main Street down to Cohasset harbor will be about the only part of town not cut off from the police and fire station.



Lincoln said rescue workers will use alternate routes when possible. Nonetheless, he said there will be times when the rescue teams will have no option but to wait. The chief said the trains are supposed to be only four or five car lengths and should get by the crossings quickly.

"Unless there's a problem, the train isn't stopping," he said.

The T has said the gates will be closed for 45 seconds at most at each crossing. But the transit authority also acknowledged there might be extra delays due to a line of cars waiting for the train to pass. T spokesman Brian Pedro said he had no information about the Greenbush schedule. Pedro said it was premature to talk about the number of trains the T would put on the tracks. But he said there has never been a problem involving rescue vehicles at train crossings.

"Greenbush isn't the first train we've ever run," he said.

Pedro also agreed the number of grade crossings in Cohasset is a lot for a small area. But he said trains used to go through 24 grade crossings in Taunton. There was never a problem there or anywhere else in the commonwealth, he said.

> "We have only one fire station, and it's on the east side of the tracks."
> — FIRE CHIEF ROGER LINCOLN

Lincoln said there was little doubt the train will add seconds to response time. But he also said there are more questions about the train than answers. Until the T's engineers get closer to the final design, it is too soon to say exactly how the train will impact rescue procedures.

The tracks are expected to cross Spring and North Main streets twice. The other regular street crossings are Hull Street, Cedar Street, King Street, Rocky Lane, Sohier Street, Smith Place, Pleasant Street, James Lane and Beechwood Street. The private ways are Sestito Lane, Castle Road and Lincoln's Lane.

The chief said a decision on the Lincoln's Lane closing has yet to be made. But as a member of the mitigation committee, the chief said he wanted to see the T take a consistent approach to safety at crossings. Lincoln said he wanted to see the same safety precautions taken at public streets and private ways.

"With these private ways it isn't the T's policy to treat them like the regular streets. We want the T to treat them the same way," Lincoln said.

He also said the public use of private ways here is something "peculiar to Cohasset." He wants to see lights, bells and safety gates mounted at all the crossings.

"We want to make them as safe as possible, whether one person or 100 people live there," he said.

The few homes on Lincoln's Lane are located only a few blocks away from the Elm Street fire station. Up to now, residents of the private way have had few doubts they could get timely help in a crisis. After sounding out the homeowners, the fire chief favored leaving the crossing open to traffic. That would give Cohasset's emergency vehicles access to Lincoln's Lane in an emergency.

Currently, Lincoln said it takes on average four to five minutes for rescue workers to reach the scene of an emergency. The numbers are high, due to the time to get vehicles to North Cohasset. Response time there averages seven or eight minutes.

Along with the questions about response time, the train could impact emergency work in other ways. The others are traffic accidents on the way to the train station or at crossings and train accidents, Lincoln said.

The chief said Cohasset would be a first-responder in the event of a train derailment. Rescue workers will receive special instruction in emergency procedures. The T and Amtrak will likely conduct mock disaster drills after the tracks are down, Lincoln said, similar to their approach in the communities that already have the Old Colony trains running. So far, those communities have not witnessed an increase in traffic accidents because of the train. Yet Lincoln is not ready to rule out the potential for trouble if more people start riding the commuter line to work.

State EMS legislation languishes on Beacon Hill

By Linda Rosencrance and Chris Szechenyi
CNC STAFF WRITERS

Legislation is pending on Beacon Hill that could revamp the Commonwealth's emergency medical system for the first time in 25 years.

If state lawmakers don't pass the bill it won't be for lack of support — it will be for lack of money.

"In principle, I'm in support of the bill," says state Sen. Stanley Rosenberg (D-Amherst), chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee, a key player with the power to bring the bill to a vote.

For the past three years, those who provide emergency medical services to in Massachusetts have haggled over the so-called "EMS 2000" legislation. Now doctors, paramedics and firefighters have signed on in support of the bill, which would represent the first revision of emergency medical services since 1973.

The bill is the legislative outcome of the work of the EMS 2000 Commission, which was assembled in June 1992 by David Mulligan, the former commissioner of the state Department of Public Health, to respond to a critical evaluation of the state's emergency medical services system by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration.

"We must begin to move from our current parochial system to a regionally based system in order to provide the highest level of service in the most cost effective manner," said state Rep. John Stefanini (D-Framingham), co-sponsor of the legislation and one of its most ardent supporters, who also happens to be a trained emergency medical technician.

Proponents hope new legislation will help enhance the state's EMS system, including speeding up response times and better coordination.

But key legislators are unsure whether they will pass it because of what they consider to be its hefty price tag — $3.5 million in addition to the $2 million currently budgeted for the service — and because time is running out in this legislative session.

If it is passed, the bill would coordinate and standardize the delivery of emergency medical services in Massachusetts. It would set up statewide treatment standards to ensure that everyone in the state from Boston to the Berkshires would receive equal access to high quality medical care. It would also establish a statewide trauma care system to deliver those in need to the best-suited facility.

Municipalities would still provide medical emergency services to residents, but would have expert oversight and support to upgrade the quality of those services.

First introduced in 1994, the bill would give the Office of Emergency Services, a division of the state Department of Public Health, the funding and authority to collect data to assess how well the system performs. At the moment, state authorities have no idea what the average response time is for ambulances across the Commonwealth and they don't have the resources necessary to collect or analyze the pertinent data.

The $3.5 million in new funding for the first year of the bill's implementation would be used to:

- Upgrade communications equipment to ensure that pre-hospital providers can connect with hospital emergency rooms, and complete a comprehensive study of future communication needs — $1 million;
- Hire six part-time medical directors to ensure adequate oversight and direction to emer-

Experts charge state's EMS fails to deliver consistent care

Today, the walls in the Taunton home of Warren and Chong Un Stewart are lined with pictures of Angela. But her father would like to forget the accident. "I work three jobs — from 6 a.m. to 2 a.m. – so I don't have to remember," he said.

His little girl is one of the 100 people who experts estimate die in Massachusetts every year because of dangerous flaws in the state's emergency medical services system. An investigation by Community Newspaper Company and WCVB-TV Channel 5 revealed that while emergency services elsewhere in the country have become swift and dependable, Massachusetts residents remain at the mercy of a patchwork, antiquated network. The investigation found:

- The local system is crippled by weak leadership and inadequate funding;
- Communications equipment is often out of date, which slows the start of life-saving emergency care;
- Emergency service is neither tracked nor reviewed at the state level, so professional standards cannot be applied;
- No regional trauma network exists to ensure that the most critically injured patients go to the appropriate hospitals for treatment;
- The best-trained emergency care providers aren't always the first to be notified when disaster strikes;
- Some communities, still forced to depend on local volunteers for emergency care, face gaps in schedules that can threaten public safety.

"Right now there is no system at all," says Edward McNamara, executive director of the Central Massachusetts EMS Corp., which oversees ambulance services in that region. "We're way behind other states."

The result is what experts like Dr. Alasdair Conn, chief of Emergency Medical Services of Massachusetts General Hospital, call an unacceptable number of preventable deaths.

That abstract notion of "preventable deaths" became all too real for emergency medical technician Louise Goyette 15 years ago.

That was when a 17-month-old child choked on a hot dog. Goyette raced to her aid. Unable to relieve the child, she knew she needed help from paramedics a few miles away who had the tools to save the child from suffocating. She never contacted them. Her limited communication system just couldn't reach the neighboring town.

Today, Goyette is the head of the Office of Emergency Medical Services for the state of Massachusetts, but the circumstances that she believes made it impossible to save that child's life remain frozen in time.

"Nothing has changed for many communities since that incident nearly 15 years ago," says Goyette, "There are still places in Massachusetts where medical practitioners can't speak to one another during an emergency."

Patchwork services

The stakes are high in a service in which minutes mean the difference between life and death, in a state where 80,000 people are injured in motor vehicle accidents. In addition, most of the 10,000 people who die each year from heart attacks in Massachusetts are stricken outside of a hospital.

"Many of these could be saved if the chain of survival was strong," said Eliot Jekowsky, a Needham doctor formerly affiliated with the Massachusetts chapter of the American Heart Association.

But the emergency system is less a chain than a patchwork of disconnected private and public ambulance companies that operate emergency services in each of the commonwealth's 351 cities and towns.

"Each town in Massachusetts operates its [emergency] services as a separate fiefdom," said state Rep. John A. Stefanini, a Framingham Democrat who is also an emergency medical technician.

Inevitably, the quality of that services varies from town to town.

Some towns provide automatic defibrillators that can jump-start a heart; others can't afford the $2,000 machines and the training they require. Some towns rely on firefighters as first responders, while others hand that responsibility to the police.

A Peabody family discovered the difference on July 13, 1995. John Gosselin slumped into his chair and called out to his daughter to call 911. The 67-year-old had a history of heart disease.

As his breathing started to falter, Glenda Gosselin quickly dialed 911. She was shocked when a police officer — instead of a medic — walked into the house minutes later, demanding: "What's his name? What's his date of birth?"

John Gosselin's widow still believes her husband might be alive today if firefighters a mile away had been called to his side.

"They could have given him oxygen," said Mary Gosselin, who is a nurse. "Maybe they could have saved him."

But in Peabody and many other towns in Massachusetts, the policy is for police to respond to emergencies first, and then to call firefighters and an ambulance, if necessary.

Few experts would assert that a different sequence of events in a specific case would have meant life rather than death. But the issue is the lack of any consistent protocol. Meanwhile, the agency in charge of overseeing and coordinating emergency medical services among all towns in Massachusetts is so powerless and so poorly funded it cannot address the major issues. Instead, its staff of 18 people does little more than inspect ambulances and certify technicians.

And the Office of Emergency Medical Services, a division of the Department of Public Health, even stumbles in that basic mission. Recently it licensed two emergency medical technicians with criminal histories. No one had the time to conduct criminal background checks before it certified the two EMTs.

One vital statistic for any emergency system is its average response time, but state Director Louise Goyette said she has no idea what the average response time of ambulances is across the state and her office has never completed a comprehensive review of preventable deaths to assess the system.

"We don't have the resources or personnel for statewide data collection," Goyette said.

The system has been examined by outsiders — and found wanting. Gail Cooper, an emergency medical expert in San Diego County, in California, assessed Massachusetts' services in detail and found fundamental flaws. "The key is to have a strong lead agency to carry out the duties and oversight of the emergency response system," she said. "Massachusetts lacks the framework right now."

A state of crisis

The current weakness in the system does not come as a surprise to experts. Seven years ago, a DPH task force on emergency medical services produced a blistering assessment that announced "EMS is an industry in a state of crisis."

The state's emergency services were described as being on the verge of collapse as hospitals, ambulance companies, state government and towns faced severe fiscal cutbacks, the panel said.

The task force found that "Central office leadership and direction has been threatened and become ineffective because of inadequate funding to tie all aspects of the EMS system together."

Another report pointed out similar pitfalls a year later. In 1992, it was a blue-ribbon team of national experts assembled by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration that concluded that Massachusetts' emergency services were deficient.

"Our 1992 evaluation was an embarrassment to the commonwealth and to the efforts of thousands involved in EMS delivery," said John L. Good of Beverly Hospital after the federal report came out.

Today, many experts believe Massachusetts' emergency medical system is not much better. At particular risk are those who suffer the worst trauma. According to Dr. Conn, who has tracked the situation since he completed a federally funded study of preventable deaths in 1992, about 14 percent of the state's trauma patients — 100 people — die every year because of the ineffectiveness of the emergency system.

"If we would develop a trauma system, the numbers would drop," he said.

One essential failure he noted: is that the system fails to get patients to the medical facility best suited to serve their needs in the shortest amount of time.

And despite study after study that pointed out its flaws, not until this year will Massachusetts put rules into place to establish uniform treatment standards for paramedics. The rules finally go into effect in April..

gency medical technicians and paramedics. The medical directors would manage statewide rules of treatment and develop an integrated trauma system — $750,000;

- Hire six additional administrative staff members at the regional and state levels to make sure the new rules are followed — $185,000;
- Hire five additional employees at the regional level to expand the training of 911 dispatchers and medical communications operators — $175,000; and
- Hire a state coordinator to oversee training and educational activities at the regional level — $35,000.

In addition, another $600,000 would be needed at the regional level for administrative and office expenses and staff costs and $800,000 would pay to test and certify emergency medical technicians.

In the second year a total of $4.2 million would be needed to continue to implement the legislation. But supporters of the bill, including Louise Goyette, the current director of the state's Office of Emergency Medical Services, said they have no idea what the annual costs will be to keep the system running smoothly in the years to come.

The state of Maryland, which has built a system widely admired by experts, spends $30 million a year. That money is raised through an $8 surcharge on all vehicle registrations.

"In order to run a coordinated, integrated system, certainly more resources are needed than we already have," says Goyette. "In order to justify what we're doing we need data, but in order to generate data we need more resources. It's a Catch 22."

Until late last year the EMS 2000 bill was held up in part by a turf battle between Boston firefighters and Boston emergency medical personnel, two agencies locked in a battle for the right to be the first dispatched to the scene of a medical emergency.

Boston Mayor Thomas M. Menino intervened, and the two sides have settled their differences and now support the legislation.

Despite wide support, the bill may still not make it out of the Ways and Means Committee where it has languished since last June.

"This is the short year of our two-year session," said Chairman Rosenberg. "It ends in July. Once we get to the middle of March we start dealing with the budget and it's hard to move other bills."

Some legislators are more optimistic. State Sen. Mark Montigny (D-New Bedford) predicted that the EMS 2000 bill will become law this year. And if it doesn't, he said, many people should share the blame.

Having fun raising money:

At the CEF fourth annual spelling bee

By Mary Sheppard Earon
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

'Supercalifragilisticexpealidious,' an inventive word from the 1960s Disney movie, "Mary Poppins," is a classic example of having fun with the written language, an exercise cleverly contrived over the years by imaginative wordmongers.

In the same spirit of having fun with the written word, the Cohasset Education Foundation will be hosting its fourth annual fundraising Spelling Bee Wednesday, March 11, at 7:30 p.m., in the Cohasset High School cafeteria.

Pam and Malcolm Speed of Tower Lane, who are CEF board members, are once again coordinating this community event. The Speed family moved to Cohasset from Manhattan several years ago, and Pam Speed remembered the first year CEF Spelling Bee.

"It was crazy and fun, and pretty thrown together that first year. Malcolm came home from soccer practice and told me he had volunteered us to be spellers. I said 'you did what?!"' Pam Speed said.

Speed said that she's a "pretty good speller," but the idea of getting up and actually spelling in front of people made her nervous.

"It turned out to be a lot of fun. We ended up having a great time that evening and nearly winning."

The Speeds joined the CEF board of directors and have volunteered to coordinate the fund-raiser Bee since.

"The idea to hold a fund-raiser spelling bee in Cohasset originally came from Hingham's education foundation, who has been holding a bee each year.

"When our second year rolled around, I called Hingham to find out how they ran their Bee. They put me in touch with Scripps Howard, who organize spelling bees around the country for kids. They provide us with word and study books which we pass out a couple of weeks beforehand, so teams can study if they want," Pam said. She laughed and added that some people never open the book.

"Some people just come to have fun. It's a fund-raiser."

Spelling Bee audiences root spellers on, groan for the speller who gets it wrong, and generally just have a good time.

Held in the high school cafeteria, the spelling bee will be catered again by Cohasset's Silver Spoon Restaurant, who provide a menu of delicious foods and beverages for those who come hungry. In the past, 50 percent of the proceeds were generously donated by the restaurant to the CEF fund-raiser.

Organizers typically plan for approximately 200 people, including teams and spectators.

"In the room next to the cafeteria, we set up baby-sitters and videos for the younger children. Older kids like to sit in the cafeteria and watch the Bee," Pam said.

Who are the spellers?

"We have teachers and parents, and the kids naturally love to see them go down," she laughs. "We usually have a whole round of real estate people who compete against each other, and that's fun to watch. They've participated in the last two years."

Pam also mentioned the spelling team of several of Cohasset's religious leaders, who call their team, 'The Wise Men.'

"The senior center folks get a team together and they've taught me that many times, older people tend to be the best spellers. They seem to have a much clearer grasp of words they're not familiar with. Maybe they had a stronger background in Latin or phonics," she said.

The principal of Cohasset High School, Curt Collins, has been entertaining and funny as past Spelling Bee moderator. This year, the role will be filled again by Collins, or another of Cohasset's three school principals.

Raffle tickets for a trip to romantic Rome are being sold for $20 each by CEF board members. The prize includes airline tickets for two and three hotel nights in Rome. Raffle drawing will be held during the Spelling Bee.

"Last year, the trip was to Paris and tickets were sold out before the Bee. The Genoveses of Howell Road won them and I heard they had a fabulous time. We decided to raffle a trip again this year," Pam said.

She said that the number of tickets are limited, which provides good odds to win for those who buy them.

The Spelling Bee evening will include a reception in the high school's recently installed language lab at 6:30 p.m., offering Cohasset an opportunity to see firsthand what their CEF dollars paid for.

At 7:30 p.m., the Bee will commence in the high school cafeteria and will end at approximately 9:30 p.m.

The Cohasset Education Foundation is a fund-raising organization that has raised money to successfully install the computer lab at the Joseph Osgood School, the language lab at the high school, the naturalist-in-residence program at the Osgood and Deer Hill Schools, and the skillful teachers program, a supportive educational course offered to those involved in education in Cohasset.

For more information on the fourth annual CEF Spelling Bee, sponsorship or raffle, please call Pam Speed at 383-2572.

'Evening Tide'

Meditations by Elizabeth Tarbox

By J. Peter Konkle
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Asked to review a book of meditations, this reviewer expected at least one chapter to read simply: "Om-m-m." To my surprise "Evening Tide," a new book of meditations by Elizabeth Tarbox, minister of the First Parish in Cohasset, was rich in imagery, pathos, persistent joy, and lessons for living.

This small book is a very personal journal of the author's reflections of her life on earth, a life not unlike the lives we all live. Questions and answers, warm days and chilly nights, loneliness and belonging. The "unrelenting blows of living" are likened to the blows of a blacksmith shaping our character.

Some chapters, such as "Homecoming," "Moving Day," and "Embers to Ashes" express the emotional mix of joy and sorrow that so many of life's events can bring. Others are deeply personal and expose the wounds and scars which are uniquely the author's.

The joy of the book, the gift the author gives us, is a reminder of life's natural beauty, even when the beholder's eye has a tear in it. Elizabeth wants the reader to pause and appreciate; to be moved by the common. She describes the neighborhood mutts as "impolite dogs. . . who see everything as a sporting event."

She reminds us our days are lived one hour at a time, and each hour leaves an imprint. She exhorts us to attend to each hour.

"Evening Tide" should be within reach whenever you need consolation or reassurance that day will follow night. It is published by Skinner House Books-UUA, 25 Beacon St., Boston.

Men plead innocent to rape charges

Two Cohasset men pleaded not guilty to rape charges in Quincy District Court on Monday.

Cohasset police charged Matthew J. Donnelly, 31, of 15 Brook St., and Paul J. O'Leary, 30, of 19 Arrowwood Road with rape after the alleged victim came into the station at about 5:30 a.m. Saturday morning to report the incident.

Sgt. Robert Jackson said the report was investigated by Officers William Quigley and Shelly Peters, who is the department's sexual assault officer.

"As a result of the investigation, two parties were placed in custody and were arraigned in Quincy District Court on Monday," he said.

Jackson said the alleged rape was not a random act of violence.

"She knew them at least by sight," he said.

Donnelly who was charged with rape and indecent assault and battery on a person 14 years or older was released on $1,000 cash bail. O'Leary, who was charged with rape, indecent assault and battery on a person 14 years or over and lewd, wanton & lascivious behavior, was released on $2,000 cash bail, the court said.

Attorney William Phelan of Quincy, who is representing O'Leary, said he confident his client will be cleared of these charges.

Attorney Joseph W. McDonald of Cohasset, who is representing Donnelly, could not be reached for comment by press time.

The men will be back in court for a pre-trial hearing on March 17.

Rail bed park to trip up T, officials say

only with a two-thirds override in both the House and Senate, with the governor's signature.

Mitigation Committee member Michael Dick said at a recent meeting that this could be a recourse to get the T to do what the town wants.

He said town counsel believes the town can designate the land for conservation use because it has been used for recreation since 1960.

The town bought the land for recreational use after the Old Colony Railroad ceased operation in 1959. In 1995, the land was listed as municipal open space in the town's open space plan. The Executive Office of Environmental Affairs approved the open space plan.

In a related matter, selectmen voted to issue a Request for Proposals for a consultant to help the town assess its mitigation needs. Plans are to issue the RFP and how much expertise the town could get for about $15,000 — the amount to be included in a town meeting article. If the proposals show the town can't get anything substantial for that amount of money, the article will be withdrawn, selectmen said. Articles are items of business before town meeting.

Selectman Merle Brown cast the sole dissenting vote. He believes the town should work regionally with other Greenbush towns to address the issues they have in common which include noise, vibration and air quality.

"I don't believe we should stand alone doing a $15,000 study of air," he said. "Why can't we work together with other towns?"

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said she felt the RFP should not include air quality which was harder to assess. However, the others reached a consensus that it should be included.

Flood data leads town list

terests. Cohasset's Mitigation Committee was formed last year to deal with the problems the train will bring to town. The committee's mission is to identify houses, businesses and sections of town that will be damaged by the Greenbush line's return. The panel also is supposed to research a variety of potential problems, such as vibrations, noise, safety and air quality. They also are to work with the transit authority on compromises.

But recently the town's Greenbush Mitigation Committee appeared fed up with the curt responses to their questions from the T. They reset the agenda for Wednesday's session in a firm letter of Feb. 13. The letter went out under Town Manager Mark Haddad's signature. It told the T the James Brook watershed is the biggest issue for Cohasset. It also said the town expects the T to address questions about the train's impact on the flood plain in "a complete, professional manner."

The strong language was a fair measure of strong feelings from the Cohasset mitigation board. Member Michael Dick said during the board's Feb. 11 meeting the meeting should be called off unless the T provided the flood data.

They new agenda also called for discussion about:

- the Sohier Street wells;
- the Nantasket Junction Station alternatives;
- Private grade crossings.

Finally, Haddad's letter asked for a separate meeting to go over the numerous other problems related to the train.

No exemption for Krupczak

Selectmen did not vote an exemption allowed under state law that would permit assessor candidate Deborah Krupczak to keep her current job if elected to the board of assessors.

Krupczak works as a clerk in the assessors' office. She is the only candidate running for an open seat on the board of assessors.

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan said he could see "inherent problems" with Krupczak holding both positions. Assistant assessor appraiser Cheryl Pooler reports to the board of assessors. Selectmen see a conflict because Krupczak would be reporting to Pooler during the day with the reverse being the case when the assessors meet.

"She would be the boss of her boss," Sullivan said.

Krupczak said that she would recuse herself from any personnel matters.

"Personnel matters are a minor component of the job," she said.

The exemption would allow Krupczak to hold more than one municipal position.

Selectman Diane Sullivan likened it to the selectmen's secretary Joyce Studley also serving as a selectman.

" I would compare it to Joyce being on the board of selectmen and still working in this office," she said.

Krupczak said she is trained in the field.

"I have chosen this as my career. It is my area of expertise and I thought this was a good opportunity to throw my hat into the ring," she said.

Krupczak said she is not in a position to give up her job.

"I can't give up my paycheck," she said.

Krupczak had not taken her name off the ballot by press time yesterday.

Dredging project slated for September 1998

cies, the federal and town dredging projects piggy-back onto one another. There have been several powwows with state, federal, town and regulatory officials since the project was proposed nearly four years ago.

A total of $400,000 — including a state grant administered by the Waterways Division of the state Department of Environmental Management — and a $100,000 town match are expected to cover the town's dredging costs. Congress appropriated $1.34 million to pay for the federal portion of the Cohasset dredging project after U.S. Rep. William Delahunt, D-Quincy, went to bat for the town.

Last July, Delahunt shepherded money for the project through at the federal level when he discovered flaws in the reporting system among state and federal agencies, which set national priorities for federal assistance to coastal navigation improvements. A key part of the formula was the volume of shellfish actually landed. Cohasset ranked 10th in the state in 1995 for catching lobsters, landing 570,000 pounds in 1996. With 39 lobstermen fishing out of the harbor, Cohasset is ranked 11th in size of ports out of 40 in the state.

Delahunt discovered the Corps of Engineers underestimated the amount of lobsters landed in Cohasset when the project was not included in the fiscal year 1998 federal budget.

Cohasset Republican committee chairman John Flanagan and state GOP vice chairman Polly Logan invite acting Gov. Paul Cellucci to speak to South Shore residents March 8. The event is from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. at Tosca in Hingham. Seating is limited. Call 383-0031 for reservations.

Some Things to Know About Political Advertising

Newspapers reach almost 90% of adults each week. Their heaviest readership is among groups that are most likely to vote. These are the people who are actively involved in and concerned about their communities and the quality of life: professionals, high-income earners, well educated, ages 35-64.

Community Newspaper Company South offers an unparalleled variety of creative options with which to state your political case – page and placement options, large and small space opportunities, continuity, color along with customized slipsheets.

Whether you're a candidate, campaign manager, or media director, we'll help you decide how to best utilize your campaign dollars.

POLITICAL ADVERTISING GUIDELINES

- ★ Placement of political advertisements will be accepted on a first come, first serve basis. Guaranteed preferred placement allows the candidate to pick a specific page number, not a specific location on that page. Guaranteed preferred placement will be charged an additional 25% premium. Minimum size for preferred placement is 10 column inches.
- ★ Pre-payment of all political ads is required, with no exceptions. Cash, check or credit cards are accepted.
- ★ Deadline for political advertisements is 5 business days prior to publication date. Proofs will be available if submitted at least one week prior to publication.
- ★ Retail rates apply. Contract rate may apply if the candidate signs a contract and pays in advance the total dollars committed per the agreement.
- ★ In accordance with Massachusetts laws Chapter 56, Section 39, all political advertisements must be accompanied by a signed authorization statement. Political advertisements must also be accompanied by a Community Newspaper Company indemnification and Limitation of Liability Agreement. Forms are available from your local Community Newspaper Company office. You are welcome to as many as you require.
- ★ The designation "Political Advertisement" must run above each column of the advertisement.
- ★ The advertisers/candidates are responsible for the accuracy of the content of material being presented in their advertising, including written permission for the use of photographic likenesses for persons other than the candidate and endorsements.
- ★ All ads must be submitted in legible handwriting or typewritten form.
- ★ In the last issue of the newspaper prior to any election, political advertisements in which it is clear that the intent is to deny opponents time for rebuttal will not be accepted. All ads are accepted at the discretion of the publisher.
- ★ All advertisements must be bordered and use a typeface distinct from the news typeface.
- ★ All political ads need to include the affiliation of the organization placing the ad, name, title and address (i.e., Citizens to Elect John Doe, Mary Smith, Treasurer, 123 Main St., Weymouth, MA 02190).

Second annual kitchen tour

It's a tour for every Martha Stewart want-to-be and even those who wish they'd never heard of the deva of kitchen and home. On March 6, from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. the South Shore Community Center will sponsor its second annual tour of area kitchens and dining rooms. Expanded from last year, the 1998 kitchen tour boasts six fantastic kitchens from the southern end of Cohasset to its northern end near Rocky Beach.

Each of these very different and inviting kitchens and homes will spotlight tablescapes by local and out-of-state interior designers as well as tempting taste treats by some of the South Shore's finest caterers.

Shuttle service to the homes will be offered from two locations including the Lightkeeper's residence where coffee and sweets will be available throughout the tour day, and a number of home and kitchen ware, specialty and craft vendors will have displays and items for sale.

Advance tickets may be purchased at the center or by calling (781) 383-0088. Tickets are $20 in advance and $25 per person the day of the tour. Ticket sales are limited so early purchase is suggested.

Assisted living to be discussed March 8

The Social Service League of Cohasset is sponsoring a program entitled, "Assisted Living for the Elderly, What is it?" from 2-4 p.m. on March 8 at the Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland Ave.

Representatives of local assisted living facilities will answer questions, such as: Why should a person consider one? When is a good time to move into one? Just how expensive are they? An attorney specializing in elder care law and estate planning and a long-term care insurance expert will also discuss legal and financial considerations.

The panel will include representatives from Grove Manor Estates, Braintree; New England Friends Home, Hingham; Sunrise Assisted Living, Cohasset; Welch Health Care and Retirement Group; Attorney Brian Barreira, Hingham; Williston "Bud" Holbert, owner, Resource Group, Plymouth; moderator Particia Carleton, LICSW, Social Service League. Free admission, pre-registration suggested. For more information, or to register, call (781) 383-0771.

Landfill expansion gets green light with conditions

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Secretary of Environmental Affairs Trudy Coxe has issued a decision saying that the Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill can expand vertically without a supplemental environmental impact report as long as it satisfies certain criteria.

In a letter dated Feb. 11, 1998, Coxe says that CHL may modify its permit and increase the maximum allowable height of the landfill from its current limit of 190 feet to 206 feet. John K. McNabb Jr., vice-president of the anti-landfill group Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE) estimated the current height of the CHL facility at 178 feet. McNabb added that the landfill is wide and the height may be lower at other sections.

The additional height would add another 44,000 tons of material to the landfill. CHL's maximum daily rate will remain unchanged at 299 tons per day. Coxe estimated that the additional height would allow CHL to continue landfilling until March, 1999. Once the landfill is at maximum capacity, CHL must

Planners have reservations

Red Lion Inn owner seeks town support for reopening

By Margo Sullivan and David Tibbetts

The businessman who owns The Red Lion Inn laid it on the line for the Planning Board last week. Gerd Ordelheide made the message very clear.

It was a two-part message.

- He has the deep pockets it will take to restore the faded jewel of the village.
- The planning board better work with him.

"You're looking at a million dollars plus," he told chairman Al Moore. "Find another idiot who would do it in this town."

The planning board heard the message. Without any doubt, the Red Lion Inn, according to board member Robert Sturdy, could bring new life and energy to the village. But the board's enthusiasm for the end result was plainly chilled by their doubts about the means. In frank comments after the hearing, the planning board appeared to have little inclination to approve Ordelheide's plans without substantial improve-

Selectmen ante up for school budget

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

As expected, the selectmen Monday voted to inject more cash into the school department's budget.

The board agreed to add $30,000 for the coming fiscal year (FY99) to the bottom line for education spending. The extra money came due to a special request of the school board.

Previously the selectmen voted 3-2 to give the schools $30,000 less than anticipated. But later they agreed to reconsider their vote.

About 50 people turned out to hear the discussion. School superintendent Stephen Hart and four members of the school committee answered questions from the selectmen before a crowd that packed the selectmen's second-floor quarters to overflow capacity. Some latecomers had to stand.

Is Cohasset Arnold's kind of town?

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

A rumor movie star Arnold Schwarzenegger is moving to Cohasset has been circulating for the past weeks. Lately the gossip has been given credence by some people who were once friends of the late Michael Kennedy. He was killed Dec. 31 in a skiing mishap in Colorado. His home on Atlantic Avenue has since been the subject of speculation that a sale might be imminent to his cousin-in-law.

Polly Logan, a Kennedy friend though a prominent Republican party supporter here, said she heard the story in a Realtor's office and thought it might be true. Logan said she preferred not to identify the real estate broker. But Alna Eckberg, the Realtor who sold the house to Kennedy, said she has also heard the rumor and believes it is invented.

"We hear it, and we just laugh," Eckberg said.

Cohasset police chief Brian Noonan also said he had heard several different accounts. The first had the actor on Atlantic Avenue looking at a house to buy. In a later version, Schwarzenegger and his wife, Maria Shriver, TV journalist and daughter of Eunice Kennedy Shriver, decided against the first house and bought the Kennedy house.

Kennedy was the first cousin of Schwarzenegger's wife Maria Shriver. His house also has an Atlantic Avenue address at Number 181.

But if the story turns out to be true, Noonan said he doubted another movie star would cause much of a splash in Cohasset.

"He might draw a crowd for a while, but I don't believe it would be a lasting thing," the chief said. He also favors a trend by celebrities to seek havens in small communities.

"I don't blame them," Noonan said. "If he comes here, we will assist him in retaining his privacy, the same as we would for any citizen."

But Ann Whelan, who lives across from the Kennedy house and is a friend of the Shriver family, said she doubted Cohasset would be Schwarzenegger's kind of town.

"He would be a colorful cat to have in Cohasset," she laughed.

More skepticism came from a spokesman at the Registry of Deeds. According to Richard Kennedy inside the Norfolk Country land court, Michael's estranged wife deeded her right to the Atlantic Avenue property back to her husband in December. He doubted another sale could happen for at least a year, while the estate is in probate court.

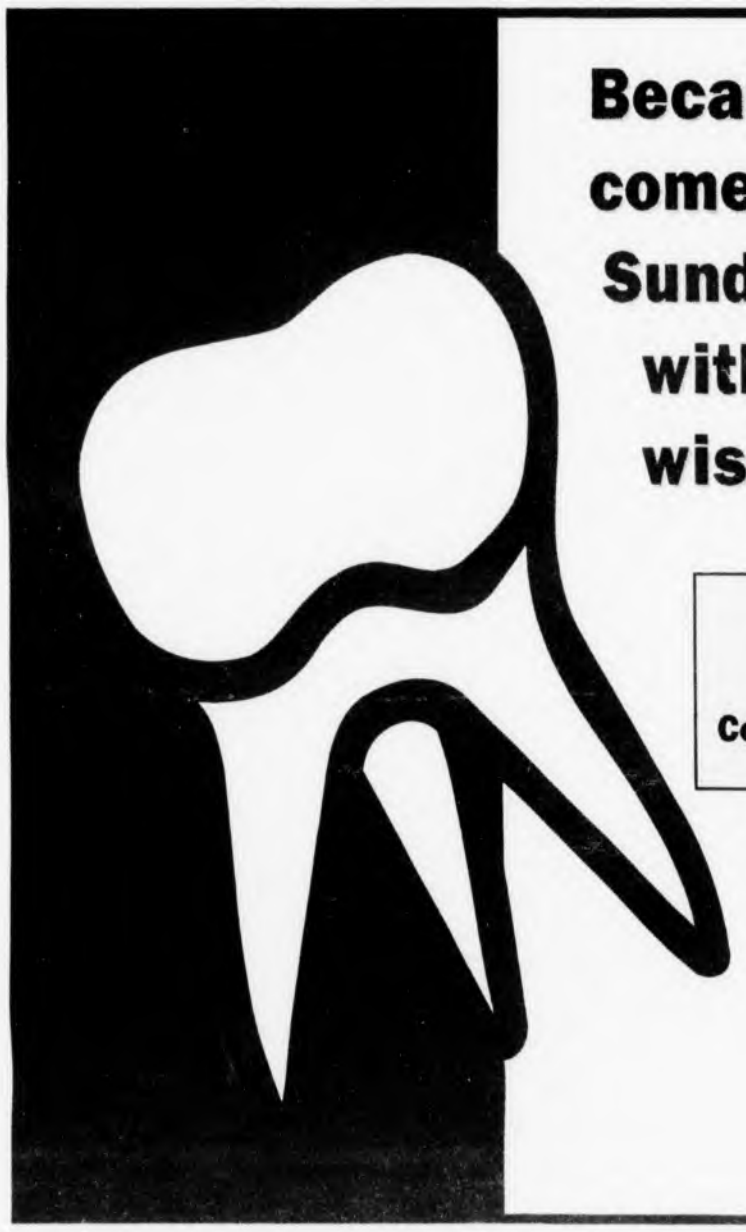
Hedlund announces municipal recycling grant

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund (R-Weymouth) has announced that Cohasset has been selected to receive a $833 municipal recycling grant.

"These core grants play a significant role in building Massachusetts' recycling infrastructure and promoting consumer participation in recycling, composting and household hazardous waste programs. Cohasset was selected for a grant because its program demonstrates a commitment to enhancing the Commonwealth's goal of 46 percent recycling by the year 2000," concluded Hedlund.

Since 1990, the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs (EOEA) and the Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) have granted over $14 million in recycling equipment, household hazardous waste equipment and education materials to municipalities throughout the Commonewalth. Out of the $5.2 million in Fiscal Year 1998 grant requests, DEP will award $1.37 million in grants.

Republicans to meet



The Cohasset Republican Town Committee will meet at 7:30 p.m. on March 5 at the home of Polly Logan, 121 Nichols Road to elect seven delegates and two alternates to the state convention.

The convention will be held in Worcester on April 18.

WINDOWS INTO COHASSET

Victorian home blends functionality with grand past

A kitchen tour to benefit the South Shore Community Center is set for Friday, March 6 from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. On display are kitchens in six private homes plus one inside the Lightkeeper's Residence. A few of the $25 tickets are still for sale. Call 383-0088 for information. (The snow date is Saturday.)

One of the kitchen on the route belongs to Sarah Davis. Earlier this week she invited the Mariner to her home and offered a preview of the 1998 Tour.

The Davis home on Elm Street is part of the South Shore Community Center's tour of private kitchens.

Sarah Davis and her husband Michael treasure old houses. Two years ago they bought the Victorian house at 84 Elm St. The house had been in the original owner's family for almost 100 years and was then in need of repairs. But Davis said the couple did not even consider building or buying a new home.

"The more work the house needed, the better we liked it," she said. "I liked the idea of rescuing it."

Davis said the effort is still a "work in progress." But the work left to be done is not apparent to a visitor. With a new roof, landscaping and a driveway, the home today has a definite visual message. It says a Victorian house might be surrounded by Colonial architecture and still look quite at home.

Davis said all the other houses along Elm Street are Colonial, and most are examples of the Federal style. The Victorian house is different in architecture yet still part of the neighborhood. One of its best features is the location within a stroll of both the harbor and the village.

The mansard roof and bay windows make the house an example of the Second Empire style of Victorian architecture. The style was popular around 1870 when the house was constructed. (Davis said the house was built between 1860 and 1870.)

"The mansard roof is special because it lets you keep the high ceilings upstairs," said Sarah Davis.

Davis and husband Michael replaced the roof when they moved in. The mansard roof was then covered in wood shingles, but the original material was probably slate. The couple had the shingles removed and went for a slate-look. Ultimately, they chose a material that looked like slate but was more practical. It weathers better in the seaside air.

The new roof was among their extensive renovations inside and outside of the house. They also overhauled the barn behind the house. It has a flying horse weathervane over a cupola.

"We did an awful lot to this house," she said. "We replaced the roof. We painted. We put in the driveway. We did over the landscaping."

Fortunately, they had similar ideas about most of the changes, including the color of the house. It was all white when they bought it, and the coins and other architectural points were all but invisible.

"You couldn't see any of the details," Davis said.

The couple wanted a "fairly neutral and soft" palette. They added gray, taupe and green to the white. Then they got to work on the landscaping partly because the front door was almost inaccessible, she said.

"The house just sat up on a hill of grass," Davis said. "People used the back door rather than climb up it."

They also opened up the porch which was enclosed and made it look more like a verandah and much more inviting. Some hewn stone steps lead from the verandah to a new driveway. It is shaped like a horseshoe and made of crushed stone.

"The more work the house needed, the better we liked it. I liked the idea of rescuing it."
– HOMEOWNER SARAH DAVIS

The inside of the house also has the best features of Victorians. The downstairs rooms are big, bright and airy with 12-foot ceilings and banks of bay windows. But they also contain little closets, butler's pantries and a pass-through. The features turn everyday life into a brush with a grand past. The original marble fireplace is the focus of the front room. The downstairs floors are red pine, except for the wood parquet in the dining room and tile in the kitchen. Lofty ceilings are edged with the original plaster moldings and decorated with medallions. A winding staircase leads upstairs from the foyer.

But Friday, the guests will be looking primarily at the big yellow and blue country kitchen.

"These are just my colors," Davis said. Davis said she has painted the kitchen yellow in every home she has lived in, and she acknowledged it is a hard color to get right because the hue tends to change with the light of the day. This time, it came out right. "This is a really special yellow, a nice warm yellow."

But she credited the decorator Helen Baker Interiors of West Harwich, for finding the right shade.

It is a wonderful room. It is big but it is also comfortable, due to the arrangement of some unusual antiques in combination with modern fixtures. The Jenn-Air stove placed in a kitchen island could be in any modern house. But it is set off by a marble topped dry sink with marble sides stands against one wall. Almost opposite, near a back door, Davis has placed an antique ice chest. Antique chairs are dressed in buttoned slipcovers. The blue and white pattern in the fabric is mirrored by blue willow china mounted on another wall. Light streams in from two big windows, two doors and a back stairway.

Davis said the house was a big project but one the couple enjoyed.

"We really do love this house," she said. "It's just a happy house."

Board looks to clear way for dredging

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Peter Pratt sent the selectmen a clear but ominous message Monday when he briefed them on the status of the harbor dredging project. The project is on target to begin in September or October, but the schedule is tight.

Pratt, a former selectman, was not happy to hear about a possible delay while the board ironed out a property dispute to the waters of Bailey's Creek. The property owner, Paul Trendowicz of the Cohasset Harbor Marina, has said he owns the area under water up to the middle of the creek. Though he has agreed to move his floats while the harbor is dredged, the Army Corps of Engineers has indicated he must remove the floats permanently. The floats are used to tie up boats, according to the harbor master John Winters.

"He has an encroachment problem," Winters said because the floats are invading waters the federal government claims it owns. Trendowicz was not reached for comment before the Mariner went to press.

After learning selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan opted to "research" the property owner's title deed, Pratt said the time spent was time wasted. He said the dispute could delay the project. He also said Sullivan previously should have dismissed the claim.

"One little glitch like this could hold up this project," Pratt said and reminded the board a $1.5 million federal grant is at stake. He also said the court decided the same property question years ago. Pratt criticized Sullivan's actions.

"You're not advancing the best interests of the town, Michael," he said.

Pratt compared the claim to someone presenting a title to the Town Common. He said he had hoped the board had better sense than to entertain such assertions.

Sullivan said he would also research a question about ownership of the Town Common but reminded Pratt he would not be a selectman much longer. "I won't be here in six weeks," Sullivan said. He also said Pratt would probably be glad of his departure.

Nonetheless, the project consultant David Vine confirmed the "glitch" could hold up the dredging.

"Yes, it could hold up the p[illegible] ject," he said. Vine said probably the Army Corps of Engineers would dredge other parts of the harbor and potentially leave the creek out altogether.

Assessor candidate drops out of race

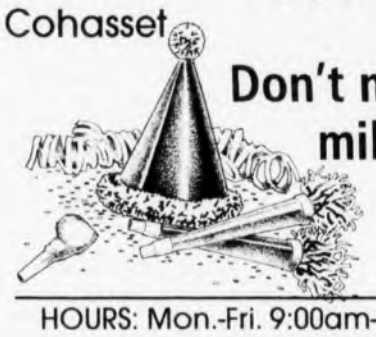
The only candidate for the board of assessors has dropped out of the race. Deborah Krupczak ended her campaign Friday, after the selectmen did not grant her a special exemption.

Krupczak is employed as an assistant in the assessor's office. Without the exemption, she would have had to choose between keeping her job and serving on the board. Town Manager Mark Haddad had offered to find her a job in a different department, other than the assessor's office. She would not have needed an exemption then. But she decided she preferred to stay in the assessor's office.

Krupczak said Wednesday she ended her campaign because it seemed like the "wise" thing to do.

"I wanted to serve the town, but the selectmen had a problem with it," she said.

Krupczak was the only candidate running in the April 4 town election for the seat on the assessor's board. Frederick Koed, a former water commissioner, took out nomination papers but then decided against a run for public office.



Septic hearings on hold

The board of health has stopped holding public hearings on an unpopular subject. New regulations to govern controversial "high-priority" septic districts have been put on "indefinite" postponement.

The delay is due to the Attorney General's decision to take a second look at the priority district. Two districts were adopted last year as part of a settlement with the state. They were unpopular with homeowners, however. Many residents objected to mandatory inspections of their septic systems on a recurring seven-year cycle.

The health board has been charged with supervising the inspections and writing regulations to govern the new districts.

Sewer commission, selectmen offer 'conflicting articles

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Selectmen and the sewer commission disagree about who should pay to connect five Newtonville homes to the Central sewer system.

The selectmen say the taxpayers should spring for half the construction costs. But the sewer commission holds the homeowners should foot the bill themselves. Before the issue gets decided, both sides are likely to air a question about fairness before the March 28 town meeting voters. Ironically, the issue concerns the less important of two sewer construction projects. By far the bigger issue is how to finance the North Cohasset project, according to sewer commissioner Ted Guild.

The two boards also are sponsoring two different articles to finance the big North Cohasset project. Nonetheless, selectmen and sewer commissioners do agree about the financing there. In that case, the second article does not reflect a disagreement. The second article is there to insure the job gets a green light if the voters defeat the first question, according to sewer commissioner Ted Guild.

Monday, the sewer commissioners tackled questions about all the sewer articles that will come before town meeting. The most controversial, Guild said, was how to raise the $2.7 million for sewers in North Cohasset, not how to pay for Newtonville. If the $2.7 million question is passed, voters will decide again about a debt exclusion override to pay for the North Cohasset sewer project. Town Manager Mark Haddad said Monday the question will be on the April 4 ballot. A vote in favor of the debt exclusion would allow the town to exceed the Proposition 2 1/2 levy limit. The increase would be temporary and would end when the project is all paid for. Debt exclusions are typically used when money has to be borrowed to pay for construction, capital improvements or other one-time costs.

Monday about 30 people showed up at the public meeting to hear about all the sewer articles on the town meeting agenda. There are five in all. The sewer commission is sponsoring three. The selectmen are sponsoring two.

The first question will ask the voters to OK the taking of easements to lay sewer mains for the Central project. (The selectmen favor it provided it wonít cost any money.)

Next the voters will see two separate and contradictory articles to solve the Newtonville financing dilemma on the town meeting agenda. The sewer commissionís article asks the voters to OK borrowing money from the state revolving fund. The loan would be repaid entirely by the homeowners.

On the other side, the selectmen and Town Manager Mark Haddad objected Feb. 25 to the sewer boardís way of handling the Newtonville connection. They argued it was only fair to deal with the extra five properties the same as the rest of the Central section. Only Selectman Diane Sullivan said it seemed unfair to put Newtonville in automatically with the rest of the Central project. But the rest of the board went against her views.

The selectmen inserted their article before the sewer commissionís question on the agenda. If the selectmenís article wins, the sewer commissionís article will be dead, Guild acknowledged.

But he vowed the commissioners will put up a battle.

ìWe will urge the defeat of their article and offer our article as the alternative,î he said Wednesday in a telephone interview.

Guild said the selectmenís article muddies the waters over Newtonville. Their question asks the voters simply to amend an article passed at the March 1997 special town meeting. He said the wording does not make it clear the taxpayers will be paying half the costs for the hook up. Yet, a favorable vote would split on the costs 50-50 between the taxpayers and the homeowners. He said the Newtonville homeowners should pay the entire costs themselves. They were never part of the Central sewer project, even though their homes are in the same area.

The sewer commissioners believe the taxpayers should pay for a sewer project 50-50 sometimes, however. For example, the whole town should chip in if the hook up helps people who were subject to a court order or an agreement for judgment to correct the townís wastewater problems. That was the reason the earlier town meeting approved a Proposition 2 1/2 override to help finance the Central project. But the Newtonville houses were not impacted by the court order or the agreement. Therefore, it would not fair to bill all the taxpayers for people who wanted to have sewers, Guild said.

Guild said he was fearful the town might set a precedent that would have to be followed when other residents wanted sewers. He also said the Newtonville people originally agreed to pay the bill themselves but then went back on the initial deal.

ìIt doesnít seem fair,î he said.

Finally, all the town officials back the 50-50 split to finance the $2.7 million for North Cohasset. After the project to build sewers there went out to bid the first time, town officials and taxpayers came out of the experience with sticker shock. The lowest price proposal came in almost $4 million over budget, according to Guild. The project was put out to bid a second time, and the town managed to shave a mil-

The check's in the mail, weekly

Town government workers scored a victory Monday when the selectmen voted to pay them once a week instead of every two weeks.

The change is effective July 1, according to Town Manager Mark Haddad. He estimated the cost of cutting weekly checks would total about $4,000. Selectman Diane Sullivan cast the only vote against the weekly pay arrangement. Sullivan cited budget constraints. She also urged the board to table the idea for another year.

Retirees driving force behind volunteer programs

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Each day a handicapped transportation van leaves the senior citizen's center with a retired volunteer behind the wheel. The driver, usually a retired man, is part of a force of volunteers that provide transportation for elderly residents too frail to get around on their own.

The transportation service is one of the many services offered by the senior center, but the unique thing about it is the large number of retired male volunteers who make it work at no cost to the town.

Cohasset has a large percentage of retired residents, making up 22 percent, 1596 people, of the general population of about 7,200. Men make up around one-third of the town's retired population.

Since last July, 567 seniors have used the center, of which 189 were men. While more women still use the center than men, the proportion of men and women who do use the center matches the proportion of male and female retirees in town.

Five years ago, senior center officials noticed that few men used the facility. In an effort to reach out to male retirees, the center sent out a survey to find out what kind of services they wanted. Some of the responses were surprising: gardening, writing classes and travel classes topped the list.

"Five years ago it was primarily women who used the center and we didn't know why," said Kathy Bryant, director of the council on aging and the Cohasset Senior Center.

The survey also highlighted something senior center officials were already aware of: that the current generation of retired men have had some difficulty making the transition from work to retirement.

Retirement is a mixed blessing for the current generation of retired men. They're entitled to enjoy the benefits of senior citizen status after working for 20, 30 even 40 years or more. Now is supposed to be a time for relaxation and enjoyment.

But retirement can also be a difficult time for their generation. Many of them formed social networks and friendships at work. Retirement severed some of those social networks, while also leaving these former working men with a lot of free time that was previously devoted to long work days.

"If you retired today, where would your social network be?" Bryant asked. "In Cohasset, we have a highly educated population. Many of our retired men worked as engineers, doctors, writers and other skilled professions, which is where they formed their social networks."

Volunteer Al Buckley helps Jacqueline Moores with her groceries after bringing her to the store in the council on aging van.

In contrast to their husbands, many of the current generation of retired women stayed home as housewives and formed social networks in the neighborhood which they have maintained into retirement. Those same social networks stayed intact through shared activities at the senior center.

The survey helped the senior center tailor some of its services for men while developing a network of male volunteers that benefit the entire town.

"The men want to be active and they volunteer for a lot of activities that benefit the town," Bryant said. "They drive the vans, stuff tax envelopes, help out in town hall, staff the food pantry and do many other things."

Bryant points out that many retired women also volunteer and provide the town with the same services at no charge. But the men prefer to stay in the background.

"The men tend to be quiet about their volunteerism and they want it that way," Bryant said. "But they come when they are called. When we put out the word for volunteer special needs drivers, 10 retired men showed up. They went on to become certified drivers who volunteer their services at no cost to the town."

The bus transports senior citizens all day long. A typical bus driver earns a starting pay of $10-$11 per hour.

Peter Tolman, 73, is a retired electrician and one of the van drivers. Tolman also works part-time for the South Shore Community Center which shares space with the senior center. Tolman volunteers for a number of activities at the senior center, from driving the van to performing electrical maintenance work for the center. He also maintains the four bowling alleys at the community center, and does other general maintenance work.

"I just like to keep busy," Tolman said.

Yet Bryant said Cohasset is fortunate that so many retired men volunteer and are willing to contribute a lot of their time for the benefit of the community.

One of Tolman's favorite activities is the Wednesday morning breakfast club. Each Wednesday, a small convoy of five or six cars transports 25-30 men to a restaurant for a group breakfast.

The shared meal is a chance for the men to socialize, trade stories and spend some time in a setting similar to their old social networks.

Retired doctor Alwin Merrill started the breakfast club 10 years ago to help house-bound senior citizens get out for a little while. The first members of the club were an 83-year-old gentle-

Cohasset teen to share screen with Robert Redford

Horseback riding skills helped her land role

By Jennifer R. Horan
STAFF WRITER

Fifteen-year-old Kate Bosworth will never forget the thrill she experienced while hanging on to Black Beauty's reigns as the horse — on cue — flung its front legs high into the air.

That never would have happened if Kate, a Cohasset High School freshman, had not harnessed a role in the upcoming Robert Redford film "The Horse Whisperer," scheduled to open May 15.

"I was scared, excited, glad — so many things. It's hard to describe," Kate said of her experiences on the Saratoga, N. Y., set last April.

The then-14-year-old Kate spent five weeks filming scenes with actress Scarlett Johanneson — who starred in Home Alone 3 — and taking direction from the legendary Redford.

"It was amazing. It was something you've never experienced before," she said. "You go from normal high school life to 'Hi, I'm in a movie!' You never stop having fun."

Kate's mother, Patti, received word from some of her friends in the California movie industry that Redford might be looking for some extras for the movie. Kate taped some lines from the script in New York, delighted with the opportunity to audition for a movie — never expecting to be offered a role several weeks later.

"It was fun and I went home," she recalled of the experience.

Redford saw the tapes and requested that Kate fly out to Los Angeles for another audition with him.

"I guess he thought I had the look for the part. I fit the character description. And I think it was a plus that I could horseback ride," she said.

At the time, Kate had been reading for the lead role, which the more experienced Johanneson captured. Two weeks later, Redford offered Kate a supporting role that more than 200 actresses had auditioned for.

"I think part of it was her passion for horses. She didn't have to act that out," said her mother. "The riding factored in but I think when (Redford) saw the tape she had a quality that appealed to him."

Working with Redford made Kate's first acting experience particularly special — and more comfortable, she said.

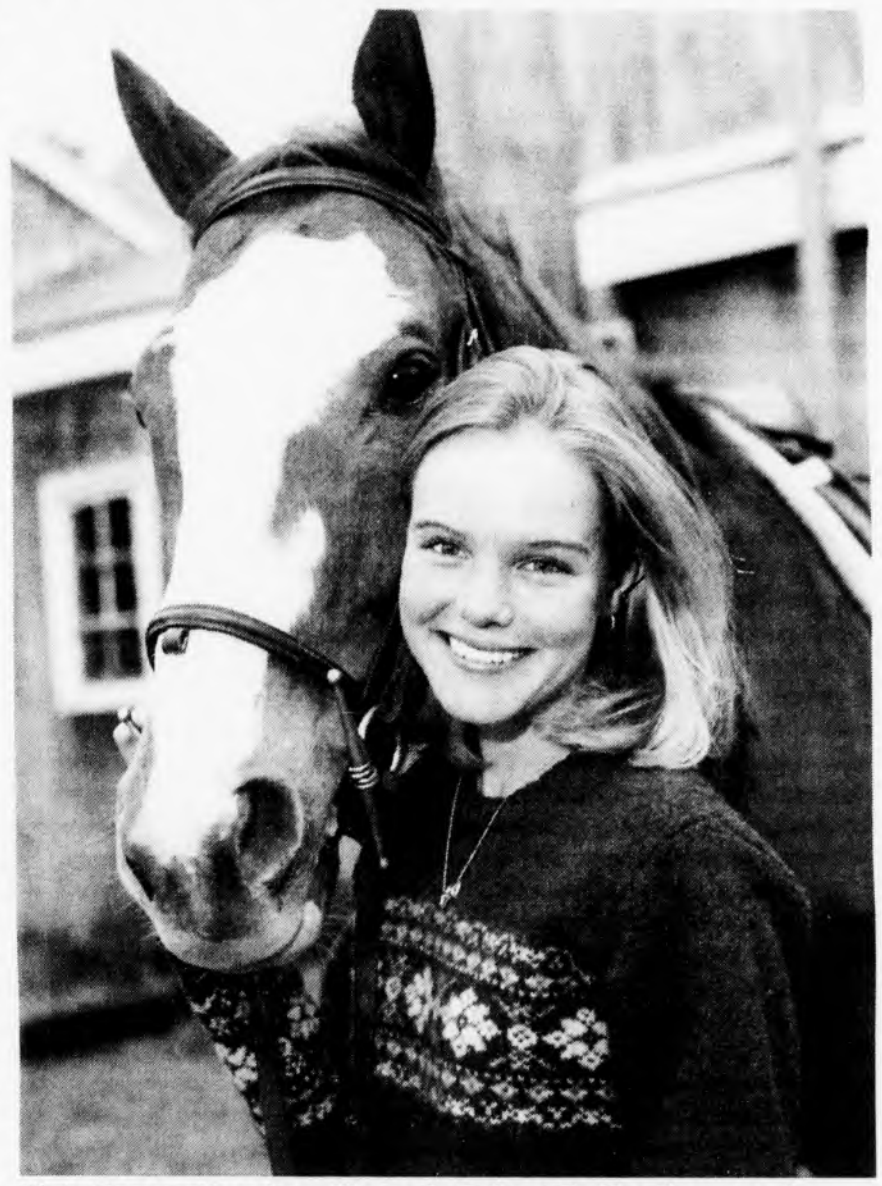
"I got to meet Robert Redford," she said. "He is the most patient person ever. He is so nice. He makes you feel so comfortable, especially for me since it was my first time acting." Kate has never done any serious acting, she said.

In her movie debut, Kate plays the part of Judith, a young girl who dies tragically in a horseback riding accident. Her best friend Grace, played by Johanneson, survives the incident but loses her leg. In addition to physical injuries, Grace's horse suffers a "mental breakdown" which can only be treated by a horse whisperer — played by Redford. Kate also appears in flashback scenes throughout the movie.

Kate describes "The Horse Whisperer" as a love story and a tragedy.

"It's full of joy and full of sadness. It's a movie for everyone," she said.

Five years of English-style horseback riding and show jumping helped Kate land the role and enhanced her performance on the big screen as well, she said. Since she moved to Cohasset from Connecticut six months ago, Kate has been training under Carl Catani at River Wind Farm in Pembroke.



"It really helped in the movie. I could concentrate so much more on acting," she said.

In the movie, Kate rides and performs all her own stunts, with the exception of the accident scene, for which she had a stunt double.

"I don't know how to make a horse fall over," she explained. In that scene, Kate's character and Black Beauty slide down a snowy hill and collide with an oncoming truck that loses control on an icy road.

While "looping" dialogue — dubbing lines that don't come out clearly during the initial taping — for the film in New York City a few weeks ago, Kate caught a glimpse of some of her own scenes for the first time. During the shoot, Redford did not play

ATLANTIC BAGEL & DELI
COHASSET, MA

What makes our bagels the best?

We make all of our dough and use only natural ingredients. There are no artificial flavorings or preservatives. It is used fresh, it is never frozen. We boil, then bake our dough daily. We never serve "day old" bagels. That is the only way to ensure the fresh and chewy taste of a really fresh bagel. Many bagel shops use dough that contains preservatives or artificial flavorings. Few shops bother to boil dough before baking it. Many bagel shops will bake dough that comes frozen, others use bagels that are partially cooked at the factory and "finished" on site. Finishing partially cooked bagels gives them a "day old" taste. It is no wonder that the large chains that offer bagels are facing difficult times. Analysts are wondering why the stock price of publicly traded bagel chains has dropped by as much as 50% in the last years. We feel that this drop is because the shareholders have now tasted their own bagels. Stop by and taste a real bagel.

In the mood for something different?* Try one of these:

• Roast beef and bacon with red onion and thousand island dressing on an onion bagel
• Turkey club on a toasted "triple decker" bagel • A crock of chili or onion soup with melted cheeses on top (for in-store eating only) • Homemade beef stew with a bagel for dipping
• Hot pastrami and swiss cheese on a plain bagel • Pepperoni bagel pizza
• Turkey, stuffing and cranberry sauce on a plain roll-up
• Grilled chicken breast with cheddar cheese, grilled peppers and onions on an herb and garlic roll-up

Or mix and match

Over 14 types of bagel, 15 types of cream cheese, 15 meat and sandwich toppings, 5 types of roll-up bread, 10 vegetable toppings, 3 mustards, and more.

"MASS OF CELEBRATION"

Last Monday a "Mass of Celebration" was held for Rosemary Doyle Murphy, who passed away Feb. 16. Many of you will remember her as a former teacher in Cohasset for many years; others will remember her as a gracious, kind, loving lady. Her family and friends adored her, many were saddened when she moved to New Hampshire to live with her daughter, Kathleen. All who attended her service knew that she lived on through her adoring family — the love, the graciousness, the flowers, the hymns ... all were reminders of Mrs. Murphy. It was the perfect goodbye for the perfect lady! We will all miss her!

"ELLEN'S OCEAN PLACE RESTAURANT" OPENS

Lots of friends of Cohasset's Ellen Cogill who were graciously served by her at the old Log and Line and other area restaurants are making their way these days to Hull where she has just opened her own shop "Ellen's Ocean Place Restaurant." The tidy, attractive new establishment is tucked into the first big brick apartment house complex at the beginning of Nantasket Beach, and is open daily from 7 a.m. to 3 p.m., for breakfast and lunch, with generous, mouth-watering specials on both menus. You'll want to check it out, enjoy it, and wish her every success. Just look to the left across from the first beach parking lot.

NORWICH HOCKEY HALL OF FAME INDUCTEE

You have seen Rick McCarthy's truck all around town, he is one of the South Shore's finest masons. Well, now Rick has another claim to fame! He's received word from Norwich last week that he has been nominated to their hockey Hall of Fame! He was their second leading all-time scorer! If any of you remember high school hockey in the '80s, you will remember him! He was a key player on the Scituate High hockey team, and his shot beat CHS in a key game en route to the States'. Rick was voted the Most Valuable Player in 1987 and 1988 at Norwich; we are confident that he will have his name in the Hall of Fame when decisions are reached next month. We will be sure to let you know; in any case, he is a star in our eyes!

MAY I PRESENT

Sallyann Chatterton

When I was growing up, Ash Wednesday meant that my grandmother would spend a lot of time preparing fish for what seemed to be weeks on end! Fortunately for us, she did an excellent job presenting yummy varieties (I can remember many friends bemoaning Fridays and Lent as "fish days," and their not liking it one bit!). Two of our favorites were fish cakes and a casserole that tastes so much like lobster you can fool almost anyone! Here they are:

CODFISH CAKES

1 cup codfish (you may use a milder fish if you wish)
1/2 tablespoon butter
2 cups diced potatoes
1/2 teaspoon pepper, or to taste
1 egg

Wash the codfish in cold water and tear into shreds. Cover potatoes and fish with boiling water and cook until the potatoes are soft. Drain. Mash thoroughly in the dish in which they were cooked, adding butter, pepper, and well-beaten egg. Form into cakes and roll in flour. Fry in deep fat (or sauté) until brown.

HADDOCK CASSEROLE

2 lbs. haddock fillets
salt
1 cup canned (or frozen and thawed) cream of shrimp soup
1 Tablespoon lemon juice or sherry
1/2 teaspoon minced onion
1/2 teaspoon garlic powder
1/4 cup melted butter
1/2 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
3/4 cup bread crumbs or crushed Ritz crackers

Place fish in greased 2-qt. casserole. Sprinkle with salt. Mix soup with sherry or lemon juice. Pour over fish. Bake uncovered for 20 minutes at 375 degrees. While baking, sauté onion and garlic in butter. Remove from heat and add Worcestershire sauce. Then blend with crumbs. Sprinkle crumb mixture over fish and bake 10 minutes more. Serves 6.

The meeting is open to all members and non-members. Come and learn how we can protect and improve the quality of the Gulf River. Refreshments will be served.

Students put to the test in May

Like other communities across the state, all of Cohasset's efforts in education reform will come sharply into focus this spring when MCAS (Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System), a new testing program, is administered.

Simply put, all students in grades 4, 8, and 10 will be tested in English language arts, mathematics, and science and technology. History and social science will be added to the annual testing in May, 1999.

According to the state Department of Education (DOE), this marks an historic moment for Massachusetts.

In the past, state tests weren't based on rigorous statewide academic standards, and only schools and districts received scores on statewide tests.

For the first time, statewide tests will now be administered based on common standards contained within the Massachusetts Curriculum Frameworks.

This May, Cohasset will be participating in the first state assessment program since the Education Reform Act of 1993.

This program is based on the Curriculum Frameworks prepared by the DOE, which are designed to indicate what students should be able to do.

Although there will be opportunities for accommodation for students with special needs, according to education officials, all students in the relevant grades will have to take the tests.

There will be three types of questions: multiple choice, short answer, and open-ended, with the latter questions counting toward 50 percent of the score.

While tests will be untimed, the state is estimating that it should take about 45 minutes per testing session.

Results are predicted to be low around the state. In fact, it's anticipated that anywhere from 30 to 80 percent of students across Massachusetts will fail the tests the first time.

School systems are planning to view the results of these first tests as baseline data for future comparisons. Because the Curriculum Frameworks are new, schools are clearly going to need more time to make adjustments.

As it stands now, however, our current seventh graders will have to pass these tests when they are 10th graders in order to be eligible for a high school diploma.

Obviously, the support of parents will be needed during the testing period set for roughly two months from now.

Therefore, parents need to keep in mind that students should come to school as well-rested as possible after having eaten a good breakfast.

Results will be reported by school, by district, and by individual student. Parents will receive their child's results in October.

The reason for the delay is simple. There are a staggering eight million open-ended questions that will need to be scored by Advanced Systems, the company with whom the state has contracted for the MCAS tests.

We're confident that Cohasset's teachers and administrators will do everything they can to create a supportive environment which will encourage our students to do their very best work on these very challenging tests.

Chairman responds to school letter

To the Editor:

As chairman of the school committee for the past year, I have been committed to helping foster the spirit of compromise both within my committee and within the working relationships we have with other town committees and boards.

During this year's budget process, I have continually reminded my members, as well as others, of what I see as our purpose as elected officials, which is to work with each other and with the town's other elected officials in the best interest of the entire town. As school committee members we must additionally keep in mind the best interests of our students and somehow advocate for their needs while keeping an eye on costs.

As recently as two weeks ago, I cautioned my fellow members to maintain that spirit of compromise as we went through the last few weeks of the budget process. However, frustration over the budget process has spilled over in recent weeks at both school committee meetings and in your editorial pages. I feel I must respond to a recent letter by fellow school committee member Joe McElroy.

Mr. McElroy has correctly enumerated and praised the many positive things that are happening throughout the Cohasset school system. Unfortunately, that praise rings hollow in the face of his subsequent comments, which I feel are designed to inflame certain readers and disparage the very people who have so efficiently managed these changes over the past few years.

Mr. McElroy has applauded the increase in student-teacher contact hours, the reorganization of the Jr.-Sr. High School in to Middle-High School, and the implementation of block scheduling, all of which have taken place in the last two to three years. He notes that these changes have taken place while, amazingly, we still maintain our per pupil costs at the state average. I'm not sure how we've done this wile being so poorly mismanaged.

Mr. McElroy also takes issue with the current teacher's contract, noting "large salary increases" and what he deems a costly "perk," the early retirement incentive. I can assure you that the early retirement incentive is functioning as envisioned, is saving us money over the long term and is responsible for a healthy turnover in staffing. As for "large increases," I would only say that when salaries are allowed to slip over several years to a point where we are no longer comparable to surrounding towns, there will be a cost associated with playing catch-up, a cost that we were fully aware of at the time the contract was negotiated. However, I would also note that the changes that Mr. McElroy has spoken of so positively would not have been possible without a negotiated change in that same contract which frees us from the confines of the traditional teaching work week, allowing more flexibility in implementing the block schedule.

In regards to the school audit, Mr. McElroy charges that the recent audit "indicates that a lot of work needs to be done to improve management of school resources" and that the audit "confirms our need" for a business manager position. Mr. McElroy wishes that were so, as he is a strong proponent of this position. In truth, relative to deficiencies found, the audit says that the "majority of deficiencies are standard, with no evidence of material weaknesses," and recommends that we update our policy and procedures manual, emphasize enforcement of those policies and procedures and then "evaluate the need to hire a full-time business manager" as this, of course, has a cost attached.

Interestingly, Mr. McElroy brings up the almost two-year-old issue of the new elementary school, and the sometimes acrimonious debate that took place during the course of that discussion. While he says "we must put that epic dispute behind us" it is

Selectman:
If elected, how would you improve communication between the school committee and selectmen?

SELECTAN/Tom Callahan

I would advocate regular, institutionalized interaction between the boards. Each respective five-member board should have at least two liaisons to the other, and every effort should be made for at least one liaison's presence at the other board's meetings. While it would likely not be necessary for a liaison to be present at every meeting of the other board, it certainly would be so during any work on budgets or budget-impacting policies. Either as an alternative or in addition to formal liaisons, there could be set up a working group of two members of each board plus the town manager and school superintendent that would meet from time to time simply to discuss issues of mutual concern, again particularly during budget time.

Having a selectmen's representative present during the school committee's upcoming formulation of its strategic plan will also likely improve understanding and town-wide acceptance of that plan later.

By my observation, the simple act of regular interaction would be a great improvement over the current situation. However, beyond setting up new institutions for interaction, there also has to be an attitude and a willingness for that interaction to bear fruit. My goal would be that each board gain a new appreciation for the problems and needs of the other, and from there work to a more harmonious formulation of the town's overall budget within the means of the town.

SELECTMAN/ Merle S. Brown

During my first year as chairman of the board of selectmen, a meeting was set up between the chairman of the school committee and the chairman of the advisory board. That meeting emphasized the importance of maintaining open and continuous communication between these three boards.

To increase communication with all the boards in town, regularly scheduled roundtable discussion should be held so everyone is aware of the issues that concern each other. Whether it is budgets or capital items, the entire group would have a better feel for what is going on throughout the town.

This year the budget has been a very big issue. Under the new town manager by-law, the town manager has full responsibility for the town's entire budget. It is the town manger's job to bring a balanced budget to the annual town meeting. In the past, all the departments, boards and committees individually went to the advisory board with their budget. Now, the town manager works with everyone to develop the budget and then present it to both the boards of selectmen and advisory. We, as selectmen, are now involved with more of the budget process than in the past.

Due to this new procedure, we need to work with the school committee to see if we can simplify their budget process and understand their needs as well as well as the town needs. It is very important to work together for the whole town.

Sewer commission:
Do you think a case can be made for sewering the entire town?

SEWER COMMISSION/ Patrick A. Plante

Sewering the entire town of Cohasset is not a new concept. Those of us who have lived in Cohasset during the past 25 years remember the engineering studies of Metcalf & Eddy that addressed this issue before town meetings when 94 percent federal funding was available to us.

It is easy for me to say that Cohasset missed that great opportunity, but I feel that avenue could still be viable today.

The direction that the sewer commission is taking us now is fragmenting the town and placing a heavy burden on a few to satisfy the mandate of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and still not sewering the most critical areas.

In my opinion, sewering a town should be undertaken as a municipal project! The town should install the main sewer lines, with each homeowner responsible for their own hook-up. Rate settings through betterments and regulations would then be adopted uniformly so we would conform to every other sewered community statewide.

On Saturday, Feb. 28, on page 3, the Boston Herald printed an article referring to a $5 billion to $10 billion surplus in the federal budget this year and surpluses for the next few years. The Commonwealth of Massachusetts is announcing a surplus in our state budget of almost $500 million. We should be asking our town officials to look into this surplus money and seek long-term bonding (up to 80 years) so the debt can be passed along to future generations.

For the past several years, Cohasset has realized a surplus of revenue in its own town budget, and perhaps a certain percent of our surplus can be designated each year to help repay the bond.

I agree with the statement made by our congressman when he addressed a recent Chamber of Commerce meeting in Cohasset in response to our sewer issue:

"Get the job done. Do it now. Do it right."

Board of health:
Do you support a total smoking ban in Cohasset restaurants?

HEALTH BOARD/Steve Bobo

In answer to the question about a smoking ban in Cohasset restaurants, an increasingly complex society requires more complicated laws.

But, there's a difference between laws that infringe on personal freedom and those intended to help people. Prohibiting smoking is an example. It wasn't too long ago that restaurants were banned from serving liquor. That law was repealed. On the other hand, laws banning drunken behavior are appropriate. And a law protecting the people working in smoke-filled rooms would also seem to make sense.

There's no reason bartenders and waiters must sacrifice their health in order to retain their jobs. Restaurant operators should be allowed to do what their clients want, but there should also be a way to protect smokers and non-smokers without infringing on the rights of others.

School committee:
The new superintendent will be paid $40,000 more a year than the town manager and as much as the current superintendent. Why so much?

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Mark DeGiacomo

The new school superintendent will be paid $40,000 more a year than the town manager and as much as the current superintendent. Why so much?

The school committee is advertising an annual salary range for the new superintendent of between $90,000 and $105,000. I believe this decision is correct.

It is important that we attract top level candidates for this very important position. Although the salary range may seem high, the fact is it merely reflects the salary range of superintendents in our area. There are currently a significant amount of openings for superintendents in Massachusetts. We want to be able to compete for the best candidate available. While it is possible that we could "get lucky" and hire a good superintendent at a lower salary, taking such a risk would not be in the best interest of the schools or the taxpayers.

We are hoping to ultimately hire a superintendent who has significant experience in running a school system including dealing with budgetary constraints. With Cohasset's already high tax rate, there will be limited funds available for the schools. Our new superintendent must understand this and be able to utilize every dollar available to the schools so that the children receive the absolute maximum benefit.

It will, however, be important to explain to our new superintendent that give this salary level, we expect the highest standards of performance. We must be prepared to move decisively if we feel that those levels are not being met.

If we pay for a highly qualified, experienced superintendent, the benefits the schools will ultimately receive should significantly exceed any perceived "excess" in salary.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Pat Martin

In all my experience, I can't say I have ever seen a town compare the job of superintendent of schools with that of town administrator. What I have commonly seen is towns compare their school districts with others to determine equitable demands and comparable salary values. Rather than try to compare two jobs that I believe are totally different, we should compare our requirements for superintendent with towns similar to Cohasset to determine a fair and current salary range.

If, by comparing the positions of town manage and superintendent of schools we are looking for a way to justify paying our new superintendent $40,000 less than its present salary level or the going rate, we should reconsider. Although cost savings should be considered in all municipal budgets on all levels, offering less for the person who will determine the future of our schools may be penny wise and pound foolish.

Offering less than the current market value may attract lesser candidates. It may also send a message that we don't value this position as a town. And if cost is the sole issue, we should consider that it may cost us a lot more later in terms of both money and energy if we discover we made the wrong choice and need to make a change.

I believe we should choose our new superintendent based solely on the skills, expertise and talents they can offer Cohasset and not on how little they are willing to work for.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Hugh Morgan

Compensation for a superintendent's position is market driven and all indications are that the targeted salary range of $90,000 to $105,000 is at or below competitive rates. The new superintendent will assume responsibility for approximately 200 people, many of them with advanced degrees. He will oversee an $8,000,000 budget without the benefit of a business manager. He will have to have 10-plus years of teaching and administrative experience as well as at least a master's degree.

Further, the premise of the question is incorrect. Town manager Mark Haddad is going form compensation of $60,000 to $68,000, or, 13-plus percent. I believe there is a strong sentiment that even at $68,000 he is underpaid. At any rate, the difference between $68,000 and $90-$105,000 is a range of $22-$37,000; a big difference form a flat $40,000.

The school committee established a range of $90,000 to $105,000 in order to give itself needed flexibility. They may choose to hire a candidate with outstanding potential at a lower starting salary or an experienced superintendent at a great cost. Also, the school committee must consider its existing salary scales. Clearly, there should be at least a $10,000 differential between what it pays its superintendent in comparison to the well qualified and excellent principals that oversee the Osgood, Deer Hill and Middle-High schools. Bottom line, the recommended salary range is necessary to attract a first quality superintendent and that is what we should have—nothing less.

Next week's questions:

For selectman candidates:
Call firefighters. Are they archaic or worth preserving?

For the board of health & sewer commission:
The Newtonville nightmare is just one example of a breakdown in communication between the board of health and sewer commission. How can this type of thing be avoided?

For the school committee:
Teachers salaries are a cost driver in the school budget. Is the teachers' contract too generous?

Sewer commission, selectmen offer conflicting articles

lion dollars off the construction cost. But the final number was still $2.7 million above initial estimates. Originally, the town passed a Proposition Override for $6 million. It was supposed to finance the entire project.

Guild said the high price of sewering North Cohasset was due to the unusual circumstances. Much of the construction has to be done on private property, and the contractors fear a spate of potential lawsuits mounted by individual homeowners.

"The contractors have to go on private property and blast,î Guild said. "It makes them vulnerable to lawsuits. As one put it, everybody in that part of town either is a lawyer or has a lawyer."Despite the financial hurdle, town officials want to go ahead with the project. To come up with the shortfall, the town meeting will be asked to authorize borrowing the extra $2.7 million, Guild said.

Presenting differing views

Guild said both the selectmen and the sewer commission will ultimately present different versions of the same question to town meeting. In the selectmenís article, the taxpayers will be asked to finance 50 percent of the price tag over 20 years through a Proposition 2 & 1/2 debt override. The people who get the sewers have to pay the other half. If the override should fail, the users must come up with the whole cost.

In the question from the sewer commissioners, the users will foot the entire bill themselves. Guild said it seemed less misleading to put the question so even though the town would help the homeowners with loans. The town will borrow money from the state Water Pollution Abatement Trust for the residents, Guild said. The savings through the low interest rates could amount to 40 percent or even 50 percent. But he was uneasy raising the subject since the state fund would benefit the taxpayers as well as the homeowners equally, he said if the voters went for the 50-50 split as the selectmen advised.

Guild said the sewer commission supports the selectmenís article on North Cohasset and the 50-50 split. Nonetheless, there was a point in having two different articles to decide basically the same issue.

"The real purpose of the sewer commissionerís article is to insure the project will be done," he said because people might vote against the selectmenís article out of fear their taxes will go up. In contrast, the sewer commissionerís article has no impact on the tax rate. The people who get the sewers have to pay for them, but not the rest of the town.

"Sewers always are very bitter,"he said.

As if to confirm Guildís prediction, Monday selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan criticized the sewer board for holding 6 p.m. meetings. Sullivan agreed with resident Lisa Bumstead who complained the meeting time was inconvenient for people who work.

"It is inappropriate for the sewer commissioners to have meetings at six p.m.,î he said. He also said the selectmen should take the matter up.

Guild said the sewer board held most meetings of public importance at 7:30 p.m. but kept the 6 p.m. time slot for their regular sessions. He said the time of the meetings has been an issue. Nonetheless, the commissioners are a volunteer board and prefer the early meeting to have time to spend with their families.

Selectmen ante up for school budget

Selectman Nan Roth, who voted previously to cut down the money for the schools, set the tone for the session when she made a statement before the discussions began. Roth said the selectmen had established a record of giving support to the schools and believed in a "strong school system." But she then said a lack of money was not the only cause of weaknesses that currently existed in the Cohasset schools.

Roth alluded to the recent operational audit of the schools. The accounting firm of Tucci and Roselli conducted the audit and the report found the school's budgetary process was "adequate." But the audit raised numerous questions about checks and balances. Specifically, it faulted the school department for the practice of "deficit spending" or spending money when there is no money left. It also questioned the school committee's decision to allow the superintendent sole authority to move money into different budget line items when money runs out. The school committee should authorize the administrator's decisions, the audit reported.

"I don't see the school budget as a sacred cow,"
SELECTMAN DIANE SULLIVAN

The school department also opted to begin with a prepared statement. But selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan cut off a teacher's prepared speech which chronicled the virtues of a school librarian at length. He said the topic had little to do with the budget issue. Overall, the selectmen controlled the discussion. But there were some testy moments, such as one exchange between Roth and school board Chairman Maureen Jerz.

"I am only mildly insulted you suggested we were dishonest," Jerz told Roth.

"I did not suggest that," Roth countered.

Selectman Merle Brown said he wanted to see the school board commit to making some new policies about money matters. He said he would vote for the extra funding if he got a promise from the school board members who are staying in office after the town-wide elections April 4. Brown did later change his vote. But he told the school board the "communication has not been good." He also said the school committee should broadcast its meetings on cable TV.

Selectman Diane Sullivan was the only board member who ultimately did not change her vote. Like Roth, Sullivan also complained about irregularities in the budget.

"I don't see the school budget as a sacred cow," she said. "The public has a right to be able to look at comparisons."

Hart said the extra money would go for technology and to pay elementary school librarians.

The school committee will be back before the selectmen Monday to discuss questions raised by the school audit.

Retirees driving force behind volunteer programs man and a 92-year-old fellow.

"Kathy (Bryant) said to me, 'you know Winn, we just can't get the men involved,' " Merrill said.

Over the years the club has gained in popularity and grown to its current membership of 46. The club has become so popular that it has outgrown its current configuration. The men are finding it difficult to locate restaurants that can accommodate such a large group. Merrill, who is still involved in the program, is working with other members to change the configuration of the club, perhaps into separate chapters, so they can accept more people while keeping the size of the group manageable.

Merrill is pleased with the popularity of the breakfast club. He said it is one of many activities the center offers that are popular with men, including a supper club, a sailing club, a cards club and a boating club. Each club has a core nucleus of members that keeps it running.

All of these activities are extremely important for the elderly community, especially as the Baby Boomer generation approaches retirement, Merrill said.

But their time has not yet come. And Bryant wants to acknowledge the accomplishments of the town's retired men.

"When I attend statewide director's meetings, people are amazed at the number of retired men who have stepped forward to volunteer," Bryant said. "Our volunteers take people to the doctor, volunteer on town boards, help the town with mailings, volunteer in the food pantry and at the end of the day, they ask if there is something else they can do."

Chart House sale still on the table

By Margo Sullivan and Mary Ford
STAFF WRITERS

The Chart House restaurant on the harbor is still looking for a new owner. Two weeks ago an executive at the restaurant chain's corporate headquarters in California said the company had accepted an offer. Now the story has changed.

Lewis Jackson, vice-president of development, said the broker, Atlantic Retail Properties of Waltham, was "still actively marketing" the property.

Jackson said the company was now reviewing a "couple of offers" while it continued talks with one bidder. But nothing is final yet. He also said he hoped to find a new buyer as quickly as possible and was encouraged by the amount of "interest" from prospective buyers.

Jackson did not confirm the company was holding out for an offer over $2 million. The Border Street property is currently assessed for $2.08 million. According to town records, the Chart House corporation bought the restaurant for $2.75 million in March 1990. The business was then known as Hugo's.

Kristie Henrikson, owner of Siro's on Marina Bay in Quincy, said she previously offered $1.85 million for the Chart House. But Henrikson stopped bidding when she was asked to raise her offer by another $400,000. She also was discouraged when she learned Peter Roy of Margin Street was interested in buying the restaurant. Henrikson said she did not have the money to get into a bidding war with Roy. By Feb. 17, she was told the corporation had accepted Roy's offer.

This Tuesday Henrikson was surprised the final deal had not yet been struck and said she might change her mind about making another offer.

Roy was going out of town and could not be reached for comment. His family owns Kimball's by the Sea motel and restaurant adjacent to the Chart House. No one at his home was able to say if he had dropped out of the bidding.

Jackson did not say if Roy's offer was the one the Chart House accepted previously.

When the Chart House closed in early January, it employed about 40 people. Most of the workers were part-time. The Chart House corporation owns 60 restaurants nationwide including ones in Aspen, Col., Newport, R.I. and Sausalito, Calif.

The Chart House pulled the plug on the Cohasset site because it failed to attract the numbers corporate headquarters expected.

"We had to do a heck of a lot of business to do a respectable return," said Randy McNamara, the vice-president of operations.

Candidates Night scheduled

S.A.F.E. will sponsor its annual candidates forum at 7:30 p.m. on March 19 at the lightkeeper's residence on Government Island.

Candidates for the offices of selectmen, board of health and sewer commission have been invited to discuss their qualifications and their positions on important issues facing the town of Cohasset.

All voters are welcome and encouraged to attend.

$100K sought for dredging work

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

The selectmen Monday re-opened the town meeting warrant to add one question, asking voters to set aside $100,000 to pay a contractor to pull up moorings when the harbor dredging project gets underway and put them back after the job is finished.

The vote was unanimous but reluctant. Selectwoman Diane Sullivan said she was disturbed the matter was not brought to the board's attention earlier.

The cost to remove the moorings was overlooked when the project was originally budgeted, harbor master John Winters said.

"Every mooring has to go. Someone has to physically pick up 300 moorings, throw them on the beach and put them back," he said.

Winters said the town might not have to spend the money ultimately. The state might pay the contractor or the town might assess a charge on the boat owners, he said. But until the issue is decided, the town was expected to put aside some money for the task.

"You can't leave it up to the individual boaters. It would never get done," he said.

Bilton brings home the Gold

Senior Greg Bilton has made quite a splash on the CHS swimming scene this season, including winning a pair of Divison II state swimming titles just this past weekend. He competes for the top New England spot this weekend at Brown University.

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

One's senior year in high school can be approached a couple of different ways. One student may dismiss their senior year, concentrating on having fun, relaxing, and celebrating the end of high school. Another student might put forth a half-hearted effort, just hanging on until graduation rolls around, buying time until college.

Or, senior year can be attacked with enthusiastic ferocity, swallowed whole.

Greg Bilton chose the final route and, so far, it's paid off quite well.

A nationally recognized swimmer since he was in elementary school, Bilton swam for club teams exclusively, until this year, when he appeased his classmates and decided to swim for the Cohasset High swimming team. Greg's decision proved to be a rewarding one.

Apart from his team leadership, Bilton also became the Division 2 state champion in the 100-yard backstroke and the 50-yard freestyle. And these were just checkpoints in his season.

During an interview, Bilton explained that elite swimmers focus on one meet every year and tailor their training regimen accordingly, adjusting so they reach their peak at just the right time. This year, Greg has aimed for a meet which will occur this coming week at Brown University in Providence. In other words, these state championships were won when Bilton was at less than peak condition.

His list of achievements is lengthy, far more than this space allows. However, a few highlights include the record Bilton set this past season when he broke a 17-year-old 50-yard freestyle record in the South Sectional finals, dousing the record by one quarter of a second and beating the Division 1 state champ by one full second.

Greg also shattered six Bay Colony records this year. He finished tops in the 200-yard individual medley, the 200-yard freestyle, the 100-yard freestyle, the 100-yard butterfly and the 100-yard backstroke. CHS swim coach Gary McKinnon said that Greg could have held all nine of the individual event records if McKinnon had chosen to allow Bilton to swim in all nine events throughout the year.

McKinnon was clearly impressed with not only Bilton's ability, but his overall make-up.

"You don't see a lot of people like Greg Bilton out there. He's really head and shoulders above most of his competitors. Greg is very dedicated to the sport, not burnt-out at all. I don't think that he's even hit his peak."

McKinnon boldly predicted that Bilton would be named an All-American in college and even had a shot at the Olympics.

"Whatever college is lucky enough to get him should be counting its blessings."

McKinnon also praised Bilton's modesty and sense of Women's hockey gets boost from Olympics

South Shore Hornets coach sees golden chance for game

Robin Duffy cannot wait to buy a box of Wheaties with the gold medal champion USA women's hockey team on the front.

However, the 34-year-old Brockton resident has more than a passing interest in women's hockey. Not only is she the coach of the South Shore Hornets, a regional hockey team for young women, she also has skated with several members of Team USA during her 20-plus years of playing the game.

"I stopped playing the game for real last year but I played with some of the Massachusetts Olympians over the years and I can tell you nobody deserved it more than they did," Duffy said. "Just to make an Olympic team is huge a sacrifice but to go on and win the gold medal is incredible. And as a 'so-called' hockey old-timer, I couldn't be happier for them."

Just like every other sports fan in the country, Duffy sat glued to her television set watching the USA women's hockey team win the gold against Canada in the first-ever Olympics women's ice hockey competition. Duffy praised the high level of play and said the Olympic success was a long time coming.

"It was a very skilled brand of hockey and it was more physical than I expected," she said. "And Team USA showed that women can really play the game. But we've been trying to get women's hockey into the Olympics since 1975. I'm glad we finally made it to the party."

Since the Olympics wrapped up Duffy has received ten calls from young women who are interested in playing for the South Shore Hornets.

Based in Hingham, the Hornets are comprised of 14 South Shore area young women players from ages 14 to19. The team practices every Saturday night at the Pilgrim Arena in Hingham and competes in the South Shore Women's Hockey League in Canton and Marlboro against 26 other teams.

Right now the Hornets are battling for one of the top four positions in the league standings. In April, the league holds its annual playoffs. The South Shore Women's Hockey League has been in existence for the last twenty years.

"I heard from our league president that eight out of ten young girls who begin skating want to use hockey skates these days," Duffy said. "Before it was only one in ten because everyone wanted to be a figure skater. Now, there is more demand for hockey and I think it will be great for the game. One day I hope

Pembroke resident Carlo Casarano will be one of the leaders of the U.S. sled hockey team that starts their quest for the gold this weekend in Nagano at the Paralympic Games.

Blazing a trail for the physically challenged

By David Wolcott

Carlo Casarano could have himself quite a belated birthday celebration on his hands if all goes according to plan. How about a little cake and ice cream on the gold medal stand at the Paralympic Games?

Casarano, who turned 42 on Feb. 3, is in Nagano, Japan with the rest of the members of the U.S. sled hockey squad for the Paralympic Games, which take place beginning this weekend.

Casarano has been paralyzed from the chest down for a little over 20 years, the results of a horrific ski accident he was involved in just after Christmas, 1977.

"I was going down the mountain fine (Mt. Cannon in New Hampshire), but I just lost control and ran into a group of trees coming around a corner," said Casarano, who has one of the highest levels of disability on the team, depending solely upon his well-developed upper body to motor his way down the ice.

The crash left him with no feeling in his trunk and legs as well as with a number of fractures to his skull.

After all is said and done, the Pembroke resident is extremely confident that he and his teammates will be returning from Nagano with a little bit more hardware than they started their trip with.

"I know what this team can do and I think we are in a good position for silver, maybe even a gold medal," he said. "We just need to get over there and do our job."

Casarano has always been an athlete and while growing up on the North Shore he developed an affinity for the "Big Bad Bruins" of the early-to mid-70s style of rock'em sock'em hockey.

Skating not exactly being his forte, Casarano filled his hockey need on the streets. While a teenager he was good enough to make an elite national street hockey team that participated in the CanAm Games.

"We were one of the first U.S. teams to beat the Canadian squad at their own game," he recalled with a smile.

It was only a few years ago that Casarano first learned about the sled hockey game, and when he looked further into it he really liked what he saw, eventually hooking up with the Boston Blades squad, where he was encouraged by teammates to make what turned out to be a successful run for the Paralympic team.

Casarano said the fact that he would be representing his country, as well as providing an inspiration to physically challenged people everywhere, didn't really hit him until December when he was in Japan for a tournament celebrating the opening of the Olympic hockey venue.

"When we got there and they game me the USA jacket, it hit me," said Casarano. "It's like nothing I've ever felt before. It really hit me then that this was really happening and I was going to be an Olympian."

The shock wore off quickly for Casarano and the rest of his teammates on the trip, who recovered to win the pre-Olympic tourney.

In another warm-up series, they defeated the Canadian squad at the final tryout session for both squads last September in Buffalo. The same Canadian team took home the bronze medal in the last Paralympics, lending some optimism to the American team for the games.

> "As much as we will be representing our country, we're also going to be out there for the disabled community. This sport is something new for this country. I think we are going to be the trailblazers for some great things to come."
> USA SLED HOCKEY PARALYMPIAN CARLO CASARANO

The United States is still playing catch-up with the rest of the world when it comes to sled hockey. It's only been organized here for less than a decade, but has been a competitive sport in Canada for a couple of decades and across Europe for more 40 years.

"We're doing the best that we can," said Casarano, who manages the Cedar Creek Farm on West Elm Street. "As much as we will be representing our country, we're also going to be out there for the disabled community. This is something new for this country. I think we are going to be the trailblazers for some great things to come."

The members of the team, 12 in all with two alternates named to the squad, get together about once a month for training in locations all over the country. Last month the practices were up in this area. Next month Casarano will travel to Colorado for another training camp.

"We really just take the ice time where we can get it," explained Casarano. "The MDC has been really good abut getting us some ice time all around the Boston."

"We've been all over the country, working with awareness groups while getting some training in as well."

As part of the awareness training, Casarano and his teammates travel to schools all around to talk to the kids about their sport of choice.

"The kids seem to really take to us," said Casarano. "They love the checking part of the game."

A recent exhibition the team played in-between periods of a Boston Bruins was especially exhilarating according to Casarano, saying that the crowd was "going bananas" at the quick and intense pace of the game.

For the most part, sled hockey is played the same as the game enthusiasts are used to seeing with a few distinct differences, most notably that the players are on sleds instead of skates and they are suited with one stick, usually about two feet in length, for each hand.

The aluminum sleds are generally 2 to 4 feet in length, depending upon the size of the player, and weigh about 25 lb. As with everything else, technology is moving at a rapid rate with newer sleds allowing for the players to get stronger and faster coming out every day.

Such is the case for Casarano, who got a new sled from Japan last week that he said may be a big help to him in the upcoming games.

"I usually can get up the ice in about 8.4 seconds. This new sled could take about a half-second off of that," he said. "I'm not getting any younger. I'll take all of the advantages that I can get."

A defenseman, Casarano is one of the oldest members of the team. Not particularly fast on the sled, he said he uses proper positioning and good hockey sense rather than speed to get to the puck.

"There's two or three of us old guys all about the same age," he said with a chuckle. "The younger guys look to us as a calming influence on the team. We've got some players with great ability and all we need to do is channel that and get it all going in the right direction."

As for Nagano, Casarano said he was really looking forward to the level of play that will be showcased in the tourney.

"I can't wait to get out there against the elite competition. It really will be the best of the best from all over the world," he said. "I can't wait to see what teams like Norway and Sweden have to offer."

Coaches, please call in your game results to the Mariner Sportsline at 1-800-649-6661, Ext. 4263 (GAME). Calls received by 5 p.m. on Tuesday will be printed in Thursday's edition of the newspaper.

perspective. The coach related a story of how, late in the season, he casually mentioned one of Greg's Bay Colony records to the swimmer's parents. Greg had been so unimpressed with his own achievements that he had neglected to mention them to his own parents.

It was hard to find a negative sentiment towards Bilton. His friend and summer swimming teammate Justin Golden said, simply, "My boy's wicked fast."

Bilton was typically modest when asked of his accomplishments. He said that his season had gone "really well" and did not bring up his records or titles. Bilton acknowledged his teammates and did not emphasize his role on the team at all.

From personal experience, I've found Greg to be an exceptionally well-rounded guy with a good sense of humor, completely unimpressed by his success. I saw Greg hit 15 home runs in one year of Little League and I was an untalented midfielder on a soccer team which he helped lead to the state quarterfinals.

He's also in my history class and Greg has never once mentioned his aquatic exploits or any of his other accomplishments. He will be inducted into the National Honor Society on March 15 and is senior class treasurer.

Greg is considering attending Brown University next year and mentioned studying biology in college. With one more season left in his high school sporting career, the pressure is on Bilton to pick up the bat and glove and take to the diamond.

Thus Bilton has obviously chosen to challenge himself this year, not coasting, but rather churning up the water around him. With an excellent personal, academic and athletic background behind him, Bilton appears to have a bright future ahead of him.

And, of course, he's wicked fast.

Local women's hockey gets boost from Olympics

some of the players I've coached will be skating for the Olympics."

The next winter Olympics will be held in Salt Lake City in 2002.

Hockey is also becoming more popular at the collegiate level. In the last two years, ten colleges have added women's hockey to the varsity roster. The recently passed Title IX rule, which mandates that colleges have equal numbers of varsity sports for men and women, has also helped, according to Duffy.

"Hockey is a hot sport right now," she said. "Title IX helped that and now it will be even bigger thanks to the Olympics."

However, Duffy said there are still a lot of people who don't get the idea that women want to play hockey.

"I work for an accountant and there were many time where I'd go to the rink right after work all decked out in a business suit," Duffy said. "And as I walked in with my equipment bag at my side, I would get these looks from the guys. It was pretty funny. And there are still some people who don't believe I play hockey. But I don't care. I just like to play the game."

The Hornets roster includes: Cohasset's Caitlin Donovan, Scituate's Jessica Keeley and Lindsay Pacuska, Norwell's Kelly McNamara and Duxbury's Kadi Viise. (Former Hornet Teri Perona is currently a member of the state tourney bound NHS Clippers.)

"We have a great group of young players and I think the South Shore is a great hockey area," Duffy said. "I'm hoping we can keep going this year and make the playoffs."

As it stands now, if a young girl wants to play ice hockey, she must sign on to play in the boys town youth leagues. Duffy is hoping the Olympics will push towns into offering young girls a league of their own.

"It would be great to see more programs offered for girls and young women," she said. "Even having a couple towns join together to start a program would be great. But like every hockey team in the area, there is a constant battle to get ice time. There just aren't enough rinks to go around."

However, one rink is doing something about this. Starting in September, the Pilgrim Arena will be offering a women's adult hockey league, according to rink director Hoby Taylor.

If anyone wants to become involved with the Hornets or with the Commonwealth Hockey League, the other team Duffy coaches, they should contact any area hockey rink and ask for information.

Red Lion

ments. Sturdy almost cringed when the owner rehearsed a plan to build over the existing first floor. Later, he said the historic building might cave in if Ordelheide ever proceeded on the course his architect laid out.

"He can't use it as a support," he said, without building a platform above it.

Other board members also had reservations.

"I don't want to kill it," said board member John O'Toole afterwards. But O'Toole said Ordelheide desperately needed to hire a construction manager.

During the public hearing, O'Toole put his hand on two views of the front and rear of the building. The front and the back should be the same length, he said.

They weren't.

Planning board Chairman Al Moore was firm with Ordelheide. He needed a consultation with the town's civil engineer on the plans.

"They need to chat," Moore said afterwards.

During their face to face, both sides spoke bluntly at times. But ultimately, Ordelheide said the board should understand why he has undertaken the expensive project and been stalwart in his resolve, despite some doubts from them.

"I'm building a monument for my children," he said.

Ordelheide will be back March 11 with a third set of plans. He is hopeful he will get the board's stamp of approval then and has promised to work with civil engineer meanwhile.

Ordelheide is the Red Lion Inn's second owner in as many years. The historic inn, built in 1704, was sold at auction in 1996 to a Florida businessman, Carl Akerblom. Akerblom held on to the property for 18 months, promising to renovate the inn. But the renovations never came, and Akerblom sold the inn to Ordelheide last June. Inn manager Joe Dooley said Ordelheide is going to restore the Red Lion Inn to its former status as a first-class New England inn and restaurant. He is confident Ordelheide can make it work.

"The Red Lion Inn has always been one of the most important things in Cohasset," Dooley said. "The owner wants to make it into a first-class establishment. We're going to make it go."

Many residents hope to see it open once again as a restaurant and place of lodging. Business leaders consider the Red Lion Inn to be at the center of any Cohasset Village revitalization plan.

"There's no question that the Red Lion Inn is an historic anchor to the downtown Village business area," said Dean Rizzo, chairman of the Village Revitalization Committee of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce. "We need lodging in Cohasset and if someone could restore the Red Lion Inn, it could be a gold mine."

The Red Lion Inn has a restaurant and barroom on the first floor and 15 lodging rooms on the two upper floors. All the rooms will be renovated and modernized to include standard amenities like telephones and cable television. Guests and patrons can look forward to patio dining, a pub menu, a lunch menu and a full dinner menu. Dooley invited residents to call the Inn with suggestions about how to improve the establishment.

"Gerry (Ordelheide) is coming back full-time to oversee the entire construction process and accelerate the project," Dooley said previously. "I'm gearing my energy toward opening the restaurant, and getting the menus and staff ready."

Ordelheide reportedly retired Feb. 1 as the majority shareholder in BMC Software of Frankfurt, Germany, and has plans to devote all his time to the Inn.

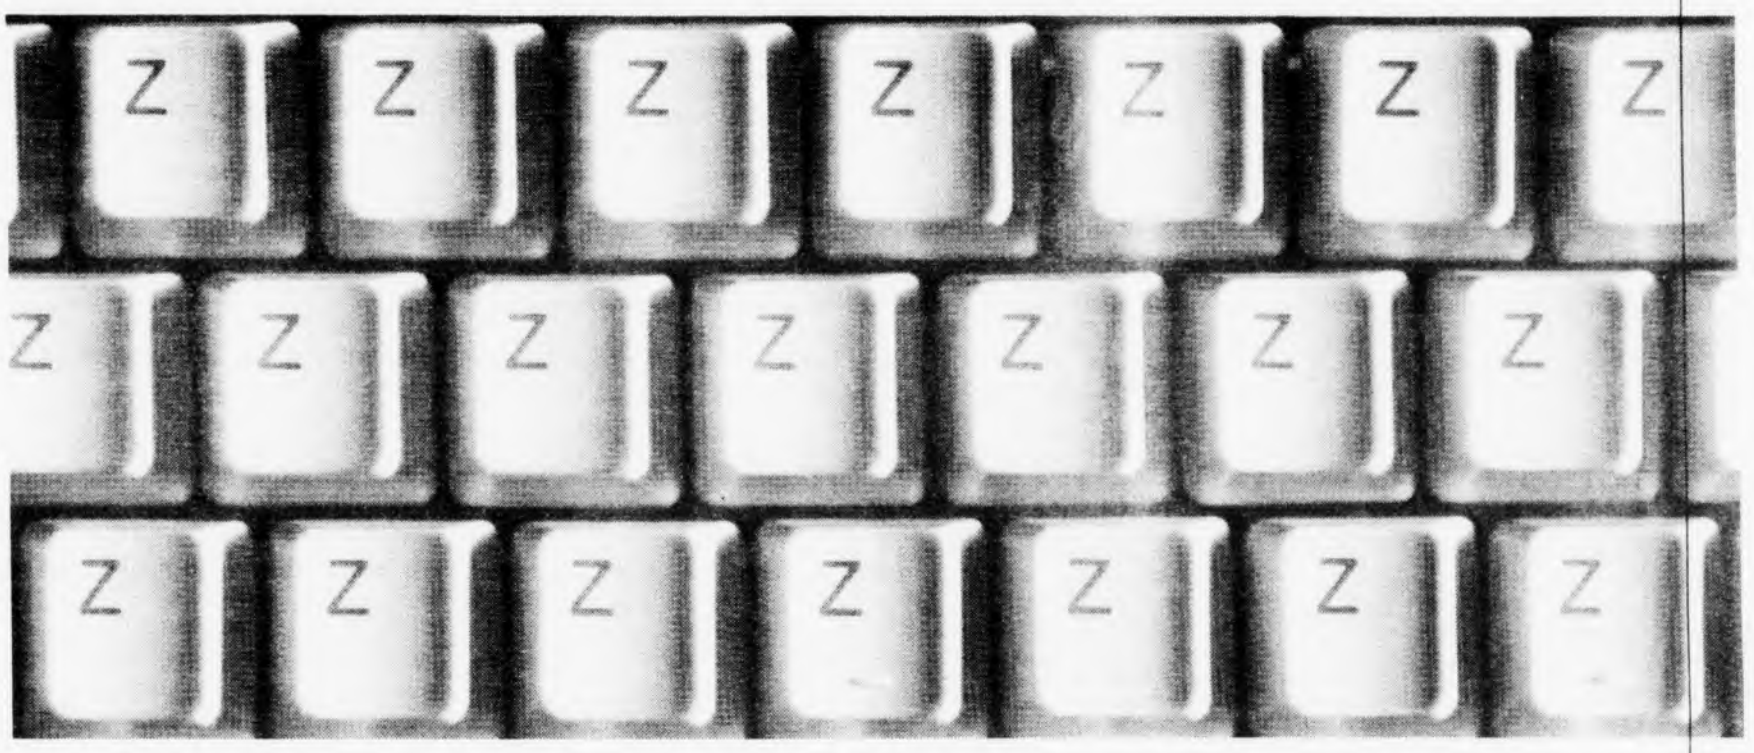
back their scenes because he did not want to ruin the actors' momentum, she said.

"The accident scene is so effective. It's amazing the way they did it," she said. "I think it's going to be really good. There are a lot of great actors in the movie."

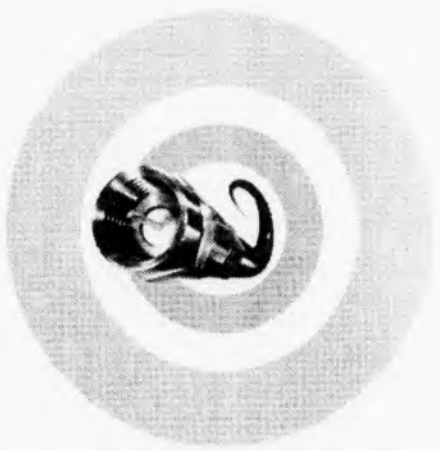
Kate had a chance to hob knob with the cast and crew of the film at the end of her 12-hour shoots.



"We'd all go out to dinner. The cast and crew were unbelievable," she said.

During the shoot, she received star treatment, having assistants to select her wardrobe, style her hair and make up her face every day.

The only drawback to the filming occurred after her five-week shoot — making up the midterm exams she missed during her absence.



Following her first taste of stardom, Kate has received a half a dozen scripts from her agent in New York but has not yet committed to another movie deal.

"I'm going to wait for the one that's right for me," she said.

Genovese is proof never say you never win

Linda Genovese enjoys an outdoor cafe across from the Louvre in Paris.

By Mary Sheppard Earon
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Linda Genovese of Howe Road says she never wins anything, not even on bingo nights in Boston with her girlfriends, which is where she was the night she and her husband won the Cohasset Education Foundation's trip to Paris raffle.

The raffle was held in conjunction with the third annual Spelling Bee last year.

"I bought the raffle ticket because it was for a good cause. Pam Speed (CEF board member and raffle coordinator) is also a friend," Linda said recently.

Linda, who waitresses at Jake's in Hull in the summer, was recess teacher and lunch monitor at Osgood School the day she bought the winning ticket.

"Ilene Colwell, the Osgood secretary, was selling the tickets and I told her before I left the school that day, I would buy one from her. I forgot and actually left school and was driving down Main Street when I realized it. I hesitated about going back for a moment and thought, 'No, no, no, it's for a good cause,' so I went back. That ticket was Ilene's last one, and she told me I didn't have to buy it if I didn't want to because she'd buy it."

But Linda did, and is a happier woman for it.

"I drove back from Boston that night, thinking once again how I never win. I walked into the house and my family said, 'You're going to Paris, Linda.' Talk about a thrill!"

Genovese and her husband, Alan, arrived in Paris on a Friday morning last May, feeling rumpled from the overnight flight.

"We were tired, grubby, and thought we should probably get some sleep."

But the streets of Paris "called" to the Cohasset couple. They dropped their bags in their hotel room, and Linda said, "OK, where's the Eiffel Tower?"

The Metro transit system provided the Genoveses with transportation to everywhere they wanted to go in the next three days. Linda said it was three days of outdoor cafes, the Louvre, Notre Dame, a boat trip down the Seine, and on their last night in Paris, the Moulin Rouge, a nightclub famous for its can-can dance.

Paris, Linda said, is big, clean, and relatively safe, even though they were cautioned against pickpockets. She found Parisians, contrary to popular opinion, friendly to them, the traveling Americans.

"There were several things that struck me about Paris that I remember," she said. "First of all, the size of it overwhelmed me. I imagined it to be smaller and more quaint. Our hotel wasn't right in the middle of everything, but more off to the side of the city. Outside our window was a narrow side street where flower boxes hung on windows. That was nice. "

Linda was also fascinated by the numbers of people from different countries.

"I thought that everyone outside of America immigrates here, but Paris is another New York City. I couldn't get over the huge population of Mid-Easterners, in particular. One day, Alan and I sat in a cafe next to a couple from Switzerland, who were in Paris for the weekend, the difference being they came to Paris frequently, much like we might go to New York City from Boston. It's that close and convenient for them."

Linda said when people opened their mouths to speak, she never knew what accent was going to come out. It intrigued her.

There was nothing about Paris that Linda didn't love. Her favorite outing was the boat trip down the Seine when she saw the different types of architecture of buildings like Notre Dame and the Louvre.

"My family and I have traveled a bit. We've "cross countried" here in the States and I've been to Italy. Now, I can say I've been to Paris, although I wish the trip had been longer. You have to stay longer in Paris, it's a great town!"

Linda has already purchased her ticket for this year's CEF Spelling Bee raffle, which will be held on Wednesday evening, March 11, at 7:30 p.m.

Language department's dream comes true

Mr. Federico's Spanish class takes advantage of the foreign language lab at the high school.

Students study their foreign language skills in the new lab.

Photos/Mary Sheppard Earon

By Mary Sheppard Earon
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Paul Narkiewicz, world language department chairman at Cohasset High School, said he pinches himself when he looks at the newly installed language lab.

"It is truly a dream come true to have this state of the art SONY equipment as a teaching tool for the kids," he said.

He is grateful to the Cohasset Education Foundation for raising the needed funds.

Narkiewicz described the language lab, installed last November, as an adjunct to the school's language program. It provides a place were students and teachers can deal with different affected cultural material, practice their foreign language listening and speaking skills, and take tests through their headphones with the least amount of distraction. It is a classic audio and video learning experience.

"Foreign language is more important to our society than ever before," Narkiewicz said. "The world economy in particular makes it so."

Although a foreign language is not required, many Cohasset High students take either French, Spanish or Latin.

"I think the kids enjoy the lab, and I think they're proud of it, too. It offers them a break from the traditional way to learn, with a teacher talking face to face with them at the front of the class," he said. "If students have questions, they sit and wait their turn. In the lab, students put on their headphones, and sit in their booths, communicating with the teacher and the other students through the phones and their computer screens. The teacher can hit a button and have the whole class listen to the question, or just have the communication between the student and teacher, depending on the situation and question."

In this way, the language lab offers teaching in a traditional and non-traditional manner. According to Narkiewicz, students pay attention better and learn with less distraction.

"Their ears are into the headphones, their eyes are on the computer screens."

A popular teaching practice in language today is called "paired practice." The teacher gives the language exercise and the class is broken up into pairs randomly. Through buttons on the teacher's monitor, students become connected with each other in the classroom, and they go through the process of identifying themselves in the room, before settling into the exercise. Narkiewicz said it provides an element of excitement for the students.

Although Cohasset High School has had a language lab since 1968, which is the year Narkiewicz arrived as department chairman, it became outdated and ineffective.

"When the CEF decided to begin looking into more effective, modern language lab equipment after I submitted a request for a permanent lab, George Fortin (CEF board member) opened up the possibilities and led the way. Eventually, Dr. Gary Garber took the project over. He did a wonderful job researching different labs and companies, and through the process of eliminating such equipment as portable labs and labs with one TV in front of the classroom, he came to the conclusion to try to install a lab with a monitor in each booth."

Recently, through the department's own budget, Narkiewicz added a computer that plays CDs.

"Language programs are coming out with programs on CDs because CDs not only offer a better sound quality, but teachers can immediately go to what they want, and not have to search through the tape, as on a cassette."

The public is invited to come and view the language lab at a reception Wednesday, March 11, from 6:30 until 7:30 p.m., prior to the CEF fourth annual Spelling Bee fund-raiser.

"Parents should definitely come in and sit down in these booths to hear what the kids listen to, and do some repeatings of themselves to hear what they sound like. We're very proud of our lab and I think those who helped pay for it and those curious about it, will feel a sense of pride also. Maybe I'll conduct a French class that night," Paul Narkiewicz smiled.

Landfill's vertical expansion

close the operation and cap the material.

Coxe says that CHL may expand vertically only by satisfying all permit requirements and meeting all Department of Environmental Protection and MEPA regulations.

"DEP should ensure that no permit modifications are granted until the landfill is fully in compliance with all regulatory requirements, including, if necessary, the removal of waste material from non site-assigned areas," Coxe said. "I interpret this to mean in this instance that all physical requirements will be completed—not that there are promises of tasks to be completed— even before the permit modification review process begins."

The zoning board of appeals is currently considering whether CHL is not legally permitted because the previous landfill owner failed to file a special permit with the Norfolk County Registry of Deeds. Coxe states that the vertical expansion can proceed only if all permits are in order. The zoning board is also considering whether to force CHL to remove 7,800 square feet of landfill material it placed in a section of the facility not authorized for landfilling. The zoning board expects to render a decision on the two CHL matters on March 12.

Coxe said she feels that there is no need for a supplemental EIR because her office and DEP have received extensive public comments on problems associated with CHL.

"I do share the concerns of the citizens of Cohasset about past operations and continuing conditions at the site," Coxe said. "There will not be and should not be any vertical expansion until these issues (the permit and illegal landfilling matters before the zoning board) are resolved to the satisfaction of DEP, which should itself be sure to involve concerned citizens and town officials as it resolves these issues."

Coxe concluded that the vertical expansion will not significantly contribute to storm water runoff contamination as long as CHL abides by its order of conditions. She also concluded that the added weight of the vertical material would not press down on the landfill and cause the horizontal area to increase.

Assistant Secretary of Environmental Affairs John Rodman said his office has placed tough restrictions on CHL and DEP's approval.

"Secretary Coxe has instructed DEP through the MEPA process that all the requirements are not only to be met but to be physically done before the vertical expansion is approved," Rodman said. But McNabb said he felt that the decision was a mix of good and bad elements for the town. McNabb said the decision could be interpreted to mean that if DEP finds that CHL does not have to remove the illegal material in the unauthorized area, then the vertical expansion can proceed.

Zoning board considers action against landfill

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The zoning board of appeals is considering whether to take action against the Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill after a Feb. 26 special hearing that focused on two zoning violations. CHL is appealing two cease and desist orders issued last January by Building Inspector Robert Egan.

The zoning board discussed the violations for 90 minutes before taking the matter under advisement. Zoning board Chairman Mark DeGiacomo said the board may issue a draft decision as soon as March 12.

Egan issued a cease and desist order on Jan. 12 ordering CHL to cease operations because prior landfill owner James Tyeryar failed to file a zoning board special permit with the Registry of Deeds. John McNabb, vice-president of the anti-landfill group Stop Any Further Expansion, discovered the violation after inspecting permits at the Registry.

The special permit to operate a landfill was issued by the zoning board in 1976, but Tyeryar never filed it with the county. Under state law, special permits take effect only after being filed with the county clerk. CHL owner Paul Barry also did not file the permit after he purchased the landfill.

Egan ruled that CHL is in violation of the town's 1986 Water Resource District Bylaw. The bylaw prohibits any landfill from operating in the water district unless it was in lawful operation prior to the enactment of the law. A large portion of the landfill sits in the district. The landfill was in operation 10 years before the creation of the water district. On Jan. 28, CHL's attorneys filed the special permit, but Egan insisted the landfill comply with the cease and desist order.

McNabb argued against CHL before the zoning board that the permit does not become effective until it is recorded with the Registry of Deeds. He also refuted claims by CHL that the town tried to enforce the special permit more than 10 years ago to prevent CHL from accepting sludge.

"CHL says the town brought litigation against CHL when it invoked the special permit, but the town did not bring litigation,Ó McNabb said. "CHL initiated the action when it appealed the building inspector's enforcement order. It's been assumed all along that CHL is a valid, pre-existing, non-conforming use, but that argument is DOA because they filed the special permit Jan. 21, 1998.Ó

CHL Attorney Anton Moehrke has countered that McNabb's legal assertions are narrow interpretations of the law.

"This is clearly and classically a paper chase, because no one has acclaimed anything other than a piece of paper was not filed,Ó Moehrke said. "No disrespect is meant to the ZBA. No one has asserted by this miscue that anyone was misled, prejudiced or that anything would have been different if that paper had been filed. This is the outcome of a search not to protect the environment, but an attempt by avowed enemies of CHL (SAFE) to find the fatal flaw through the use of public resources to shut down the landfill.Ó DeGiacomo said the arguments in the permit appeal focus on straightforward legal issues.

The second violation came about when McNabb discovered last November that CHL had placed refuse in an area of the facility not approved for landfilling. On Jan. 29, Egan issued another cease and desist order against CHL for placing refuse in the unapproved section, Area IV-B, and ordered the removal of all refuse. McNabb discovered the illegal dumping when he compared several engineers drawings against the contours of the landfill. The illegal fill encompasses an area of about 7,800 square feet. CHL owner Paul Barry admitted placing the refuse in Area IV-B. Barry said the refuse was placed in Area IV-B accidentally, and that the material had been capped in 1989 when landfilling ceased in that part of the facility.

CHL appealed the building inspector's decision on the grounds that it cannot remove the refuse without approval from the state Department of Environmental Protection and the board of health because of possible environmental impacts.

Chairman responds to school letter worth noting that Mr. McElroy is the only person I have heard bring this up in the past year. The real tragedy of that situation was the town" rejection of the first option recommended by the school facilities committee, which would have rolled renovations of the Deer Hill into the package. One of the chief opponents to that plan was Mr. McElroy. Now, the town will be forced to pay for those much needed renovations out of its own pocket, instead of with 60 percent state funding. As Mr. McElroy points out, "too often, Cohasset voters have failed to invest in the future."

It is my fervent hope that Mr. McElroy made an honest error in misrepresenting special education increases. They have increased 48 percent over three years (FY95-98), not over two years, and 23 percent of that increase is accounted for in FY97-97, and is specifically related to day and residential (out of district) placements. The real issue here is the state's willingness to fund these kinds of costs more fully. I have been actively involved in special education issues for many years, and I know all to well how easily this hot button issue can be used to pit regular education against special education.

Lastly, I must agree, in part, with Mr. McElroy regarding the issue of strategic planning. The existence of the school committee's five-year strategic plan is unique in this town—only the school department has one. Yet we must work to strengthen it with a financial component. Work on that was begun almost a year and a half ago (prior to Mr. McElroy's election to this committee) and all current members are committed to its completion. However, I would never use such a plan to force the people of this town who truly care about education to make a choice between "comprehensive electives" and a "core curriculum," as Mr. McElroy suggests. We must use such a plan as a vehicle to educate and inform so that every citizen is aware of the rationale behind the decisions the school committee makes regarding its school system and to make them aware, well in advance, of any costs that may be attached to those decisions.

I truly believe that this town can put past divisions between "school side" vs. "town side" aside, and we must if we are to function in the future. But we can only do it if our elected officials put aside personal agendas, avoid grandstanding and then agree to work as a cohesive unit.

Maureen Jerz
Chairman, Cohasset School Committee

More teacher training needed

To the Editor:

In response to Mr. McElroy's letter in your Feb. 26th newspaper, I found it interesting to read Mr. McElroy's statement that we need to confront issues associated with the special education portion of the budget.

Perhaps the school committee should look into just what is being spent on special education. Develop a plan to train teachers, administrators and themselves on how to do more for the students with special needs themselves rather than through outside agencies which cost more with little return in the long run. Look at how Lexington does it.

I'm sure our teachers would welcome the training to further understand the needs of all the children of Cohasset.

Is Cohasset Arnold's kind of town?

A spokeswoman at the Norfolk County Probate Court confirmed Kennedy's will is in probate. But the will has been "impounded." She did not say if a judge had granted a license to complete the property sale.

However remote it might seem to experienced observers, the rumors about the sale have persisted.

In several different versions.

For instance, Cohasset native Noel Ripley said he had heard the house was sold for $2.5 million, though he had not heard Schwarzenegger was the new owner. The price sounded high. (According to Deborah Krupczak in the Cohasset Assessor's Offoce, the Kennedy house is assessed for a little over $1 million.) Ripley also thought it strange the house would stay with another member of the Kennedy family.

Though he allowed the Kennedy clan had a longtime link to Cohasset, Ripley never actually saw Michael Kennedy in town, even when he lived in a house off Steven's Lane, near his home. As for the history of the Kennedys in Cohasset, Ripley said he believed Joseph P. and Rose Kennedy spent one summer in the 1920s or 1930s in a house on the south side of Sandy Beach. It was said they never came back because they were not accepted at the golf club.

"It was very snooty then," he said.

Ripley did have some contact with Victoria Gifford Kennedy after an accident on South Main Street.

"Vicki was coming down South Main Street," Ripley said when her car struck a child riding a bicycle. Almost miraculously, the little girl was not seriously injured. He said he noticed the youngster because she had a little hard hat painted with ladybugs. When he saw the accident, he came running over to help. The little girl took the incident pretty much in stride. But Kennedy "was a wreck." Ripley said she was so upset she was not able to get back in her car and drive home.

"She seemed like a very pleasant person," he said. He also remembered he got a thank-you note from her afterwards.

In any case, the actor of Terminator movies is welcome, he said.

"I think he is a big star," Ripley said when asked to rate Schwarzenegger by local standards. "His movies are silly, but they're fun. I have a feeling he doesn't take himself very seriously."

But Ripley was not sure where to rank Schwarzenegger's celebrity among the luminaries of the town's past.

A lot of famous people have lived in Cohasset, he said, counting the McCormicks of the McCormick Reaper, the Barrons of The Wall Street Journal and many movie actors and actresses.

Archaeologist to visit

Cape Cod Museum of Natural History staff archaeologist Fred Dunford will discuss and sign his new book, "Secrets in the Sand: The Archaeology of Cape Cod," Sunday, March 8, from 2 to 4 p.m. at Buttonwood Books and Toys in Cohasset.

In the first detailed work to be written about Cape Cod's earliest settlers, Dunford and co-author Greg O'Brien offer an illuminating portrait of the prehistoric bands of Paleoindian hunter-gatherers who first roamed the Cape ten millenia ago. The Cape Cod they discovered was a far different place than it is today. Integrating accounts of excavations made at Brewster's Upper Mill Pond, Sandy Neck, Pochet and Wing Island with anthropological interpretation of the ancient artifacts found, "Secrets in the Sand" offers a compelling picture of an indigenous people who lived on the Cape down through the centuries until the modern world came to claim ownership. Here, too, is a detailed look at the work and methodologies of present-day archaeologists in their quest to explore and understand the mysteries of the past.

Dunford will discuss his book from 2:15 to 3 p.m. Although this event is free, registration is requested for seating. Call 383-2665 for more information or to reserve a seat or autographed copy of the book.

Public privy in village pondered

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

There are no public rest rooms in Cohasset Village which can pose a problem for tourists or anyone else who's away from home when nature calls.

Some village businesses don't mind allowing visitors to use their rest rooms, others do.

Dean Rizzo, vice president of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce, will ask selectmen Monday to investigate using the Independence Building as a site for public rest rooms and a visitor center.

"It's the perfect spot," said Rizzo who said the subject came up at a recent meeting of the Village Task Force on which he is a member.

Currently the Independence Building is leased to Cohasset Youth Resources Inc. which is using it as a Teen Center. Plans are to relocate the Teen Center to the old DPW garage in the town parking lot.

Selectmen have discussed selling the Independence Building which used to house the police station in the early part of the century.

Rizzo will ask selectmen to hold off getting rid of the building until the rest room/visitor center concept can be looked at. He pointed out that the plan would fit in with the proposal to redo the sidewalk which runs along South Main Street below

Contracting out for bus service possible

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The possibility of contracting out for bus service is just one of several suggestions in an audit of the school department.

The town paid the accounting firm Tucci & Roselli — which performs the annual town audit — $8,000 to take a closer look at the school department this year.

Selectmen stressed the school audit was routine and was a good way to take a closer look at the department which is in the throes of building a new school and hiring a new superintendent. In the past other town departments have been the subject of more in-depth audits, including the water department.

Tony Roselli pointed out that at $182,000-$190,000 annually contracting out for bus service may cost slightly more than in-house service ($176,000) — but the administrative cost of running the service in-house takes its toll.

"It is time consuming," Roselli said.

School Supt. Stephen Hart, who will retire in June, said a bid

Health board charges Cohasset Heights with overfilling

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The health board questioned the owners of the Cohasset Heights Limited landfill Tuesday night about evidence that they have already exceeded the legal capacity of the facility. John K. McNabb Jr., vice-president of the anti-landfill group Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE), uncovered evidence using CHL's own reports that the company had placed as much as 170,000 cubic yards of excess material in the landfill.

McNabb was uncertain of his own discovery because the landfill has not yet reached its maximum allowable height. The excess fill is difficult to see because it is actually on the slopes and contours of the landfill, McNabb said. It was only when CHL submitted a drawing to the health board that showed the current shape and contours of the landfill that the excess fill was confirmed. When a DEP overlay showing the allowed contours of the landfill was laid over CHL's latest submission, health board members realized there was a huge amount of excess material in the facility.

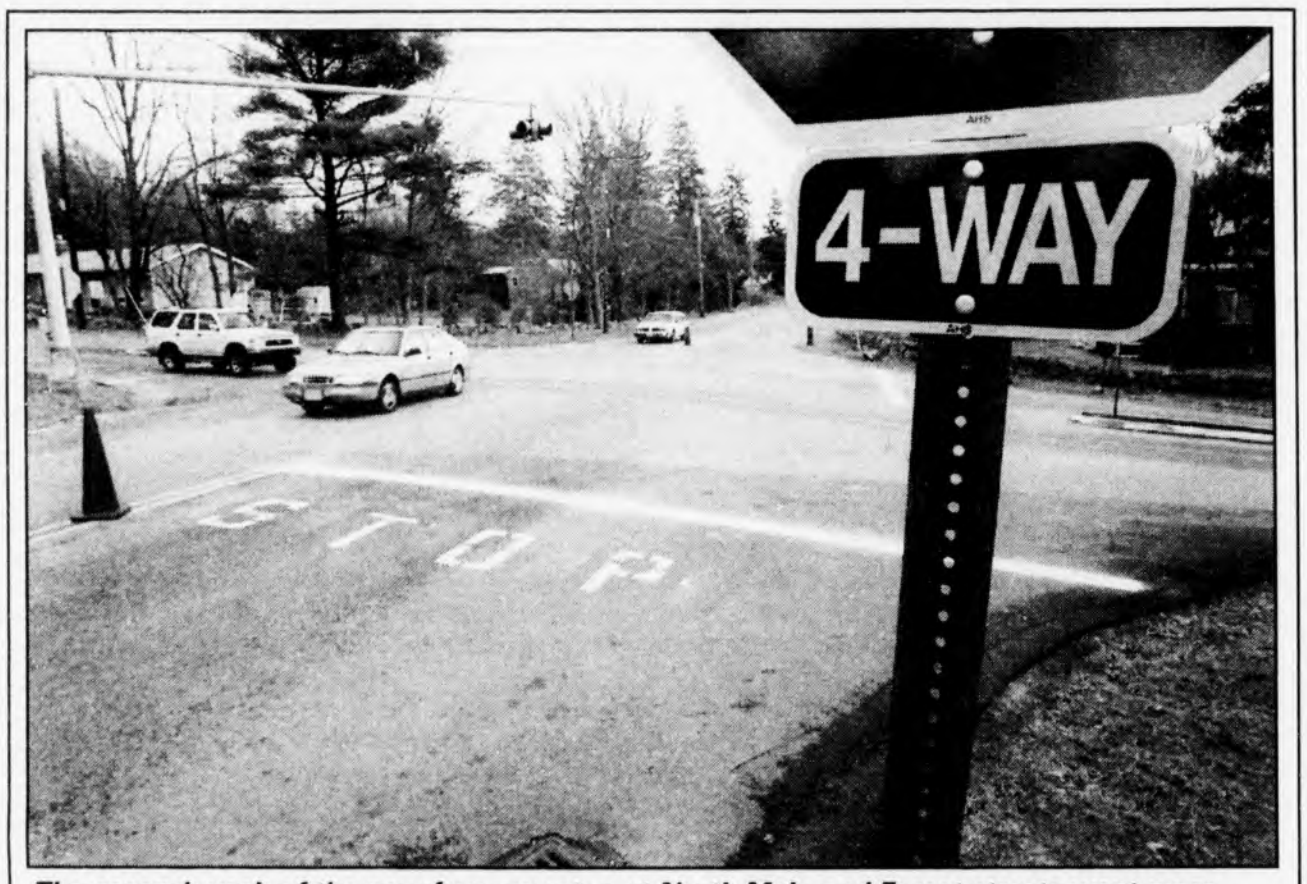
The health board has taken the matter under advisement and will discuss the excess fill again on April 14. Health board member Kevin Ulmer said he's not sure what the health board can do because the excess material would be a violation of CHL's Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) permit. DEP would have to handle any enforcement. CHL-attorney Anton Moehrke was unavailable for comment.

"It's a staggering amount of material," Ulmer said in a telephone interview. "Essentially, they overfilled the landfill."

DEP is responsible for punishing them for any violations, Ulmer said. He added that DEP is aware the contours are inconsistent and is investigating.

According to Ulmer, CHL-owner Paul Barry said he only "eyeballed" the contours of the landfill when placing material in the facility, and that the extra material was an honest mistake. Ulmer said Barry denied seeing the engineer's drawings of the contours that went to DEP. Barry also argued that he has submitted the annual drawings to the state every year without any comment from DEP. The drawings are not normally submitted to the health board.

"I'd be more sympathetic to their claims if they had overfilled some contours and underfilled others," Ulmer said. "But they overfilled all of the contours."



Ulmer said it appears CHL may have made as much as $4 million in profit by taking in the excess material. He said DEP should fine CHL according to the severity of the violation. Ulmer said CHL charges around $50 a ton to take in landfill material, mostly construction material.

"Any fine against CHL should match the value of its ill-gotten gain, in this case $4 million, plus an extra fine to punish the violation," Ulmer said.

CHL actually appeared before the health board to discuss another matter: a plan to remove 7,800 square feet of material placed in an area of the facility not approved for landfilling: Area IV-B. The zoning board is currently considering whether to uphold a cease and desist order from the

COHASSET'S WEEK

The second week of the new four-way stop at North Main and Forest streets went more smoothly, police say. After issuing about two dozen verbal warnings the first few days, compliance is now about 99 percent.

Town census has been mailed

The Town Census for 1998 has been mailed to each household. The local census is primarily used to maintain voting and jury lists but it also aids in school enrollment projections, public safety and senior citizens' needs. The local census also establishes proof of residency, which is often needed for certain privileges, such as transfer station stickers and cemetery rights, certain veterans' benefits, and reduced tuition rates at state colleges and universities.

Dog forms were enclosed. The licenses are valid through Dec. 31, 1998. If you did not receive a census form, please call the town clerk's office.

Candidates night scheduled

S.A.F.E. will sponsor its annual candidates forum at 7:30 p.m. on March 19 at the Lightkeeper's Residence on Government Island.

Candidates for the offices of selectmen, board of health and sewer commission have been invited to discuss their qualifications and their positions on important issues facing the town of Cohasset. The audience will have the opportunity to ask questions and also talk informally with candidates following the formal presentation.

All voters are welcome and encouraged to attend.

Brush accepted at R.T.F.

Residential Brush will be accepted at the R.T.F. through April 19. No trees over 12" in diameter. No contractors allowed.

Ten minutes for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their weekly meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda. If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-9900 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. Mondays.

Public reading packet available

In an effort to promote communcation, the school department will provide a public reading packet and make if available to local citizens, the school board said last week. The packet, which will be available in the superintendent's office, will contain recent correspondence and other documents. There will also be an index of documents including items such as teacher contracts and school handbooks, so people will know how to access those.

Historic Red Lion Inn to be restored

By Margo Sullivan

The Red Lion Inn dates back to 1704. The planning board is reviewing plans to renovate the Red Lion Inn, which is on South Main Street.

Once considered the jewel of the village, the Red Lion Inn on South Main Street has lost much of its former glory to neglect. A year ago it was a shabby boarding house, and the Red Lion seemed on a downward spiral. Now Gerd Ordelheide, the Red Lion Inn's second owner in the past two years, has vowed to restore the historic inn. He is prepared to undertake a costly and massive renovation of the structure and the grounds. Wednesday, the planning board was scheduled to review the latest edition of the architect's designs. Though planning board Chairman Al Moore previously was disappointed with the technical drawings, he has said the town boards will work with the new owner. He hopes to give Ordelheide the direction to solve many of the engineering problems associated with the renovation. Moore said the restoration will be as significant for the town as was the development of the Shaw's Plaza on Route 3. According to the general manager Joe Dooley, Ordelheide has the determination it will take to restore the Red Lion Inn to its former status as a first-class New England inn and restaurant. He is confident Ordelheide can make it work.

Joe Dooley is looking forward to the day when the Red Lion Inn is once again the center of life in the village. Dooley, the inn's restaurant manager, believes the planned renovations can put the luster back into the Red Lion, while preserving much of the building's historical character.

"It's been run as a boarding house, but it will go back to being an inn again," he said.

Dooley said Monday the plans call for demolishing the additions on the back of the building but not the original structure where the dining room is located. The additions went up over the years and have no historic interest, he said. Conversely, the dining room is a place of charm and some architectural value. The focus of the dining room is the Dutch brick oven, once used to heat the building as well as to cook. It is part of the central chimney and it shows clay brick insulation wedged between the studding. The walls are plaster with a wainscot of dark wood. There is even a cardboard skeleton in a closet beside the hearth. There has always been a skeleton in the closet at the Red Lion, he joked.

"This is basically going to stay the same," he said. "The owner wants to keep the traditional New England look."

Nonetheless, there will be some changes made in the second dining room, Dooley said. The second room is smaller and features walls that go out at angles. The plan will make the room light and airy. It calls for installing French doors to the patio. The owner also intends to expand the rock garden by the patio. The new gardens will go all the way back to the property line, he said

More changes are planned for the bar and the kitchen. The booths in the bar will be torn out and replaced with one long couch along the wall. The fireplace, which is not working now, will be refurbished. Ultimately, the bar will get a bistro look, after the Cafe Restaurant a la Mort Subite in France. The kitchen will be open and a third, much smaller dining room and a new fireplace will be added.

Dooley said there will also be a second entrance, roughly across from the Texaco gas station. Guests entering will be in the new addition. It will have a front desk and lobby and a new open fireplace.

Upstairs, the plans call for enlarging the inn's guest rooms. Some will have working fireplaces. Most will open onto a new balcony through French doors. The plans also call for bay windows to capture the generous sunlight on the southern exposure.

David Wadsworth of the Cohasset Historical Society said the Red Lion Inn is considered one of the most important historic buildings in town.

"It's been an inn since the 1700's," he said. The Red Lion Inn was the original name, although the name was changed at least twice. (The Hillside Inn and Norfolk House were among the other names.) The commercial tradition is the reason why the building is significant, since Main Street was once the stage coach line. The line was known by two names—the Coast Road and the County Way. (The latter name is still the street name of the continuation of Main Street in Scituate.)

Wadsworth said the building, which was constructed around 1704, was originally a small Colonial farmhouse, not a barn. But additions over the years have obliterated the original outline.

"The building was enlarged probably more than once," he said. "It had a pitched roof, but sometime in the 1800's the third floor was added and topped with a flat roof.

"We have the Frank Shapleigh painting," he said. (Shapleigh, a painter of the late nineteenth century, married a Cohasset woman and did a series of paintings of the town.) It shows the building as it looked in the late nineteenth century when the painter visited Cohasset.

Wadsworth said the original farmhouse walls were made of wood. Though in the dining room, an exposed part of an original wall is identified under a glass frame, he doubted the exterior walls were ever brick and stone.

"That might be part of a chimney," he suggested.

He said other interior features illustrate the Colonial period style of building. The exposed beam ceilings are hand-hewn. They were cut with a tool called an adz.

Wadsworth said the farmhouse was built by Thomas James. His grandson Christopher turned it into an inn. The last member of the James family to own the Red Lion was Eleazer James. James Lane was named after him. It used to run Pleasant Street to South Main but was cut off when the railroad bisected it. The narrow road between the Red Lion and the Texaco station is the old north end of James Lane.

Contracting out for bus service possible

request is being drawn up to evaluate contracting out for the service.

The school lunch service is running at an accumulated deficit of $37,000, Roselli said. This is due to increasing costs, fewer breaks for students, and over staffing by one person, according to the audit.

Lunch prices were raised this year which has enhanced profitability, Roselli said.

"This should be a self-supporting activity. But what's happening, is it's a taxpayer supported activity," Roselli said.

Hart said the school department is piloting a program to provide lunches to a nearby education facility which could result in a profit of about $8,000 to $10,000 a year.

Other action the school department is considering as a result of the audit includes:

- the school committee adopting a policy requiring its approval for transfers which exceed a specified dollar amount;
- installing an automated barcode system for inventory control;
- developing an updated policy manual;
- a system requiring review by the town accountant for all purchases between $1,000 and $10,000;
- rigid enforcement of a purchase order system.

Roselli said the student activity accounts "were run better than any community he's looked at." The school department is considering using the money from former classes for a scholarship fund.

The policy for cash receipts was also discussed. The school department has in place a formal reconciliation process to ensure a match between gate receipts and what is issued and a ticket numbering system. It will also require all people without passes pay for admission to athletic events. All employees are covered by an insurance bond, Hart said.

Roselli suggested the school department evaluate the need to hire a full-time business manager to adequately monitor the corrective steps identified in the audit.

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan gave the audit high marks.

"There is nothing glaring. These are procedural things which are easy to fix," he said.

School committee chairman Maureen Jerz said the audit pointed out the department's strengths and weaknesses and "helped us to address those areas."

Discord on school board surfaces publicly

School board member Ralph Kidder went public March 5 about his spat with Joseph McElroy. A letter McElroy previously sent for publication in the Mariner irked Kidder. The letter also drew fire from school board Chairwoman Maureen Jerz. Her reply was published in the newspaper March 5. The same night, Kidder aired his objections to McElroy's views. The letter implied Cohasset teachers were being paid too much. It also found fault with the previous school board for negotiating a teacher contract that called for the pay hikes. Kidder said the letter showed McElroy apparently "doesn't even understand the rudiments of collective bargaining."

He listed several other statements in the McElroy letter. The statements appeared to be contradictions, he said. Moreover, he said the contradictions were typical of McElroy's campaign "to be all things to all people."

Kidder said he never before criticized McElroy publicly, but now "the gloves are off." He said McElroy went behind his back and sent another letter to other boards. Kidder also objected to the second letter. He said McElroy had also made accusations behind his back and said Kidder did not know what he was doing and had "evil intentions."

Afterwards, McElroy stood by his comments about special education spending increases. He also said he sent Jerz a copy of his letter to the selectmen, the advisory board and the town manager. However, Jerz said she never received it.

"Maureen was sent a copy of the correspondence two days before I released it to Merle, Mark and Dick," McElroy said. Jerz shrugged and said she "never got it."

School bus discipline policy

The school bus policy has received a green light town counsel, schools superintendent Stephen Hart said March 5. Hart said he would post the changes for the public's information. But he plans to forego a public hearing.

"We will put it out for public comment," he said. "But these are not substantial changes."

Hart said the town's lawyer Paul DeRensis did not see problems with the plan to adopt a stricter disciplinary code. Under the new rules, the schools will stop busing a student who is cited for "disorderly conduct" on the bus three times. The rules also ban eating or drinking on the bus, but the board asked for an exception in the case of athletes coming back from meets on the bus.

Changes planned in light of school audit

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

• See related story page one

An independent audit of the school department's books found the school business office does an "adequate" job accounting for money in the budget. But the examination, conducted by the firm of Tucci and Roselli, also raised some serious questions about other financial dealings by the school.

Schools superintendent Stephen Hart reported the findings to the school committee March 5. He said then it was important to remember many of the questions raised by the audit were only questions. He said the auditors did not look hard for answers to the questions in many cases because the investigative work would have been outside the scope of the audit.

For instance, Hart said the audit questioned whether school department employees were bonded since some handled money. They are, he said. He also said the audit appeared to find a large amount of cash was in the keeping of a school department employee for several days before it was deposited in the bank. That criticism also involved a miscommunication, since the money was in a money order, not in cash.

Overall, he said the audit will be "helpful" as the school department works to improve financial controls.

The audit is conducted for three main reasons, according to the statement from Tucci & Roselli:

• to "safeguard assets from loss" or theft;

• to verify the management's statements about the department's financial condition;

• to promote "efficient and economical" ways of doing business by making recommendations.

Hart said the first recommendation was unclear. It addressed the way the superintendent balances the budget through the school year. Typically, if more money has to be spent than was anticipated, the superintendent now covers the shortfall using money that was earmarked for other expenses but has not yet been spent. (For instance, when special education costs go over budget, the superintendent might tap money that was reserved for textbooks but not yet spent.) But the audit found controls could be improved if the school board stopped allowing the superintendent sole discretion in balancing the budget. It said the school committee should approve such money transfers.

Deficit spending line items need improvement, audit says.

Hart said school board supervision might prove unwieldy. He suggested the school committee could adopt the recommendation but set a threshold for the dollar amount. For instance, the superintendent might have sole discretion if the transfers are less than $5,000. The school board would need to OK the transfers above $5,000. But he also said he did not think the recommendation would work if the approval had to be gained every time a single account was touched. The school board members also said they believed their supervision should be confined to a summary of combined accounts called "schedules."

School board member Ralph Kidder said the school committee should not "micromanage" the school department but leave management to the professional school administrators.

"I would be very concerned to see a group of volunteers try to authorize at too small a level," he said. School board member Joseph McElroy suggested the school principals might be given more control of the budgets for their schools. He also said the threshold dollar amount might not work because it did not address "relationships" among the accounts.

"One line has $4 million, and another has $25,000," he said. "You have to look at relationships as well as gross numbers."

Many changes already made in purchasing and disbursements, Hart said.

The audit also found a discrepancy between policy and practice when contracts are awarded. State law says jobs do not need to be advertised for bid if the total cost is under $10,000. Nonetheless, the business manager is obligated to get three verbal price quotes for the job. The audit found a lack of documentation on verbal bids. But Hart said he has already dealt with the problem. He also said the department could use "suppliers on the state bid list" without getting verbal price quotes.

The audit also reported most contracts are not forwarded to the Town Accountant but should be. Hart said most are sent over to the accountant.

Some other questions proved hard to resolve, however. For example, the audit found fault because some people were allowed to enter school athletic events without paying. Hart said only people with a pass from the state school athletics association, the MIAA, should be allowed in without a ticket. He said he has directed the athletic directors to enforce the policy, though it is unpopular.

Policies and procedures are deemed "antiquated"

The audit found fault with the school policy and procedures manual. The book is behind the times and incomplete. According to the audit, "it is critical that the School formalize policies and procedures in the area of management and accounting information systems." Hart said the school board was working on the policy manual.

Inventory also a problem

The audit saw room for improvement in the way the school keeps records on its equipment such as computers, televisions, musical instruments and athletic gear. Hart said the school department would correct the problem. He said bar codes would be used to keep track of items by computer.

School lunch program ran deficits too long

The school board accepted part of the blame for the audit's criticism of the school lunch program. The board kept the price of a school lunch too low for too long, the members agreed. Hart said the program was showing a small profit this year, after the school committee finally agreed to firm up prices. As yet, the profit is not enough to wipe out the losses accumulated over several years. But Hart said the school department is starting a pilot program. It may earn money by selling lunches to other nearby institutions, he said.

The audit also raised some issues about bus transportation and about inactive student accounts belonging to classes that have long been graduated. Hart said the school board was reviewing the benefits of hiring a private bus company. The inactive accounts are being advertised. If no one claims them, they will be closed out and the money used as a scholarship fund.

Public privy in village pondered

St. Stephen's Church and along the front of the Independence Building.

"It is a great opportunity to have it incorporated into the sidewalk project," he said.

The lack of public bathrooms was exacerbated by the sewer moratorium in the village which is now being lifted under an agreement with the state.

Debbie Neil, manager of Fitness First, said she puts signs on the door telling people the rest rooms are not open to the public.

"I send them to the gas station," she said.

George Roukounakis of Olympic Texaco has provided a men's and ladies' room for 25 years which are accessible with a key. He said for the most part, he is good natured about his fellow businesses sending visitors to the Texaco station to avail themselves.

Denise Bismore of The Silver Spoon said lack of public facilities is the "biggest problem in the village." She refers people to the Community Center.

"It's a serious problem, most definitely," she said.

Stephanie Church, director of the Community Center, said since being hooked up to the sewer last spring, the public's seeking to use the center's bathrooms has been less of a problem.

Before that the center's septic system had to be pumped weekly. Nevertheless, she said the center, which is equipped with a men's and ladies' room with two stalls each, does not turn people away.

Church is skeptical about the additional of public rest rooms in the village. She agrees there is a need but worries about vandalism and maintenance.

"Who would keep them clean and stocked?" she asked.

Rizzo said possibly all the businesses could chip in a few dollars a month to pay for maintenance. Also, the upstairs of the building could be rented out as office space to offset the custodial costs, he said.

Sue Strahley of Cards & Shards said some people are furious when they are turned away from using the facilities elsewhere. She allows visitors to use her rest room.

"They say, 'can you believe they wouldn't let me use the bathroom?'" she said.

Strahley is very enthusiastic about the visitor center and public bathroom concept.

Judy Parsons, office manager at Hunneman & Company, said while she is happy to share the office rest room, public facilities would be a nice addition to the village.

She worries that while some are very comfortable about coming in and asking, other people aren't.

"This is such a beautiful town, people should be able to come and enjoy it," she said.

Dr. Joseph Godzik, health agent, said under the plumbing code a public restroom is not required if the restaurant has less than 20 seats.

While he agrees that lack of public facilities is a problem — public rest rooms might pose a bigger problem in terms of maintenance.

Godzik said he gets more calls about the public rest rooms at Shaw's and Stop & Shop. He doesn't blame the supermarkets which are doing their best.

"You virtually have to be there all the time," he said. "The general public can be just awful. They don't care and can leave it in a shambles."

Health board charges CHL with overfilling

building inspector directing CHL to remove the excess fill.

According to Ulmer, CHL submitted a set of plans from 1989 clearly indicating the liner extending beyond the Area IV-A boundary into Area IV-B.

"That drawing went to DEP and they didn't see it," Ulmer said.

"They (CHL) have admitted they did install the liner and that they installed it beyond their site assignment."

McNabb spent three weeks in December, 1997 poring over reports CHL must submit monthly to the health board. The reports detail how much material CHL has taken in daily. From the reports McNabb said he discovered that CHL had exceeded its legal tonnage limit beginning in Dec., 1994. According to McNabb, CHL's activity records show the company took in about 140,000 tons (280 million pounds) more than the 175,000 tons approved by DEP.

McNabb submitted his findings to the health board, which has been investigating the violations for the last four months.

McNabb said the violation in Area IV-B is nowhere near as serious as the 140,000 tons of excess fill.

"It turns out the Area IV-B violation is just the tip of the iceberg," McNabb said. "I discussed the excess landfill with the health board two weeks ago, but couldn't account for it.

McNabb said the next step is up to DEP. CHL is attempting to meet the requirements to go ahead with a vertical expansion that would raise the maximum height of the landfill from 190 feet to 206 feet. Currently, the landfill stands at about 178-feet-high, and the health board estimates it could take in an additional 9,600 cubic yards of material without the vertical expansion. The vertical expansion would allow CHL to take in an additional 44,000 tons of material and keep it open until at least March, 1999. CHL can take in a maximum of 299 tons of material per day.

McNabb said he hopes DEP will not approve the vertical expansion unless CHL can somehow remove the 140,000 tons of excess material. Secretary of Environmental Affairs Trudy Coxe said CHL must be in compliance with all permits and conditions to receive approval of its vertical expansion.

Ulmer pointed out that even with the vertical expansion, there isn't enough room for CHL to move the excess material from the side contours of the landfill to the top.

Chiropractic for HEALTH

by Dr. Debra M. Tranberg

CHIROPRACTIC'S COST-EFFECTIVENESS

When comparing the relative costs of chiropractic and medical care, we can turn to research conducted by Miron Stano, professor of economics and management at Oakland University in Rochester, Michigan. His study of an insurance claims database of 1.1 million people shows that chiropractic patients tend to have substantially lower total health care costs. They also had a lower overall rate of hospital care, as well as of total outpatient costs. Another study, based on an examination of workers' compensation in Utah, undertook to compare the costs of medical claims and chiropractic claims for patients with identical diagnoses. The study showed that total compensation paid per case for all cases combined was significantly higher for those receiving medical treatment.

Chiropractic teaches that health is not a commodity which can be purchased in a tablet or bottle; it can only be obtained and maintained by allowing the natural recuperative powers of the body to function unimpaired. At SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, we want you to feel good. Our concern is your health. We're located at 80 Front Street, Scituate Harbor, where we are pleased that you have selected us for rendering care to you or your family. Please call 545-7388 to schedule an appointment.

P.S. Stano, who is a longtime student of health economics as they relate to chiropractic, was initially exposed to the field as a witness in the Wilk case (which challenged the AMA's stance on chiropractic treatment).

Attention — All Osgood School alumni — The Joseph Osgood School will be celebrating its 70th birthday this year before closing in June. They would like you to help in the celebration by lending or giving pictures of yourselves or events during your years as students. There will be a box in the school office where they can be dropped off. OLD FRIENDS MEET

Bob and Carol Riley were at the Ocean Reef Club in Key Largo, Fla., recently. Guess who they ran into? Larry Figueiredo and his nephew, Chip (Larry works at the ORC Golf Club Bar). Bob and Larry had a great time exchanging stories about "remember when" and "who do you know." Larry wants to be remembered to everybody!

GRADUATING IN MAY

On their way to Florida, Carol and Bob stopped in Durham to see their son Mike's final hockey game at Duke (they lost to UNC 5-4 in overtime.) Can you believe that Mike will be graduating from Duke in May (in the top 5 percent of his class)! We know that Mike will do very well at whatever next phase of his life comes along, he is one great guy!

BC HIGH SCHOLAR

Christopher J. Carr, an eighth-grade student at the Cohasset Middle School, has been named a Scholar of the School at Boston College High School in Boston. The scholars were selected from the applicants to next year's freshman class at B.C. High, the class of 2002. Criteria used for selection as a scholar included outstanding fork on the school's entrance examination and distinguished academic performance in the present school setting.

Christopher J. Carr, an eighth-grader at the middle school, has been named a Scholar of the School at BC High.

NDA HONOR ROLL

Notre Dame Academy announced its second quarter honor roll, and four Cohasset students "made the grade" ... they are Allison Berg (Principal's List, 3.9 gpa, or better); Stephanie Canton (Stephanie also made the Principal's List); Emily Coyne (Second Honors with a GPA of 3.4 or better); and Kristen Devine (also made second honors).

IT'S HAPPENING

Open meeting of Historical Society

The Cohasset Historical Society will have an open meeting March 12 at the Cohasset Lightkeepers Association at 6 Sunday evening. Guest speaker will be Ms. Nancy Martin, director of volunteers and friends of the Boston Harbor Islands. The lecture will be delivered in the midst of an after-dinner light hors d'oeuvres setting.

The society encourages interested members and their families to attend. The end result of the evening will be to decide on a potential Cohasset Historical Society July trip to one or more of the islands, based upon interest expressed by members in attendance.

Please make reservations by March 13 at the Cohasset Historical Society, 14 Summer St., Cohasset, Mass. 02025. Members are $10, non-members $12. Their phone number is (781) 383-1434.

Catch the Spirit

St. Anthony Church in Cohasset extends an open invitation to all those interested to participate in a Parish Mission taking place at 7:30 p.m., from Monday, March 23 to Thursday, March 26. The mission will take place in the church located at 129 South Main St. They invite individuals and couples, families, those young and older, practicing Christians and those who have been away from their faith for a while. The focus of this mission will be the Holy Spirit and has been entitled "Catch the Spirit."

In 1997 the Catholic Church began three years of preparation for the celebration of the Jubilee year 2000, the 2000th anniversary of Christ's birth. Pope John Paul II has established spiritual renewal as the primary objective of this celebration. The Holy Father suggested themes for each of these years of preparation and 1998 has been designated as the Year of the Holy Spirit.

Try to set this time aside to pray and reflect together. This mission is another opportunity for participants to foster and enjoy each other's friendship in God. The timing is appropriate also since Lent is a time of grace and inner renewal. The services each evening will last about an hour, certainly not too much to ask during this traditional period of sacrifice and fasting. More information about the program and speakers will be available here in the Mariner over the next few weeks or you can call St. Anthony Church at 383-0219.

St. Patrick's Day party

St. Patrick's Day party at 1 p.m., Tuesday, March 17 to sponsor Cohasset Elder Affairs at the Second Congregational Church, 41 Highland Ave., Cohasset Common. Recreation department annual Easter egg hunt

The Cohasset Recreation Department will hold the 21st annual Easter egg hunt for children 3 through 11 years old Saturday, April 4, noon, at Deer Hill School Field.

This year there is again the distinct possibility that the Easter bunny and helpers will be on hand. There also will be live animals at this year's hunt, as well as other attractions. Children will be divided into three separate chronological groups:

Group 1, ages 3 and 4 (with parent); Group 2, ages 5 to 7 and group 3, ages 8 to 11.

Please enter around your designated area sign before noon. Bring a small paper bag or container for your candy.

Individually-wrapped chocolate eggs will be scattered about the designated areas. In each group some of the eggs will be wrapped with masking tape that will have a number on the tape. Should you find one of the numbered eggs, hold on to it as you will receive a prize from the Easter Bunny.

This year's program sponsors are Cohasset Rotary Club, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Post 9146, American Legion Post 118, the Cohasset Police Association, and the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce. Rain date will be Saturday, April 11, noon, at Deer Hill School Field.

Be more involved in Lent

Catch the spirit at St. Anthony's Parish Mission is an opportunity to be more involved in Lent and to prepare for Easter. Begins 7:30 p.m. on Monday, March 23 through Thursday, March 26 at St. Anthony's Church, 129 South Main St.

What makes our bagels the best?

We make all of our dough and use only natural ingredients. There are no artificial flavorings or preservatives. It is used fresh, it is never frozen. We boil, then bake our dough daily. We never serve "day old" bagels. That is the only way to ensure the fresh and chewy taste of a really fresh bagel. Many bagel shops use dough that contains preservatives or artificial flavorings. Few shops bother to boil dough before baking it. Many bagel shops will bake dough that comes frozen, others use bagels that are partially cooked at the factory and "finished" on site. Finishing partially cooked bagels gives them a "day old" taste. It is no wonder that the large chains that offer bagels are facing difficult times. Analysts are wondering why the stock price of publicly traded bagel chains has dropped by as much as 50% in the last years. We feel that this drop is because the shareholders have now tasted their own bagels. Stop by and taste a real bagel.

Sandwiches

We have all the standards, but if you are in the mood for something different, try mixing and matching over 14 types of bagels, 15 types of cream cheeses, 15 meat and sandwich toppings, 5 types of roll-up bread, 10 vegetable toppings, 3 mustards, and more.

Public rest rooms

Tune in to cable-TV Monday evening for a lively discussion on the possibility of a visitor center complete with public rest rooms in Cohasset Village.

Chamber of Commerce vice president Dean Rizzo is on the selectmen's agenda and plans to raise the subject. Mr. Rizzo also sits on both the Village Task Force and Village Revitalization Committee which are dedicated to improving Cohasset Village.

Mr. Rizzo would like to see the Independence Building considered as a site for the visitor center and rest rooms.

If the issues of staffing the visitor center and maintenance and upkeep of the bathrooms can be worked out — then the center could be of real benefit to the village.

What's happening now is a hodgepodge of activity where visitors are directed here and there to find a bathroom.

Cards & Shards — and others — also often act as unofficial visitor centers supplying friendly information and help with finding the local sights.

Perhaps the visitor center could be staffed with volunteers on weekends in the summer months and during the fall and spring.

When you think about it, Cohasset has so much to offer a day-tripper. There are colonial churches, St. Stephen's carillon, the Replica, templates, Lightkeepers' residence, local museums, and art center just to name a few. These are all within walking distance of the town parking lot.

Having the information about our local sights at a visitor center and the availability of public rest rooms can only make Cohasset's many treasures more accessible. Visitors also shop and eat in town, which is a help to our village shops and restaurants.

SAFE sponsors candidate's forum

To the Editor:

Every year, as a public service to the voters, S.A.F.E. sponsors a Candidates Forum. March 19, at 7:30 p.m., at the Lightkeeper's residence on Government Island, candidates for the offices of selectmen, board of health and sewer commission will debate important issues facing the town of Cohasset. There will be formal statements as well as a question and answer section.

The S.A.F.E. candidates forum is one of only two opportunities for voters to meet with prospective town leaders. Please join us tonight to learn about these candidates in order to cast an informed vote on election day.

A truly great human being

To the Editor:

A final tribute to Gary

Many of us are still wondering why Gary Garber's final passing after fighting cancer has profoundly affected us so much. We tried to make sense of this while attending his memorial service where hundreds overflowed the chapel, lounge, hallway and stairwells just to pay tribute. Was it because Gary left us at such an early age? We had to face our own mortality? We felt sorrow for his bereaved family?

We suspect part of the reason is that Gary was one of the few "five star" people we will ever have the honor to meet in our lives. Gary was a gifted professional without a hint of arrogance, a passionate advocate without a sense of "winning at all cost," a contributor who never expected a favor returned, and a friend who always found the time to share his life.

We believe Gary's legacy was the opportunity for many of us to have shared a moment with someone who truly was a great human being. And for this, we will miss him terribly.

McElroy responds to Kidder

To the Editor:

Because of the infrequent school committee meetings (only six from Nov. 1, 1997 through Feb. 28, 1998), inconsistent publicity about meeting times and lack of television coverage, it is necessary to clarify many issues. Mr. Kidder has strongly advocated for a "separation of powers" between the selectmen and school committee. I hope that there will be a partnership and that the town and school district will put the budget on a shared data base with appropriate security codes. This will permit multiple format views. Further, I strongly support the DPW assuming maintenance responsibility for school buildings. I agree that the school committee has primary responsibility for the budget. However, the selectmen should comment as representatives of Cohasset taxpayers. I have chosen to make public my concerns because the school committee has never voted our budget. Mr. Kidder cannot understand how I can both praise and constructively criticize management of the schools. The answer is simple, good things are happening, but other issues are being neglected. The truth lies between extremes.

Mr. Kidder criticized me for not notifying the school committee of a communication to the town manager and others. He is wrong. The communication was sent to our chairperson on Feb.21 via the NET and was read the next day (anyone is welcome to stop by for confirmation). That communication advocated three things: reconsideration of the $30,000 and operations manager as well as requiring a commitment of the school committee to present a five-year strategic plan with a financial component.

Ms. Jerz says that the early retirement incentive is working as envisioned. Perhaps so, but the vision is flawed. Any early retirement incentive program that I am familiar with has a cut-off date. This $9,000 is good for the entire three-year life of the contract and is apparently open to further extensions during upcoming

KIDDER, PAGE 18

QUESTION OF THE WEEK

see Candidates Corner pages 16&17

School committee:
Teachers salaries are a cost driver in the school budget. Is the teachers' contract too generous?

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Pat Martin

I can imagine to anyone unfamiliar with the past history of teachers' salaries in Cohasset that the most recent contract might appear quite generous at first glance. Upon further examination, however, and with an understanding of its progression from contracts past, it becomes clear that it is not too generous at all.

The current contract can only be considered too generous when it is examined out of context. The preamble to this particular contract must play a role in its consideration. That is that the contracts preceding this one did not keep up with salary increases being offered to teachers in surrounding communities and across the state. Hence, we are now making amends.

Retirement incentives may also look extremely generous when they are reviewed in a single fiscal year scope. When examined over time and allowed to play out, however, the cost saving will be realized and readily seen.

This question, like the two before it, brings to our attention the lack of funds available to our schools and the constant challenges that we must confront because of it. It is my strong belief that we must find ways to bring new revenue outside the tax base into the budget and then perhaps we won't have so many tough choices to make.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Hugh J. Morgan

I feel that the teachers' contracts and salaries are not as generous as people think. Our school district, at this time, is lower in salaries than our neighboring school districts. We must realize that in any big business or corporation, the salaries are the biggest part of the operating cost. Our school district has an $8,000,000 budget that must cover everything from salaries to pencils.

The town of Cohasset is very fortunate to have a dedicated administration and teaching staff working to give our children the highest standard of education available.

We must keep in mind at all times that educational costs may seem great but our children are our most important asset and our country's greatest future.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Mark DeGiacomo

I do not believe that our teachers are overpaid. I have reached this conclusion based on my review of both the current teachers' contract and various charts that compare our teachers' salaries to teachers' salaries paid in other towns in our area. These charts make it clear that, at least with regard to straight salary, our teachers' salary levels are very average.

I believe that Cohasset schools have a very strong faculty. I have been impressed with the dedication, knowledge and effort of all the teachers with whom I have come in contact as my children have progressed through Joseph Osgood and into Deer Hill. However, if there are situations where teachers are not performing to the standards we expect, I believe our administrators must act quickly and effectively.

The current teachers' contract runs through the 1998-1999 school year. Discussions concerning the next teachers' contract will begin shortly. If elected, I would like to take an active role in the negotiation of the next teachers' contract. As a business owner, I know the importance of maintaining competitive salary levels so that top candidates are both attracted to our school and ultimately make the decision to stay with us. Above and beyond salaries, we should continue to provide incentives to our teachers to pursue continuing education and we should include provisions in the teachers' contract that will keep our teachers energized and motivated.

Selectman candidates:
Call firefighters. Are they archaic or worth preserving?

SELECTMAN/Martha Gjesteby

A few weeks ago, I watched a selectman's meeting and was surprised that our new town manager recommended canceling the call fire department. It seems he had convinced most of the board members that it was an archaic useless institution. The following week, the selectmen were contacted by the active call firefighters and they successfully persuaded the whole board that the call force was a very important cog in the fire fighting effort.

We only have four full-time firefighters on duty each shift, so a call volunteer fire force is an absolute necessity.

In stead of discussing whether or not we should have call firefighters, we should concentrate on finding better ways to recruit new members.

The following suggestion may have some merit and is worth looking into, — namely to make it attractive for town employees to double as call firefighters. We often hear that it is hard for the call firefighters to attend daytime fires if they work out of town. By recruiting our town workers, we can be assured that enough members will be available during the daytime hours.

In conclusion — Keep the call firefighter force to work with our dedicated permanent fire department and find ways to improve recruitment efforts.

SELECTMAN/Merle S. Brown

During the recent town manager's budget process, he recommended to discontinue the call firefighter force. Some of the concerns I had were, whether or not a need existed to have call firefighters assist the permanent fire department force. Could we utilize them more efficiently or should we consider eliminating them?

I met with the call firefighters to discuss my concerns. They pointed out the many tasks they perform. For example, there are some times when call firefighters arrive at the scene of an incident before the regular fire department and can begin services at that time. Call firefighters can also stay at the hydrant and hook up the hoses while the permanent firefighters can bring the fire apparatus closer to the scene to fight the fire and many more tasks.

With the reduction in the permanent force, it becomes even more important to have a good trained call force. They have all received firefighter "I" training and a couple of them are certified EMT's. After talking with them I was convinced it was to the town's advantage to maintain a strong call force.

The board of selectmen has asked the town manager and the fire chief to look at other towns with a call firefighter force and find out what is required for training, what are the responsibilities, and how they are compensated.

SELECTMAN/Tom Callahan

I believe that call firefighters can have a place in our fire department as a valuable supplement to the professional force. While volunteers would not be the first to attack a fire, they should be properly trained and meet the necessary physical requirements of firefighting. If we're going to have call firefighters, they should be trained and prepared to be used in actual firefighting.

Without claiming to be an expert, I envision a Long Island, NY-type volunteer force, as opposed to what we may have had in the past as a call force. Long Island illustrates that volunteer forces can work. While I do not advocate an all-volunteer force, in tough budgetary times a volunteer supplementary force could be very helpful in allowing us to still have the means to meet the firefighting needs of the town. The issues of safe minimum manning and high overtime expenditures could be addressed with such a force.

I also do not believe we needed to choose between the call force and paramedic training during the budget process. They are separate issues, but for the coincidence in their costs. Perhaps we could forego even the minimal sums now paid to call firefighters, to use the money instead of paramedics. However, if the call force could successfully address overtime, the call force could instead help us to reach the paramedic goal rather than be a sacrifice to it. Either way, we should find a way to add paramedic capabilities in the near future.

Sewer commission:
The Newtonville nightmare is just one example of a breakdown in communication between the board of health and sewer commission. How can this type of thing be avoided?

SEWER COMMISSION/ Henry Rattenbury

Harry Truman is reported to have said, "It's a mighty thin pancake that doesn't have two sides." In other words, there are two sides to every story. I can only say that the Sewer Commission has always sent copies of the Tutela reports to the Board of Health on time as they have become available. In addition, the Sewer Commission has accepted a number of suggestions over the years for increased sewer service form the Board of Health, including two major areas in North Cohasset.

People should be aware that over more than a year the Board of Selectmen has held seven or eight joint meetings with the Board of Health and the Board of Sewer Commissioners. I feel that their continued sponsorship of similar meetings should provide an extra dimension towards full communications between the three boards.

Also, we should not confuse communication with agreement. We can all understand the facts, but may not necessarily agree on what is the appropriate action.

SEWER COMMISSION/ Patrick A. Plante

One of the responsibilities of the sewer commission is to establish and update a master plan incorporating ALL areas of the town.

Most important is the cooperative effort of communicating on a regularly scheduled basis with the board of health and the health agent, to reach the goals of the town-wide plan.

The "Newtonville Nightmare," as you refer to in the question to us, is the end result when you lack this dialogue between boards necessary to make important decisions. When these two boards realize they are equally as important, it will become a much easier task to resolve the health and environmental problems of Cohasset.

If there is no area large enough for upgrade of present on-site septic systems (to comply with the state mandate of Title V) which is causing a major health concern in specific locations such as Newtonville, common sense should dictate.

The most obvious way to solve the problem of the homeowners in the Newtonville section is to extend the sewer line to this area, and serve these residents in the same manner as their neighbors on Elm Court and Stockbridge Street.

Board of health:
The Newtonville nightmare is just one example of a breakdown in communication between the board of health and sewer commission. How can this type of thing be avoided?

HEALTH BOARD/Steve Bobo

Newtonville is an example of a simple lack of dialogue between town boards. Many would be quick to blame lack of mutual trust, intransigence or stupidity, but I suspect that the underlying reason for the lack of communication between the Sewer commission and the Board of Health is related to an issue that should be out of their jurisdiction; how the town should develop. Both the sewer commission and the health board should use all their talents and resources to ensure practical solutions to health and waste disposal problems, and leave the issue of town development and growth to the townspeople. It seems we have a town where when one gets into office he forgets that he is the people's servant. We have selectmen removing articles submitted to the town in good faith by other elected boards, board members enunciating policy and commissioners requiring secret meetings in violation of the law. These positions are elected, their holders are supposed to be serving the town, not their special agendas. The sewer commission should see to the best method for sewering that part of town which needs it. The health board should see to health concerns and both should follow a town-wide plan which makes it least costly to the citizens.

Next week's question:

For all candidates:

Some elected board members have never seen an executive session they didn't like. Others are circumventing the law by holding working sessions without quorums so meetings don't have to be posted.

Is the Opening Meeting Law something to be embraced or avoided?

Paying too high a price for athletics?

Sports user fees are taxing student-athletes

Students at Cohasset High School have to pay $75 per season if they want to take part in school sports, which is about in the middle of the spectrum of the local high schools that were polled for this story.

By David McKee
STAFF WRITER

If you want to be a high school sports star on the South Shore, you better bring your wallet.

Ever since Prop. 2 1/2 became law 15 years ago, many area high schools have been charging student-athletes user fees to boost the school's sports budget and prevent the elimination of programs.

A survey of several area high schools show that student-athletes pay anywhere from $0 in Norwell to upwards of $75 per season at Cohasset or $100 at Hanover. It is estimated that some high schools receive between $50,000 and $60,000 each year from its sports user fees.

But in this era of multi-million dollar school budgets and state-wide prosperity, there is a growing sentiment that sports user fees have gone from an economic necessity to an unfair burden placed on those who play high school sports.

"I don't think there should be sports user fees anywhere," said Marshfield High athletic director Ed Miller. "Public education is funded through tax money and I don't think it's fair for kids or their parents to have to pay extra just to play sports. To me, a sports user fee is just another tax. Only it's for those who play sports."

In Marshfield, there is growing support for either the elimination or reduction of the present athletic user fee system by the start of the next school year.

"Our superintendent is in favor of getting rid of them and I think it's a great idea for Marshfield," Miller said. "I've heard many complaints over the years and I personally think it's the right thing to do. Originally user fees were put in place to save some sports programs during some tough budget times. But as anyone who deals with budgets knows, once the money gets in there, it's hard to get out. And to eliminate our user fees, we would have to get the money from somewhere else in the budget and that isn't always easy to do."

At Marshfield High, the overall athletic budget is in the neighborhood of $270,000. The overall school budget for Marshfield is more than $24 million. Therefore the MHS sports budget is just over 1 percent of the overall school budget. This percentage is consistent with other schools in the area. In

Skippers help honor women in sports

Lauren Dooley and Katie Devine recently took part in the Massachusetts celebration of National Girls and Women in Sport Day at Faneuil Hall in Boston.

The two were chosen because they are positive contributing members to both their teams and their school. The ceremony, which is supported by the Department of Education and sponsored by New Agenda Northeast, the MIAA and the National Association for Girls and Women in Sport, is designed to honor female athletes in the state

Dooley participates in field hockey and softball while Devine take part on the field hockey, basketball and lacrosse team.

Slotnick thrives at Vassar

Cohasset native Joe Slotnick (class of 1999) is continuing a strong career as a starter on the varsity basketball team.

At mid-season the former Skipper standout was average 8.8 points and nine rebounds per game.

MacQuarrie earns soccer letter

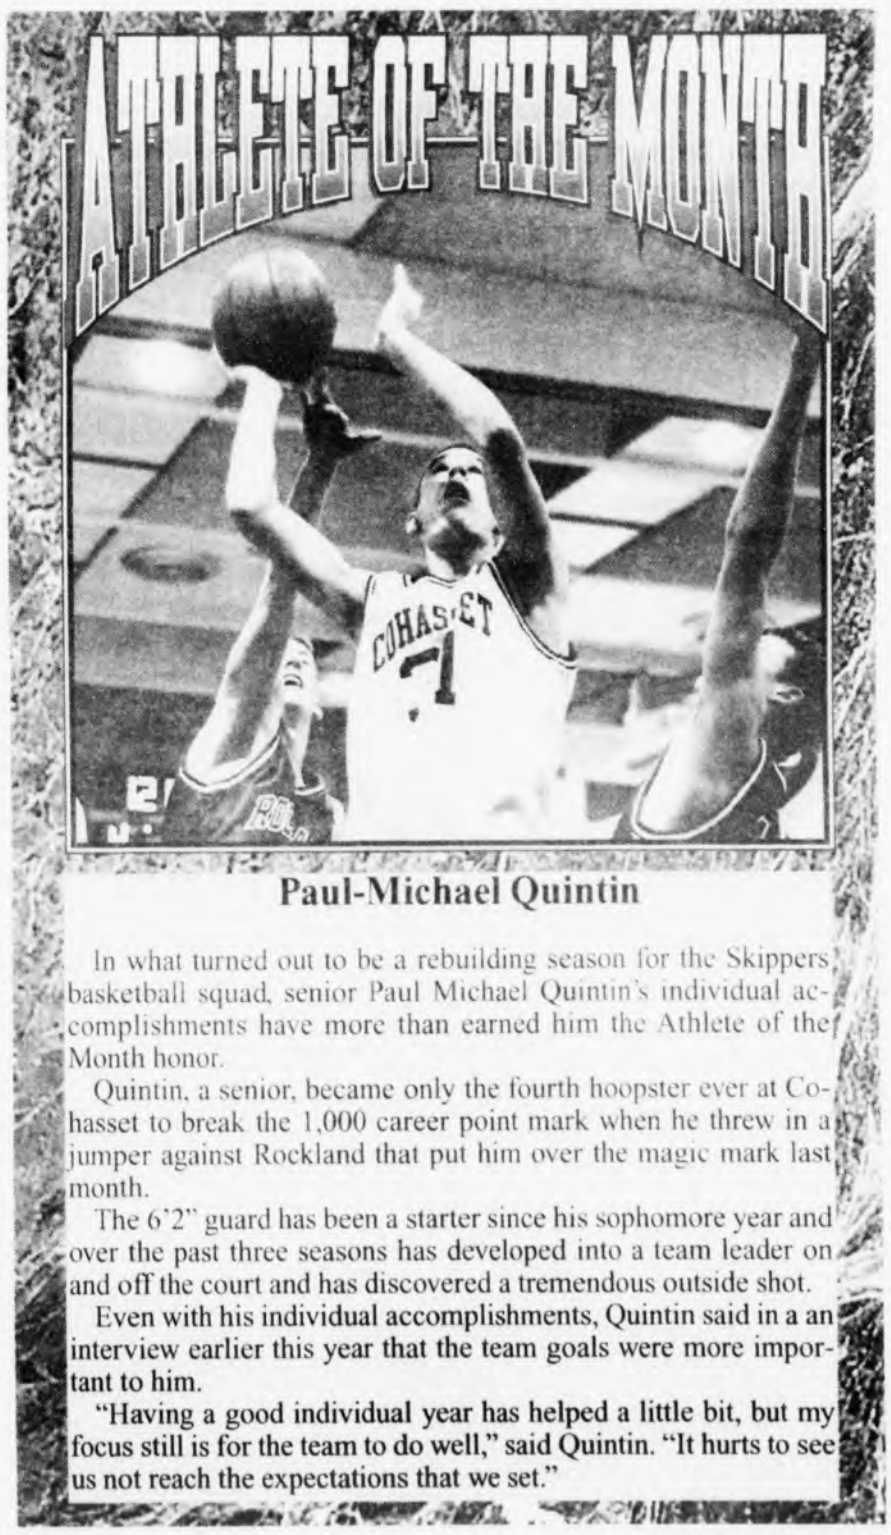
Freshman Brett MacQuarrie, of Cohasset, earned his first varsity letter as a member of the Trinity College men's soccer team, which finished the 1997 season with a 9-6-1 record and earned its first-ever berth in the NCAA Division III Championship.

The Bantams advanced to the second round of the tournament before losing to Metro Region #1 seed Kean University.

MacQuarrie played in all 16 games, starting four, as a forward for the bantams and was one of eight freshman to earn a varsity letter this season.

MacQuarrie had two goals this season, both coming in a 6-0 win over Albertus Magnus College.

He is a graduate of Northfield-Mount Hermon School.



Two residents honored by Noble and Greenough

Cohasset residents Taylor Devin and Stephanie Noering were recent honored by the Noble and Greenough School in Dedham for their athletic accomplishments this past fall.

Devin, a senior and the son of Rob Devin and Sheila Sullivan, was named to the Independent School League All-League team for his solid performance as a member of the varsity football team. He was awarded the E.T. Putnam Award which is given each year in honor of the Headmaster by the 1970 football team.

Noering, a junior, is the daughter of Richard and Sabina Noering. She was named to the ISL All-Star field hockey team and served as a captain on the squad.

Paul-Michael Quintin

In what turned out to be a rebuilding season for the Skippers basketball squad, senior Paul Michael Quintin's individual accomplishments have more than earned him the Athlete of the Month honor.

Quintin, a senior, became only the fourth hoopster ever at Cohasset to break the 1,000 career point mark when he threw in a jumper against Rockland that put him over the magic mark last month.

The 6'2" guard has been a starter since his sophomore year and over the past three seasons has developed into a team leader on and off the court and has discovered a tremendous outside shot.

Even with his individual accomplishments, Quintin said in a an interview earlier this year that the team goals were more important to him.

"Having a good individual year has helped a little bit, but my focus still is for the team to do well," said Quintin. "It hurts to see us not reach the expectations that we set."

Paying too high a price for athletics?

Hingham, the overall school budget is close to $22 million with the athletic budget in the neighborhood of $300,000. Also just over one percent. And like every school with sports user fees, Marshfield and Hingham have individual and family limits on overall contributions as well as waivers for those with financial hardships.

At Hanover, athletic director John Sullivan is in favor of eliminating sports user fees altogether. However, he doesn't have a say in whether they stay or go.

"You're asking the wrong guy," he said. "The decision to have user fees comes from the superintendent and not me. I don't like them but if it came down to eliminating programs or having user fees, I'd do whatever I can to keep our programs in place."

Hanover has had user fees for the last dozen years and fields 18 different athletic teams. In the last decade, both the girls soccer and ice hockey teams have won state championships.

"If we could increase our budget and eliminate user fees that would be just great," Sullivan said. "But until that happens, I have to operate with what we get." Norwell High has never had user fees. Its athletic director Bill Gerety believes user fees are an unfair burden on student-athletes.

"We have to make our uniforms last a little longer and we have to be a little more flexible with our scheduling but we've done whatever we can to avoid having user fees," he said. "We think its the way to go and I'm proud we've never had them."

Norwell High also relies on great financial help from its boosters club and various fund-raisers to help beef up the sports budget.

However, all is not totally rosy at the NHS sports program. Both the ice hockey and lacrosse programs are totally self-funded despite Gerety's budget requests each year.

"We're hoping these two programs can get funded one day," Gerety said. "Hopefully, it will happen very soon."

At Scituate High, there is a student activities fee for anyone who takes part in an extra-curricular activity, be it the football team or the band. "Ideally, I'd like to have no user fees or student activity fees," said acting athletic director Phil Pisano. "But this is a way to help off-set our costs and keep programs from being dropped."

Pisano would like to see the entire sports budget covered by tax money. However, like Sullivan, it isn't his call.

"The tax burden is certainly a big issue for parents and students these days," he said. "And having to pay additional money just to play a sport or join the drama club is something that should be carefully examined by the powers that be."

Pisano said a good portion of the student activity fee helps cover the transportation costs for those who take part in extra-curricular activities.

Hingham High athletic director Bill Barges believes a sports user fee system drives people away from athletics. And in a perfect world, he would like to see Hingham High eliminate them.

"User fees are not a positive thing and I'm sure there have been many students over the years who didn't want to have to pay all this money up front just to play a sport," he said. "But the big question is where are schools going to get the money for their sports programs if user fees are eliminated? I guess in the end, it's going to come from the taxpayers."

Hingham High school officials recently turned down Barges request to fund the ski and sailing programs. Even though the overall school budget is more than $22 million, school officials could not come up with the $10,000 requested to fund both programs. Therefore, like the hockey team and lacrosse team at Norwell High, the ski and sailing programs at Hingham High have to raise their own funds.

However, Barges is optimistic the two programs will receive funding next year. "They would both add a lot to our school and I feel they deserve budgetary support," he said.

In addition to financial considerations, many athletic directors and coaches believe sports user fees reflect a lack of respect for athletics by school officials and town budget number crunchers over the years.

"A lot of people don't realize the lessons learned in athletics," Miller said. "Hard work, discipline, teamwork and handling adversity are things that athletes deal with every day. And these are very valuable lessons for life. Plus how many students over the years have stayed in school or tried even harder in class to get good grades and stay on a team. I think a lot of people don't realize this. We should be doing everything we can to try and get more people involved in sports instead of chasing them away with user fees."

This view is shared by Pisano.

"I believe sports and other extra-curricular activities are vital to the education of students," he said. "Important lessons are learned through athletic competition and if schools keep having user fees, there is a great chance that students will be driven away from getting involved. And nobody wants to see that happen."

Barges said the large student involvement in athletics and other extra-curricular activities should be reflected in the budget. Like Norwell and other towns, Hingham High receives private financial help from groups like the boosters and the Hingham Sports Partnership. "Every dollar in our budget is accounted for and we try to do as much as we can within our means," he said. "But I'd like to be adding programs and getting more students involved than cutting back and excluding people. Hopefully, that will change one day."

Question Of The Week

Selectman:
If elected, how would you improve communication between the school committee and selectmen?

SELECTMAN/Martha Gjesteby

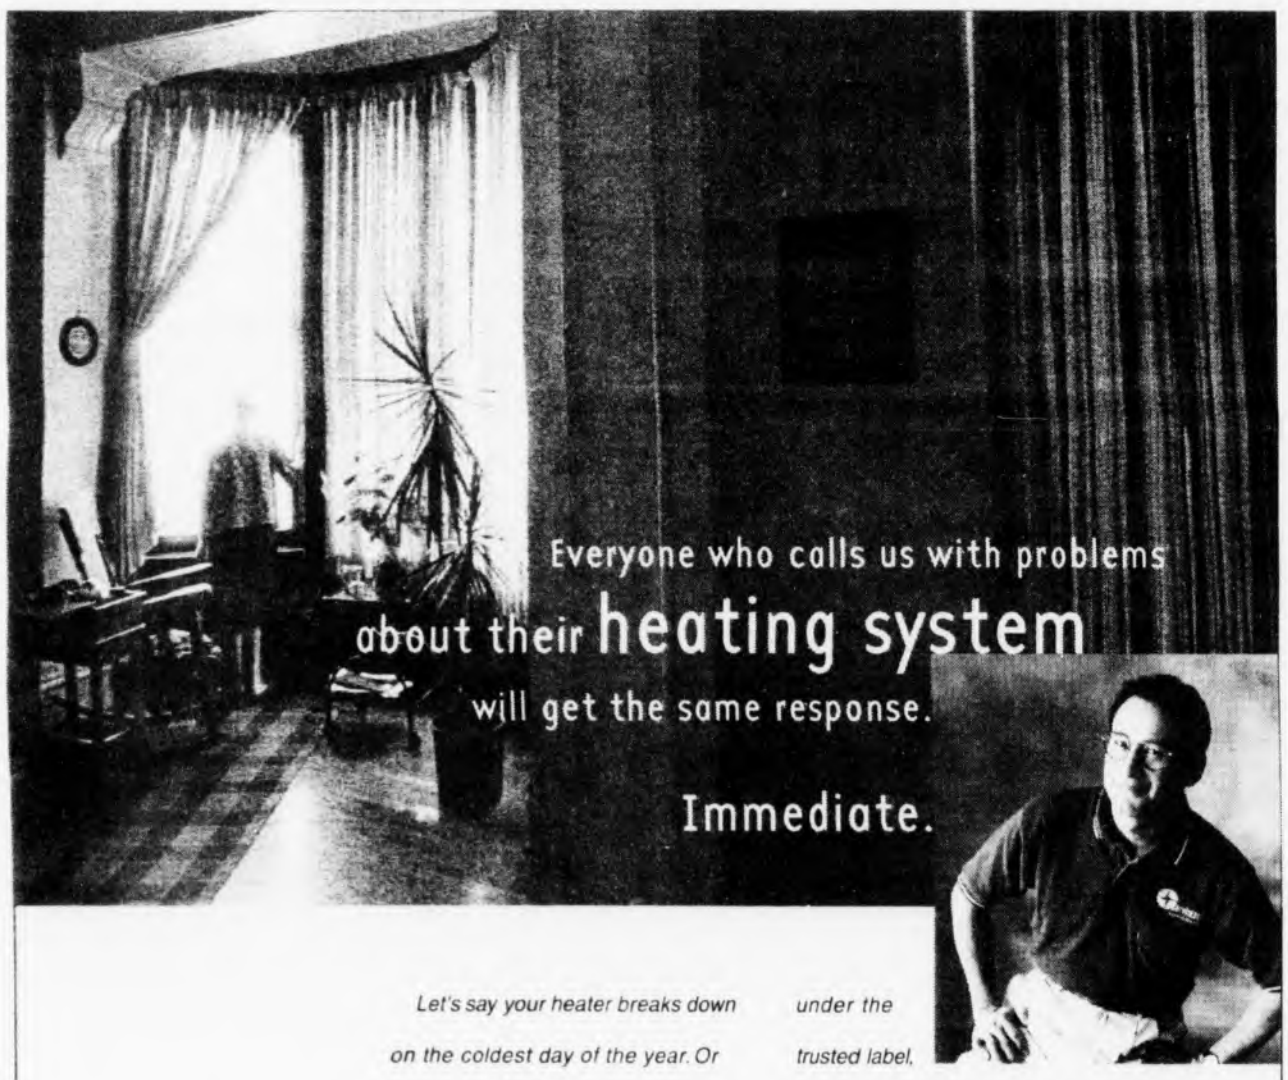
The selectmen should charge the town manager to routinely communicate with the school committee. By statute, the school committee runs the schools. Although the budget bottom line is fixed by town meeting, the school committee has autonomy within the budget. It would be helpful if the town manger met with selectmen and the school committee in the fall to discuss school and town needs for the next fiscal year. At the same time, the town manager should analyze the town financial condition.

Editor's note: Mrs. Gjesteby's answer to the Question of the Week was inadvertently omitted last week. The candidate for selectman submitted her answer by the deadline. The Mariner regrets the error.

Candidates' Corner

Brown to run for another term

Merle Brown



Merle Brown has served on the board of selectmen for two three-year terms. During his tenure, several of his many accomplishments to the town of Cohasset are as follows:

Merle was a strong proponent for the consolidation of the highway, tree, park and cemetery departments, and the recycling transfer facility under the DPW. He was instrumental in reclassifying both the DPW superintendent and treasurer/collector positions from elected to appointed positions. It better serves the town to appoint people with the specific qualifications needed for these important positions. Merle has saved the town money by being personally involved with the building of the new DPW garage and recommended the Clerk of The Works, with no cost to the town.

Merle has a good working relationship with the towns of Hingham and Scituate. He continuously works with other surrounding towns to explore projects to do together. One of his goals for the next term is to see what Cohasset and its neighboring communities can do together to save money and increase efficiency. Merle currently serves on the Norfolk County Advisory Board and has been successful in procuring the services of the county engineers for several projects at no cost to the town.

Increased communication continues to be a needed tool to help solve major problems that face the whole town. It is more important than ever for the sewer commissioners, the board of health and the board of selectmen to work together to solve the problems of sewerage and septic systems. Also the board of selectmen and the school committee must commit to work together to resolve the school issues that face the town.

If you would be interested in helping on Merle's campaign or wish to make a donation, call Arthur Lehr at 383-0388 (treasurer) or Merle at 383-1625. All checks should be made payable to the "Committee to Elect Merle Brown Selectman," c/o 200 North Main St., Cohasset, Mass. 02025.

McElroy responds to Kidder

contract negotiations. If so, it is a retirement bonus, not a retirement incentive.

The first sentence in the conclusion to the school audit says: "Our review ha indicated a need for improvement in many areas," Enough said.

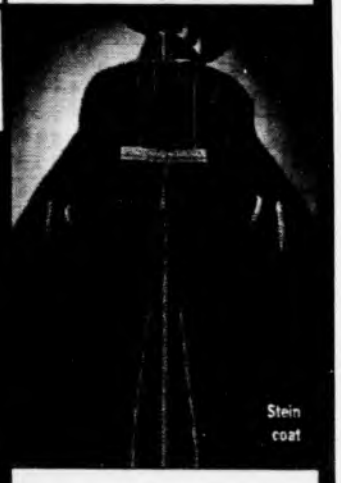
I did not oppose replacement of the Osgood School. I advocated for a compromise along the lines of the March '95 Cohasset Schools town-wide survey (848 responses) in which 63 percent advocated for either a K-5 or K-6 elementary grade configuration. Implicit in that response was renovation and enlargement of the Deer Hill School which would have provided better common-use facilities with lower overhead operating costs.

Ms. Jerz says that "special education...has increased 48 percent over three years" (FY95-98). Clearly, if she uses 95/96/97/98, she is speaking about four years. My figures are correct. We are speaking about day and residential placements only. For FY98, that amount is $1,339,000 exclusive of minor state assistance. Although the question has been asked, no on really knows what the total cost of special education is for the Cohasset School District. It is safe to estimate that it significantly exceeds $2,000,000. As many as 200-220 Cohasset students receive some form of special education assistance. The percentage of Cohasset students involved in some form of special education program is in the top 20 percent of local area school districts and this is exacerbated by the state having the highest enrollment rate in the nation. I agree with Mr. Johanson that more inclusive teacher training is needed and that is one reason why I strongly support much more emphasis on teacher professional development. I do not want special education parents and youngsters to feel threatened. We must work together to increase federal/state aid from its current 17 percent to the national average of 53 percent. I believe that we should continue to pay for "two opinions" and that we should use the next year to hear both sides of the argument on "maximum feasible" versus "free and appropriate."

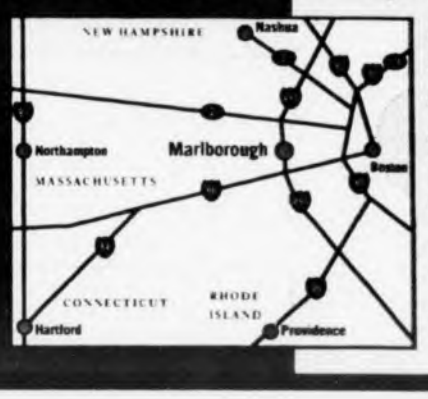
Ms. Jerz refers to the Oct. 1995 Strategic Plan. Only one meeting has been held on strategic planning since that Plan was published. That meeting was Sept. 20, 1997 and there is no public record of the results of that meeting. The Oct. 1995 plan has never been updated.

My comments on elective simply reflects that budgetary considerations as well as the state Department of Education and "high stakes testing" are going to push us toward a greater emphasis on the core curriculum. I will wait until next year for better justification of why we offer subjects and industrial arts (isn't that the purview of SSVOTECH?). We also need to look at situations such as athletics where the per student cost to play soccer averages $164; whereas, gymnastics an ice hockey cost $829 and $705 per student, respectively.

My attitude about compensation is that outstanding teachers are underpaid and poor teachers (only a few) are overpaid. If we are to compete with charter and private schools, we must compensate based on merit—not longevity. Currently, no statistical profile of Cohasset School District personnel evaluations exist (generic; i.e., not by name). Staff and faculty positions should have value ranges. Right now, guidance counselors and department heads are bumping up against the MS-HS assistant principals who work the full calendar year. Salaries must be related to levels of responsibility. I also strongly object to how the FY98 "salary reserve" was approved. Last summer, there was a seven week hiatus in school committee meetings. Apparently, pay increase decisions were made at that time. The "salary reserve" process needs to be reviewed. We are also overdue to implement "site based" management mandated by the Educational Reform Act. A step in the right direction would be to give each school principal management responsibility for his portion of the district budget.



Other concerns include: how a FY98 projected budget deficit of $282,000 was abruptly revised to $180,000. I am doing FY98 on-line budget tracking and I [illegible] hard questions answered before I support the town meeting article asking for a $180,000 supplement. We spent considerable time establishing 1997-98 goals, but we've never had a progress review. I attended a recent Friday afternoon technology meeting where I was advised that the "one-inch" voluminous technology plan was solely intended to gain state approval and a $37,000 state grant, but was not the operative plan for phasing-in technology. At that Friday meeting, I asked for a milestone plan with associated costs. Last week, I received that plan which was dated Feb. 17. The plan projected Deer Hill wiring would begin March 3, but at the March 5 school committee meeting we were told to disregard the plan because it was inaccurate.



We will only have the best school district if we have the trust and confidence of the vast majority of taxpayers by managing effectively.

Planning board will not support water tank bylaw

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The water commission believes that it must overcome numerous delays and build a second water tank in the coming year to provide adequate fire protection to the town. Water commissioners have proposed a town meeting article that would allow the town to build a new water tank without a special permit from the zoning board of appeals. But the planning board has voted unanimously not to support a change in bylaws even though selectmen and the advisory committee have supported the plan.

At last year's town meeting, voters approved $1.4 million to build a second water tank with a capacity of two million gallons and 65-feet-high next to an existing unit on Bear Hill. Property owners near the existing tank opposed a second tank in their line of vision for aesthetic reasons, favoring instead an alternate site on Scituate Hill. Abutters have been able to delay the construction of the Bear Hill tank.

The water commission must get a special permit from the zoning board to overcome the town's height restriction bylaw, which is 35 feet in residential zones and 45 feet in industrial zones.

But the Scituate Hill site is on a 62-acre parcel of private property. Developers are trying to come up with a plan that would give the town some land for free in exchange for concessions. The town is still conducting discussions with the land owner. Even with the free land, two of the three suitable locations on Scituate Hill would cost at least $200,000 more than the Bear Hill location.

The bylaw would allow the town to build a water tank in any light industrial zone or on any parcel of land currently owned by the town, such as the property on Bear Hill. Water Commissioner John K. McNabb Jr. said the commission is trying to keep all its options open going in to town meeting.

"The problem is that we are unlikely to get a variance for Bear Hill from the zoning board of appeals even though town meeting allocated $1.4 million for that site," McNabb said. "If we can't get out of town meeting with a site for Scituate Hill, then we have to try for Bear Hill. It comes down to whether it will cost a lot more money to go to Scituate Hill."

Planning board Chairman Al Moore said the bylaw would disrupt a system that already works properly.

"To change this bylaw is a blatant attempt to short circuit the process," Moore said. "The current system has checks and balances in place that work fine, which is why you need a special permit from the zoning board of appeals for a water tank. It's the court of last resort."

Moore sympathized with the water commission's attempt to carry out the mandate of town meeting and build the water tank. He pointed out that the planning board has supported the plan to build the tank on Bear Hill. He added that he just doesn't believe changing the bylaw is the answer.

In other business, the planning board supported a bed and breakfast bylaw on a split 3-2 vote. The bylaw would allow homeowners living in residential zones to open a bed and breakfast with less than three rooms as a matter of right. Currently, residents need a special permit from the zoning board of appeals to open a bed and breakfast establishment.

A group of citizens led by Dorothy Keville proposed the article. Keville has been before the zoning board of appeals on several occasions seeking a special permit to run a bed and breakfast from her home. In discussions with Keville, the zoning board indicated it was uncomfortable with the parking configuration at her Stockbridge Street home, which would have forced guests to back out of the parking area. Backing a car onto a street is prohibited by Cohasset's bylaws.

Moore did not support the proposal because he felt the real issue was the bylaw against backing into traffic.

"This is a tough one, but I personally believe the problem is we have a zoning requirement that prevents you from backing out into traffic," Moore said. "It is a complex matter and there may be more at issue here. This opens the door for a lot of uses, and says anyone can have a bed and breakfast without ever asking anyone for permission."

Moore pointed out that Keville withdrew her application from the zoning board out of fear that it would be rejected.

"While this woman should probably get a special permit, she has never actually been denied," Moore said. "We have a working system in place."

Selectmen also voted 3-2 to support the bed and breakfast.

Sewer cost overrun complex issue to spell out

By Mary Ford
MARINER STAFF

If Monday's selectmen's meeting was indicative, then how to explain the $2.7 million cost overrun of the North Cohasset sewer project to voters at the March 28 town meeting may be a tough task.

Town meeting must authorize spending the additional money for phases three and four of the now $9.3 million project to go forward.

Selectmen, sewer commissioners, and town engineers spent the better part of two hours Monday rehashing the cost drivers for the project. Soaring prices per linear foot of pipe, blasting ledge, liability issues relating to private property and even "The Big Dig" (Boston's central artery project) which has drained the pool of contractors were included on the list of reasons for the 45 percent increase over estimates.

At the 1997 annual town meeting, voters appropriated $6.6 million to hook up about 330 homes in the north section of town to the Hull treatment plant.

A subsequent Prop. 2-1/2 override passed at the ballot box meaning half the cost of the project was to be picked up by all taxpayers.

But when the bids came in $2.7 million

Deadbeat dad is running for Cohasset selectman

By Margo Sullivan

Selectman candidate William G. Ross is a deadbeat dad, according to Norfolk County court records supplied by a local woman. Margaret Litchfield of 175 Beechwood St. said Wednesday he owes her more than $23,000 in child support payments. According to Litchfield, the court found Ross in contempt Nov. 30, 1994. A family court justice sentenced him to 30 days in jail after he failed to comply with a court order to provide $50 a week for his son. Ross served time in the Dedham House of Corrections over Thanksgiving and Christmas of 1994.

Ross had no comment on the matter for the time being. He reserved the right to respond to the allegations later and clarify certain facts. He said the revelations coming at this time could be "damaging" to his legal defense.

Ross's signature is legible on an April 1986 notarized statement acknowledging he is the child's natural father. However, he denied signing the document. He has never taken a blood test to determine paternity, he said. And his name is not on the child's birth certificate. According to a letter to the court from Mary Anne McCarthy, the parentage testing coordinator at the DOR, Ross failed to appear three times for scheduled blood tests. His failure to appear in

Scituate sports center seeks town support

Scituate's plans for a state-of-the-art recreation center could have a Cohasset hook.

Officials behind the $10 million project say the center will cost about $1.5 million annually to run including about $700,000 to pay off the 20-year bond and $850,000 in operating costs.

They hope Cohasset residents will join the "Coastal Communities Recreation Center" which will include an Olympic size swimming pool, gym with a spring floor for gymnastics and ice skating rink. Plans are to build the 100,000-square-foot facility on the Ellis property off Route 3A near its intersection with Mann Lot Road - kiddy corner to the Sunoco station.

It is not clear if Cohasset residents would be charged out-of-town rates to join or use the facilities at the center or if the town of Cohasset would provide a sub-

For CHS exchange student

American stay is a dream come true

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

At 16 Rosa Hareiter of Vienna, Austria is living the American dream in Cohasset. She is spending a year as an exchange student with the Sandell family in Cohasset. Recently, Rosa described the experience as a dream come true. She has wanted to go to school in the United States ever since she can remember.

"Since I was a little girl, I always wanted to come here," she said. "For a European, America is a fascinating thing."

Rosa talked over her experiences in front of a roaring fireplace in the Sandell's kitchen. She has sampled a wide range of fascinating and sometimes dangerous things since she arrived. On a visit to Yale University, some of her friends witnessed a shooting in the New Haven neighborhood around the school. She was also astounded when she read the police log in the Mariner.

"I've never seen one of my friends getting arrested. I was shocked. I was amazed. How do so many people get arrested in one weekend?" In Vienna, people under 18 are never arrested, she said. Until age 18, she said, youths are not considered "independent."

She found other differences that were equally startling. Cohasset is a small town where everyone knows everyone else, unlike the city where many people are strangers. Yet American parents supervise their children more than Europeans, she said, so that teenagers seem to be considered children longer than she expected. At 18, young people in Vienna leave home. Even when they go to college, they have their own apartments.

"American parents are really protective," she said. "When I first came, it was one of the things I really noticed. It was a drastic difference." Also, teens in America work, something that seldom happens at home, Rosa said. She said her mother once told her to "be serious" when she asked if she could get a job.

"What's allowed here or what's common here does not happen there," she said.

Rosa said she came to see first hand how people in America live as well as to improve her command of English. It is one of six languages she speaks. She started on a seventh this year when she took up Spanish at Cohasset High.

"Most Europeans speak between three and five languages," she said, due to the variety of cultures in Europe. "There's no other way. We are surrounded by different languages and different cultures. When I am in Vienna, within an hour and a half travel in any direction, people speak a different language." Rosa said Europeans seem to learn other languages faster than Americans, but they all have to learn English to land a job. Americans do not have to learn a foreign language.

"Every single person in the world needs to learn English to get a good job," she said. "But Americans don't have to learn other languages."

Rosa would like to return to the United States for college after she completes high school in Austria. She has visited Harvard, Yale and colleges in Washington, D.C. Though she agreed some of the small American colleges also provide a top-notch education, big names count in Europe.

"It's sort of ridiculous," she said. "About getting a job in Europe, the one thing that counts is the big name of the school."

After she finishes her education, Rosa said she has dreams about becoming an actress. She was impressed by the Cohasset High production of "Godspell." She wanted to try out for a part but at the start of the school year, she was afraid her English was not good enough. She has become more confident now and is working with a drama club, though she has volunteered for backstage jobs.

"There are dreams," she said. "It sounds really stupid, but I always dreamed I would become a famous actress. I guess I will do something with art. It's in my blood. My whole family are architects—both grandparents and both my parents."

Her background made her a perfect match for the Sandell family. James Sandell is an architect, and the family been in international exchange programs for many years. Nancy Sandell said Rosa is the fifteenth student who has come to live with them.

"I think we've found this exchange enriches our family. But the whole community also benefits from having someone new in our town." Nancy Sandell said.

Rosa spoke at the Diversity program. She said the experience has been "more than positive" and she has learned people are truly different.

"I learned a lot," she said. "I learned the difference between cultures. I learned how different people actually can be. I never realized it before."

Rosa said her new friends in America were friendly and kind. She has particularly enjoyed her junior varsity soccer team. Sports are not taken seriously in Austria, she said. She loved the teamwork and team spirit. The team improved with every game, she said.

Public rest rooms in the village to be considered

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Selectmen say the addition of public rest rooms in the village is worth considering if issues of maintenance and accessibility can be worked out.

Dean Rizzo, vice president of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce, asked selectmen this week to hold off selling the Independence Building on South Main Street until the possibility of using the site for rest rooms and a visitor center could be looked into.

Although he couldn't think of other towns with public bathrooms, Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan conceded other towns have more restaurants with rest rooms.

"It's worth exploring," Sullivan said. "But we need to know the associated expenses."

He suggested electronic locks that lock up at dusk might be worth investigating.

Rizzo said he believed Gloucester and Rockport have public rest rooms.

"I will contact them to get ideas on how they handle them," Rizzo said.

"With a visitors' center and rest rooms, we could bring the building back to its original character."

— DEAN RIZZO, VICE PRESIDENT OF THE COHASSET CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Some local businesses say the lack of rest rooms is a major problem in the village.

Rizzo also sits on the Village Revitalization Task Force which spearheaded the recent effort to obtain a state grant to rebuild the sidewalk that runs below St. Stephen's Church and in front of the Independence Building, currently being used as a Teen Center.

Responding to concerns from Selectman Ronnie McMorris, Rizzo said sidewalk plans include a ramp system into the Independence Building.

He said renovations to the building would fit in nicely with the sidewalk proposal.

"With a visitors' center and rest rooms, we could bring the building back to its original character," he said.

The Independence Building, which served as the police department in the early part of the century, still has the original cells. The Teen Center plans to relocate to the former DPW garage in the town parking lot.

School budget and separation of powers

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

• See related story on page 5

School board member Ralph Kidder borrowed a term from political science when he called the division between school board and municipal government responsibilities "the separation of powers." He is not the first to grapple with the complex question of where to draw the line between the school board's authority and the role of other elected officials. The definition of the school board's precise role can be thorny, according to Jan Feldman, a spokeswoman at the state Department of Education.

"It's a real involved question," she said. Basically, the school committee has sole authority for deciding the education spending priorities. The selectmen and the public (at town meeting, for instance) may recommend certain items get increased or decreased. But neither a town meeting vote or a selectman's speech can "limit the school committee's authority," she said.

Nonetheless, the school board still has to work with the money the community gives it. Feldman said the school board's role in the budget process is part of the Education Reform Act of 1993. The law gives school boards a December 1999 deadline to make sure the community's budget meets or beats a spending target established by the state called the "per pupil expenditure."

Selectmen should stay out of school budget, Kidder says

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Veteran school board member Ralph Kidder has blasted the selectmen for meddling in the school department's audit report. The selectmen at a meeting March 2 hashed over some of the questions the audit raised with members of the school board. Kidder, who watched the scene on television, said he the peppering of questions from the selectmen had his school board "colleagues squirming uncomfortably." After that, Kidder, in a brief prepared statement delivered at the March 5 school committee meeting, said the audit was no excuse for the selectmen to dig into the school department's books. He dubbed their "input" to be "improper by law" since the school board has sole authority for education spending.

The audit, conducted by Tucci and Roselli, raised questions about the way money is moved between accounts, or sections, of the school department budget to cover shortfalls when no money is left in an account. It suggested the school board should do more to supervise the deficit money transfers which currently are decided by the superintendent. Kidder did not say the school board should adopt the recommendation. But he did object to explaining budget adjustments to the selectmen. "The school committee is under no obligation to discuss transfers within its operating budget with elected officials," he said.

He also stood by his characterization of the selectmen's deliberations as "arbitrary and capricious." He particularly objected to selectman Diane Sullivan's question about the price the school department paid for tool sharpening.

"I stand by my statement the selectmen were arbitrary and capricious," he said. How else are we to account for Diane Sullivan's asinine question about spending $1500 to sharpen tools?"

Kidder ended his statement by urging the public to "wake up and smell the flowers."

But later Kidder also complimented the selectmen for changing their vote on school spending.

"The board of selectmen deserve credit for coming around," he said. "It was the right thing to do." Kidder said the school committee has to "put the message across" about the schools' needs. He is stepping down next month after nine years on the school committee. Several weeks ago, he vowed to go out fighting for the schools.

Sewer cost overrun a complex issue to spell out higher than expected in January, sewer commissioners were left scrambling for ways to cover the extra cost without getting mired in another legal battle with the state. The town is under a court order to clean up its septic problems or face hefty state fines.

On March 28, town meeting voters will be asked to approve the additional spending contingent on a positive Prop. 2-1/2 override vote on April 4 which would pick up half the cost of the increase, about $1.3 million. If successful, the override would add about $17 a year to the annual tax bill of a home assessed at $330,000 and keep the 50/50 shared user/town payment plan voted a year ago.

If the override fails, North Cohasset homeowners will pick up the entire cost of the overrun which will translate into about 63 percent of total project's costs. The increase, which would be assessed through betterments, will add about $340 more a year for 20 years to the real estate bill of each affected homeowner.

Sewer commissioners don't expect town meeting to reject the additional appropriation because the money would not come from the tax base.

But at Monday's meeting, a handful of residents said the town should reject the sewer article and force the sewer commission to re-bid phases three and four of the North Cohasset project.

Town Counsel Paul DeRensis warned that if town meeting approves the additional spending, the project should not be re-bid. He explained that bidders were asked to extend their bids until after town meeting with the understanding the bid would be awarded. Not to award the bids could open the town up to lawsuits, he said.

But if the town rejects the article asking for additional funding, the project could be re-bid and lumped together with the Central Cohasset project. The $13.4 million Central Cohasset project will upgrade the town's wastewater treatment plant and extend service to about 600 homes not currently on the sewer.

"If town meeting refuses to fund it, that (re-bidding) is an option," DeRensis said. "But that could put us in deep granola with the state."

Phases one and two involve installing mains on all streets in the North Cohasset area, buying into the Hingham pump station, buying capacity in the Hull treatment plant, covering all engineering to date, and installing sewer service to the Straits Pond area, which has been deemed by the state as an Area of Critical Environmental Concern (ACEC). Phases three and four involve hooking the remaining homes in North Cohasset up to the sewer main. North Cohasset homes will be hooked up to the sewer line via a pump system due to the high amount of ledge. This type of hook-up is more complicated and expensive than the gravity system slated for Central Cohasset.

Selectmen tossed around the idea of asking those in phases 3 & 4 to pay for their own hookups.

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan asked town engineers for a cost comparison of the town vs. individual homeowners paying for the hookups.

But Selectman Ronnie McMorris warned that those affected homeowners voted for the sewer project last year with the understanding they would be connected to the sewer main.

Sewer commissioner Gary Vanderweil explained state grants are an important part of the project. The "grant equivalent funding" provides 50 percent equivalent grants to hookup homes to the sewer. The town obtains the loan from the state at a favorable interest rate which affected homeowners can repay over 20 years. If homeowners are on their own, they would have to arrange their own financing or pay for the connection estimated at about $12,000 per home up front, he said.

School budget hearing is on tap tonight

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

The school board members are expected Thursday to pull together and back the $8.17 million school budget with a show of unity. Veteran school board member Ralph Kidder said the night would mark the iculminationî of the budget talks ongoing for four months. He doubted the bottom line would change but said the board might adjust spending, based on opinions from teachers, parents and the public. His colleague Joseph McElroy, who has been in the thick of a feud with Kidder, predicted Wednesday the open hearing on education finances will probably not be dull. The public also gets an opportunity to comment after the presentation by schools superintendent Stephen Hart. The program starts at 7:30 p.m. in the AV room at the high school.

Monday, Hart did not answer questions from a Mariner reporter about the upcoming budget talk. He deemed the questions pre-mature in advance of the hearing Thursday. A copy of the budget was available for review in the superintendentís office.

With the public hearing pending, McElroy appeared to soften his opinion of the school boardís financial stewardship. He wrote several position letters to the newspaper editor over the past weeks. In them, he predicted the school committee would fall short of producing a itop-notch budgetî until November 1998. While not changing his forecast, he said in a telephone interview the school department overall has done a good job of building the budget. He said there was still room for improvement and repeated his belief the real improvements are still about a year away.

McElroy based his view on a study of the 1996 and 1997 fiscal years. Because a budgetís success can only be tested in hindsight, he compared the actual paid expenses to the allowances made in the budget. (For instance, if the budget provided $2,800 for high school science classroom materials and only $1,400 was actually spent on the materials, the forecast was not accurate, even though there was no red ink.) He concluded the school budget numbers came closer to the mark than the townís municipal budget for the past two years.

Since the 1998 fiscal year will not end until June 30, this yearís budget (FY99) cannot yet be evaluated so conclusively, however. The budget document Hart will present Thursday shows the prior yearís budget allowance, called the iappropriation,î but not the actual expenditures. The actual expenditures will not be known precisely until July after the books for the fiscal year are closed.

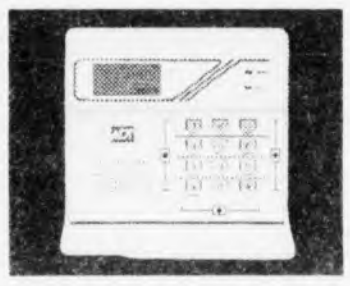
McElroy and Kidder have quarreled openly about a number of technical budget questions over the past weeks. Kidder particularly objected to one letter McElroy wrote. In that letter and in previous ones, McElroy pointed out special education expenses have proved one of the icost driversî in the budget. He has also previously said the school budget should provide for an special education based on past experience.

But Wednesday, McElroy appeared to reverse himself as he defended cuts in this yearís special education budget at the Deer Hill and the Osgood schools. He said those costs followed the student population and reflected known changes to date in the number of students enrolled in special needs programs. McElroy said he agreed with budgeting the next yearís expenses based on the ìlatest estimateî and did not hold the amounts should be increased to match the trend that has seen an eight percent uptick annually. He said that would call for budgeting for the iworst case scenarioî and would be unfair.

The budget overall shows the bulk of the education spending package will go for salaries.

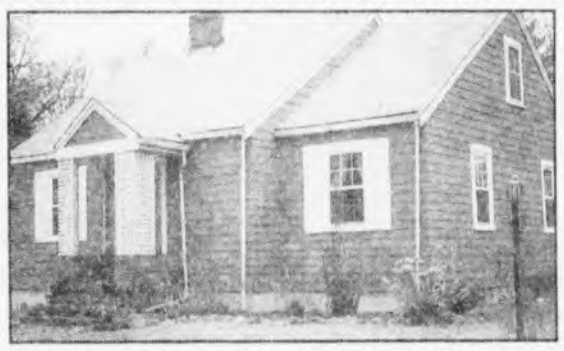
The total Deer Hill School budget now totals $1.6 million compared to the $1.45 million that was proposed earlier. However, that earlier proposal reflected cuts the superintendent asked the principal to make, based on the expectation the town would provide less money for education than the Town Manager ultimately has recommended. The latest draft of the budget for the Deer Hill School, compared to the earlier proposal the principal took before the school board, showed slight to substantial increases in all the items in the summary budget, except for special education which was actually reduced. On the latest increases, for instance, money for library, media and technology almost doubled, going from $49,168 to $98,286. That change reflected the $30,000 the selectmen belatedly agreed to tack onto the school budget. (The Deer Hill teachers had strongly indicated they wanted the extra funding to go towards the library. The teachers wrung a verbal commitment from the school board March 5.) But one other item showed even bigger increases. The maintenance budget better than doubled, climbing from $64,029 to $144,023. Money earmarked for the fourth, fifth and sixth grades jumped $12,000, while other categories had slight adjustments. Only choral music remained the same.

Special education was cut by $30,000 for the Deer Hill School budget.



McElroy was confident the adjustment down for special education reflected a genuine change. The $1,000 drop in the special education budget for the Osgood School, for instance, was due to a change in the number of classroom aides, he said. He also said he now was confident the school board Chairwoman Maureen Jerz reached a firm agreement with the Advisory Committee and the Town Manager. In their understanding, the school department will be able to go back to town meeting for extra money for special education.

Jerz did not return a telephone call to the Mariner to discuss the special education situation.



Fewer changes were made to the Osgood budget, compared to previous proposals. The total now comes to $1.6 million. About $32,000 extra went for the first-grade budget on top of the $14,000 increase over last yearís budget suggested earlier. Third grade dropped below last yearís budget numbers, while second grade held on to most of its gains, $12,000 of the $13,000 increase shown earlier. Maintenance showed a big gain, up by $18,000. In the previous budget draft, it inched up by only $325 over the last yearís number. Kidder said he was unsure why the maintenance budget at Deer Hill School was increased so much but thought the Osgood School maintenance budget increase was probably not out of line. Finally, the budget for the middle and high schools rose by roughly $300,000 compared to last year.

Deadbeat dad running for Cohasset selectman court led to a 1992 judgment of paternity against him.

Litchfield, whose son is now 12 years old, claimed she has seldom received payments from Ross. Although the court in 1991 ordered him to pay $50 a week (plus an extra $25 a week on back payments) he never sent the money. The Department of Revenue's child support enforcement division has only occasionally garnished his paychecks. He has avoided the payments by quitting his job when the DOR tracks him down, she said.

A spokeswoman for the DOR confirmed Litchfield's story. Diana Obbard said Ross has established a pattern of providing the state with false information about his employers and his home address. He has also established a pattern of quitting jobs once the state catches up with him.

"We have a thick folder on him," she said. "I cannot tell you how many times we have taken this man to court. There seems to be a determination not to pay."

Obbard said she sympathized with Litchfield. But she said the state has done everything it can to get her child support from Ross.

"He's been jailed for 30 days, and he still wouldn't pay," Obbard said. "We have sent countless wage allowances to his employers. We took his state and federal income tax refunds. But you cannot change someone's character. If someone refuses to work, our hands are tied." She also said the state has largely succeeded making deadbeat dads pay. Of 180,000 child support cases, about 860 are in default currently.

Litchfield said her doubts about the state's success was one of the reasons she came forward now with her story. But with the April 4 town election pending, she wanted to air her doubts about Ross's fitness to serve in town government. She also hoped negative publicity for the state program would draw attention to her plight and the cases of other single parents.

"I am appalled he is running for the board of selectmen," she said. "I'm certainly not naive. I don't believe everyone on the board of selectmen is perfect. But this man blatantly thumbs his nose at state laws. I don't believe an individual like Mr. Ross should be on the board of selectmen."

Litchfield said she has been in court since 1990 in an effort to get Ross to pay the child support. She said she was frustrated with the state because it has been unsuccessful getting him to pay. The state program has "huge problems," due to a lack of staffing, Litchfield said. More negative publicity about the state operation "might get things moving along," she said. Litchfield said Ross has been ordered to pay $85 a week, and $35 of the weekly total is to pay down the amount in arrears. But she has received only three or four payments from Ross through the state. She would have been homeless if her own family had not supported her. Litchfield is now employed as a special education bus driver. She has worked full time since her son was two years old, she said.

Scituate sports center seeks town support

sidy to keep the cost for its residents down.

Ralph Crossen president of Scituate's CRAG (Citizens Recreation Action Group) told selectmen this week the center would pay for itself through user fees not Scituate tax dollars and would likely be operated by a management company.

Cohasset selectmen said they'd like to hear more.

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan asked if CRAG was looking for a certain amount of money from Cohasset.

Crossen said some subsidy might keep the membership rate at $500 per family - the same amount proposed for Scituate families. Without subsidy, out-of-town memberships might be double that or $1,000, he said, pointing out that Scituate was supplying the land, financing and the leg work.

Town Manager Mark Haddad plans to get together with Scituate Town Administrator Richard Agnew once the feasibility study is completed in about 30 days.

"The next step is to start a dialog," Haddad said. "Once the feasibility study is done, we can get a better handle on finances."

Joseph McElroy of Windy Hill Road, who was the driving force behind the plan floated last year to enclose the Cohasset Swim Center off Sohier Street to make it a year-round facility, was enthusiastic about Scituate's plans.

"It's a huge, beautiful parcel of land in a perfect location," McElroy said.

He said plans to enclose the swim center at an estimated cost of about $1.2 million will not go forward because of lack of financial support for the project. McElroy planned to raise the money privately. The swim center is a non-profit organization run by a board of trustees.

McElroy said he hopes Cohasset tries to work a deal with Scituate to get subsidized rates for the recreation department and the schools to use the facility.

Lynn Durkin, 40 Hill Road, said a nearby recreational facility would be wonderful because of the travel time youngsters spend getting to skating rinks and pools. The nearest rinks are in Pembroke and Hingham and the pools used are in Duxbury and at UMass Boston in Dorchester.

"This is affecting everyone's family life," she said. "It's an opportunity and we can't afford to miss it."

CRAG will make the same presentation to the Norwell board of selectmen, Crossen said. He added the center would also draw from Marshfield Hills.

"It will be the first regional facility of this type in the area," he said. "It will be something the South Shore can be proud of."

Crossen said the South Shore Seahawks youth hockey program and Cape Cod Gymnastics have expressed interest in renting the new facilities which also will include a theraputic pool, dive tank, community rooms and playing fields.

Some Things to Know About Political Advertising

Newspapers reach almost 90% of adults each week. Their heaviest readership is among groups that are most likely to vote. These are the people who are actively involved in and concerned about their communities and the quality of life: professionals, high-income earners, well educated, ages 35-64.

Community Newspaper Company South offers an unparalleled variety of creative options with which to state your political case – page and placement options, large and small space opportunities, continuity, color along with customized slipsheets.

Whether you're a candidate, campaign manager, or media director, we'll help you decide how to best utilize your campaign dollars.

POLITICAL ADVERTISING GUIDELINES

★ Placement of political advertisements will be accepted on a first come, first serve basis. Guaranteed preferred placement allows the candidate to pick a specific page number, not a specific location on that page. Guaranteed preferred placement will be charged an additional 25% premium. Minimum size for preferred placement is 10 column inches.
★ Pre-payment of all political ads is required, with no exceptions. Cash, check or credit cards are accepted.
★ Deadline for political advertisements is 5 business days prior to publication date. Proofs will be available if submitted at least one week prior to publication.
★ Retail rates apply. Contract rate may apply if the candidate signs a contract and pays in advance the total dollars committed per the agreement.
★ In accordance with Massachusetts laws Chapter 56, Section 39, all political advertisements must be accompanied by a signed authorization statement. Political advertisements must also be accompanied by a Community Newspaper Company indemnification and Limitation of Liability Agreement. Forms are available from your local Community Newspaper Company office. You are welcome to as many as you require.
★ The designation "Political Advertisement" must run above each column of the advertisement.
★ The advertisers/candidates are responsible for the accuracy of the content of material being presented in their advertising, including written permission for the use of photographic likenesses for persons other than the candidate and endorsements.
★ All ads must be submitted in legible handwriting or typewritten form.
★ In the last issue of the newspaper prior to any election, political advertisements in which it is clear that the intent is to deny opponents time for rebuttal will not be accepted. All ads are accepted at the discretion of the publisher.
★ All advertisements must be bordered and use a typeface distinct from the news typeface.
★ All political ads need to include the affiliation of the organization placing the ad, name, title and address (i.e., Citizens to Elect John Doe, Mary Smith, Treasurer, 123 Main St., Weymouth, MA 02190).

GOOD WISHES TO QUITE A GAL

We would like to start off by sending good wishes to quite a gal — Helen Watson is the lady we are talking about, and we've not seen her around town in recent days! Every time you see Helen she has a smile that lights up the whole room — she has a sense of humor that is exceptional, and is dearly loved by all who know her! We are certain that once spring has officially arrived, she'll be out and about, and we can't wait! In the meantime, take good care of yourself and know that we are all thinking about you!

MEMORIAL FUND SEEKS DONATIONS

Here is something that will be of interest to many local history buffs — the Antoine and Wilson Memorial Fund is seeking donations for the construction of a monument to preserve the significance of the night when two young men and the original Minot Lighthouse were lost to the sea. They are hopeful your special interests might include projects to preserve historical events. Memorializing these two men and the original lighthouse is significant to the history of New England. In 1851, during the worst storm of that century, the light keeper (Capt. Bennett) flagged for a ship to go ashore. His two assistants, Antoine and Wilson, stayed to keep the light burning and the bell ringinig. The storm-tossed see rose to 50 feet. On April 17, about 1 a.m., the lighthouse bell was heard ringing furiously . . . then there was silence. The next morning the sea subsided, but the lighthouse was lost to the ocean, and the two men were lost performing their duty. In an area rich in history and proud of its heritage, two very brave men, Joseph Antoine and Joseph Wilson, have somehow been overlooked for 146 years.

On Government Island, with Bancroft Hall and the Minot Light replica, they will erect a granite monument to these two young men. The monument will be made of solid polished black granite. It will rest on a base designed as a compass rose and constructed with polished black granite, brick and cobblestone. Please send donations, made payable to the Antoine and Wilson Memorial Fund, to Hingham Institution for Savings, 13 Elm St., Cohasset. Be proud to take part in this exciting Cohasset project!

Cabaret '98 is coming soon

Growing bigger, bolder and more hilarious each year, Cabaret '98, "Radio WUU, 199.8 on your dial, playing the hits of yesterday and today," is in rehearsal at First Parish under the inspired leadership of music director Carolyn Curtis. Remember the Andrews Sisters, Fred and Ginger, Bob Hope, Simon and Garfunkle, Janis Joplin and Bob Dylan? The show recalls 50 years of radio music brought to life by a talented cast swelled by first-time performers.

An extra performance has been added this year to reduce crowding in Trueblood Hall in the Parish House at 23 North Main St. Opening night is at 8 p.m., Friday, March 20, preceded by a gala buffet at 7 p.m. There will be a repeat buffet and performance at identical times Saturday, March 21 and a matinee performance at 4 p.m., Sunday, March 22. MAY I PRESENT

Sallyann Chatterton

This is the time of year when we all begin to look for something different to prepare for meals! It seems that our taste buds are tired of the same things each week, to say nothing of our families moaning "Are we having that again?" Try the following, it is a change of pace that everyone will love.

DEVILED STEAK

1-1/2 pounds ground beef
1 cup milk
3 tablespoons finely chopped onion
3/4 cup cracker crumbs
2 tablespoons chopped parsley
1-1/2 teaspoons salt
1/4 teaspoon pepper
1/4 teaspoon mustard
1 tablespoon horseradish
6 strips bacon
6 thin slices sharp cheese

Mix together beef, milk, onion, crumbs and parsley. Blend salt, pepper and mustard, and add with horseradish to beef. Mix thoroughly. Shape lightly into oblong patties (six of them). Wrap a strip of bacon around each and secure with toothpicks. Place in shallow pan. During the last 15 minutes of baking place a slice of cheese on each patty.

With the deviled steak, serve paprika potatoes. You can cook both dishes at the same time, and they really compliment one-another!

PAPRIKA POTATOES

6 large potatoes
3/4 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon pepper
1/2 teaspoon paprika
1/4 cup melted butter

Wash, peel and slice potatoes 1/8 inch thick. Into greased 2-quart casserole place a layer of potatoes. Sprinkle with salt, pepper and paprika. Repeat until all potatoes are used. Over top of potatoes slowly pour melted butter. Cover tightly.

Preheat oven to 375 degrees. Place patties and potatoes in oven; at the end of 45 minutes baking time, arrange cheese slices on patties and bake 15 minutes longer. Total oven time 60 minutes.

Hope you and yours enjoy it!

What makes our bagels the best?

We make all of our dough and use only natural ingredients. There are no artificial flavorings or preservatives. It is used fresh, it is never frozen. We boil, then bake our dough daily. We never serve "day old" bagels. That is the only way to ensure the fresh and chewy taste of a really fresh bagel. Many bagel shops use dough that contains preservatives or artificial flavorings. Few shops bother to boil dough before baking it. Many bagel shops will bake dough that comes frozen, others use bagels that are partially cooked at the factory and "finished" on site. Finishing partially cooked bagels gives them a "day old" taste. It is no wonder that the large chains that offer bagels are facing difficult times. Analysts are wondering why the stock price of publicly traded bagel chains has dropped by as much as 50% in the last years. We feel that this drop is because the shareholders have now tasted their own bagels. Stop by and taste a real bagel.

What ever happened to winter?

One impulse from a vernal wood
May teach you more of man,
Of moral evil and of good.
Then all the sages can.

That's the poet William Wordsworth's paean to the coming of spring, a time when the first croci push their way out of the reborn earth and the first robins return from the Caribbean or wherever it is robins go for the winter.

The sub-freezing cold that grips our cars each frosty morning, the drifting snow that brings out the shovels and snow-blowers, the icy sidewalks that are the bane of our older folks; they're all behind us now.

We have only balmy days to look forward to, mornings on the beach (and don't forget that No. 15 sun screen), afternoons sailing lazily on the bay, evenings in shirtsleeves in the bleachers at Fenway Park rooting for the old town team. We don't do all these things but they are possible.

All this starts Friday, March 20, precisely at 2:55 in the afternoon, the vernal equinox, the day and time when the sun passes over the equator, when the days equal the nights in length, and the promise of more and more sunlight lies ahead.

We, who stand ready to greet the spring in the year 1998, have only one question: What to heck ever happened to winter?

Since the first of the year, by the National Weather Service count, only 22 inches of snow has fallen in the South Shore area. Shoot, more than that has descended in one fell swoop in the old days. We called them "blizzards."

Not that we're complaining, but we haven't had a decent blizzard since January 1996, and before that March of 1993 and before that February, 1978, the winter storm by which the younger generation measures all others.

Since the first of the year, again by National Weather Service count, the temperature has been a cumulative total of 329 degrees above the average winter, at times even threatening to all time high for the day. That's the South Shore, not Miami Beach.

Some blame El Nino, the warm trans-Pacific current that appears periodically around Christmastime and disrupts normal weather patterns. Others tend to blame Bill Clinton, but that's another story for another time.

And all that leads to another question — can we enjoy spring as much as usual when we don't even remember winter? Maybe not, but at 2:55 p.m. Friday we're sure going to try.

Kidder responds to McElroy

To the Editor:

I have been privileged to serve as a member of the Cohasset School Committee for nearly nine years. In all that time, despite vigorous disagreements on matters of principle and policy, I have never publicly criticized one of my colleagues. But as the songster so aptly put it, "all good things must end some day."

Four points from Joe McElroy's March 12 letter to the Cohasset Mariner illustrate that he can be characterized most charitably as a loose cannon on the School Committee who does not seem to understand the concept of team work and who persists in demonstrating publicly and privately his lack of understanding, his disregard of facts and his apparently insatiable need to hear himself speak, all to the detriment of the Cohasset Public Schools:

1) Mr. McElroy asserts that "if we are to compete with charter and private schools, we must compensate based on merit — not longevity." While a laudable goal which I have supported for years (and introduced in negotiations with the teacher's union), and while a typical McElroy sound bite, this assertion ignores reality. Public school teachers are unionized. No one and especially not someone who in 10 months has alienated so many teachers — can unilaterally impose merit-based compensation. This assertion demonstrates Mr. McElroy's fundamental misunderstanding of the collective bargaining process.

2) Mr. McElroy says he "strongly objects" to the salary reserve section of the school budget and implies that a secret cabal with evil intentions made "pay increase decisions" during a "seven-week hiatus in school committee meetings" last summer. First, this assertion demonstrates Mr. McElroy's complete lack of understanding of the salary reserve, which is nothing more than a sum of money set aside each year to grant pay increases to non-union employees. Second, this assertion also demonstrates that Mr. McElroy is clueless about the Education Reform Act of 1993, which charges superintendents, not School Committee members, with responsibility for granting such pay increases. Third, where was Mr. McElroy while all of these dastardly deeds allegedly were being done since he was, after all, a member of the School Committee last summer? Finally, I deeply resent Mr. McElroy's implication that something nefarious was occurring. I'll pit my integrity against his any day.

3) The School Committee has in all my years as a member cooperated fully with the Selectmen, the Advisory Committee and this year with the new Town Manager. If such were not the case, this town would have been faced with the prospect of several Town Meeting floor fights and Proposition 2-1/2 override elections over the last five or six years to provide additional (and some would argue appropriate) levels of funding for the schools. Instead, each year, your town leaders have found common ground and have come before you with compromise positions that all boards have supported. However, cooperation does not and should not mean kow-towing, especially when several of our selectmen persist in disregarding their legally mandated role. The "separation of powers" which I advocate, and which Mr. McElroy clearly does not understand, is a concept fundamental to the operation of local governments in Massachusetts, namely that the elected members of the School Committee have the legal and fiduciary duty to oversee spending by the school department, while no other boards have any rights or obligations in this matter, especially with respect to within-budget transfers.

4) Mr. McElroy states that he "has chosen to make public my concerns because the School Committee has never voted on our budget." Of course the School Committee

QUESTION OF THE WEEK

Last week's question:

Some elected board members have never seen an executive session they didn't like. Others are circumventing the law by holding working sessions without quorums so meetings don't have to be posted.

Is the Opening Meeting Law something to be embraced or avoided?

SELECTMAN/Rocco F. Laugelle

The Open Meeting Law is a good law and I support it. It's there to protect the people and to make sure that they know what is going on in their government.

I would also like to make a few comments on the use of call firefighters. Trained call firefighters are important in that they provide needed support to the permanent men. Until a better way is found to for the permanent men to meet all the needs of the department and the town, the call firefighters should stay in place.

SELECTMAN/Tom Callahan

Of course the law should be adhered to. That said, the use of subcommittees and working groups is not problematic, per se, but like anything else, becomes so if abused. Sometimes, the details of complicated issues are best sifted through by a few board members. Division of labor on a busy board provides advantages in getting all issues addressed in a timely manner. On the Conservation Commission, we have used such tools occasionally. However, we have always strictly followed some basic rules: 1) the place and time of the subgroup's meeting should be announced and be open to the public (unless properly appropriate for executive session), b) the sub-group can never make a binding decision for the full board and c) the work of any sub-group is fully reported to and ratified by the full board. My view is that sub-groups should be used only as an administrative convenience in dealing with complex issues, and never as a substitute for full-board action, never outside the control of the full board and unless appropriate for executive session, never in secret. It is simply a matter of following the law in any meeting context, quorum or no quorum. To avoid any misunderstanding of these simple rules and the law, and to the extent we have any current abuse, I suggest having town officials, citizens and the press take part in a refresher course on the law offered by town counsel or the DA's office, and repeat that training every so often.

SELECTMAN/Martha Gjesteby

The Open Meeting Law must be followed. It is the law, Chapter 39, Section 23b, of Massachusetts general law. The law requires open discussion and decisions of all sub-committees and full board meetings.

The few areas when executive sessions may be held are: competence of an individual other than professional, discipline or dismissal of public employees, strategy of collective bargaining or litigation if the town might be harmed, security devices, discussion of real property acquisition when negotiation might be compromised, criminal misconduct complaints, provisions of state and federal grant in aid requirements, preliminary screening of applicants for employment by subcommittees and meeting with mediators in regard to litigation or decision.

All minutes of meetings shall be made available to the public detailing action, time, date and those present. Meetings should be held at convenient times and locations for the public to attend. The supervisor of records requires all regular meeting minutes and correspondence to a committee released in 10 days or less upon request.

I am a strong advocate of the right of the people to know how a town does its business. Democracy is in peril if candidates for town election must be asked about the Open Meeting law as a question of the week.

SELECTMAN/Merle S. Brown

I strongly believe in the open meeting law.

As you know, I have not always agreed on going into executive session. However, the law, like most laws, is often hard to interpret. There is a fine line between what is executive, and what is not. There are eight different criteria to call an executive session.

1. To discuss the reputation, character, physical condition or mental health of an employee.
2. To consider the discipline or dismissal of, or to hear complaints or charges brought against, a public officer or employee.
3. To discuss strategy with respect to collective bargaining or litigation.
4. To discuss the deployment of security personnel or devices.
5. To investigate charges of criminal misconduct or to discuss the filing of criminal complaints.
6. To consider the purchase, exchange, lease or value of real property.
7. To comply with the provisions of any general or special law or federal grant-in-aid requirements.
8. To consider and interview applicants for employment by a preliminary screening committee.

These eight criteria are a very short version of the law and do not show all the complexities that go into what is, or is not, executive session material. I firmly believe that the selectmen sincerely want to conform to the law and have gone into executive session only when they felt it was in the best interest of the town and those involved.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Mark DeGiacomo

I believe that the Open Meeting Law is very important and must be understood and respected by town officials and the press. The Open Meeting Law (M.G.L. c.29 Section 23B) is quite specific concerning what can be discussed outside of a posted meeting and what can be discussed during an executive session. As an attorney and chairman of the Zoning Board of Appeal, I have always conducted ZBA meetings in strict conformity with the Open Meeting Law. During the 14 years I have served on the Zoning Board of Appeal, no one has ever claimed that we have acted in a violation of this statute. During my tenure, the only time the ZBA ever went into executive session was for the specific purpose of meeting with Town Counsel concerning pending litigation.

While strict adherence by public officials to the Open Meeting Law is very important, it is also important that the press understand what the Open Meeting Law is and what it is not. An allegation that a board has violated this statute is a very serious matter and should be made only by persons who are very familiar with the statute and are fully informed concerning the facts surrounding any alleged violation. There are times when executive sessions are absolutely necessary in order to protect the best interests of the town. Members of the press should be vigilant but they should not automatically assume that every executive session is being called merely to hide something from them.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Hugh Morgan

It is terribly important that elected officials encourage public participation if we are to have participatory local government. It may cause longer meetings, but the deliberations will reflect thoughtful consideration and greater consensus. An executive session may be justified to protect a person's legitimate concerns for privacy or because legal implications may necessitate. However, the Open Meeting Law has repeatedly been "fine-tuned" by court challenges. The law protects personal privacy while respecting the public's rights. The Open Meeting Law is part of a legal triangle whose other footings are the Freedom of Information Act and the Privacy Act.

If elected, I would totally respect the aforementioned statues. Of curse, there are situations that necessitate a judgment call. In those instances, I would place my confidence in the public and vote against going into executive session.

A recent example of where I would have handled things differently is the Sept. 20 School District Strategic Planning Meeting. Only four or five hours were available to cover a very broad agenda. However, the public didn't need to be excluded. The superintendent and school committee could have asked for written questions and comments and provided answers following the meeting.

It's not fair to ask the public to appropriate a town budget approximating $16,000,000 without the fullest opportunity for public comment.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE/ Pat Martin

For the benefit of all involved, the Open Meeting Law must be unquestionably and without hesitation embraced, and to avoid problems, astringently practiced by both our elected officials and members of the public.

As stated in "A Guide to Open Meetings" written for the League of Women Voters by Mary Adelstein, "Open meetings may increase public understanding of governmental actions, (and) make officials, both elected and appointed, accountable to the public for the actions they take."

The Open Meeting Law applies to and should be practiced within every meeting of most public bodies. There are a few exceptions, however. In regard to the comment that "some officials never met an executive session they didn't like," it must be understood that there are seven reasons for holding executive session which closes the meeting to public access. They can be translated into the following activities: hiring and evaluation, consideration of reputation; character and heath; firing and disciplinary action; litigation; collective bargaining; purchase of real estate; security measures; investigation of criminal complaints and other laws. Field trips, conventions and workshops are also exempt from the law.

Like so many other laws, The Open Meeting Law is understandably long on its procedures, applications and exceptions. It is, therefore, my feeling that all elected officials should become educated to the law. To assist the public at large, an open meetings guidebook should be made available at every meeting. This practice, if not already in place, would allow for a quick consultation and answer should the question of a meeting arise.

SEWER COMMISSION/ Patrick A. Plante

To answer your question, is the Open Meeting Law something to be embraced or avoided, it is very clear to me that Section 23B of the Open Meeting Law clearly states the mandate of what is legal at every meeting of a governmental body.

As each new member is elected to a board, the board chairman should be responsible for circulating copies of the Open Meeting Law, so that sitting members, as well as newly-elected members, are fully aware of all the rules and regulations set forth in this law.

As a candidate for sewer commission, I would like to add another dimension to Open Meetings. Board Meetings in the Town of Cohasset should be scheduled at a convenient hour in order to accommodate a large number of our residents. It is inconsiderate for the Sewer Commission to post monthly meetings for 6 p.m. — when a large number of working men and women driving back home to Cohasset from their out-of-town places of employment are still held up in traffic!

SEWER COMMISSION/ Henry Rattenbury

As far as I can remember, the Sewer Commission has never had an executive session on its own, although the Commissioners have met in executive session with the Boards of Selectmen and Health with regard to pending litigation with the state.

The part of the question dealing with minority working committees does not apply to the Sewer Commission because two members constitute a quorum. I have observed, however, that minority working subcommittees of five- or six-member boards are efficient and effective on matters such as the interviewing of candidates for a town position.

HEALTH BOARD/Steve Bobo

The effectiveness of a board is in the melding of the unique skills and talents of its members. Meaningful discourse about the town's problems can lead to good solutions. Such discussions are appropriately done out of the public spotlight, and may be done at unscheduled meetings. Lack of a quorum is just another way of saying that decisions affecting the public may be discussed, but decisions may not be made. On the other hand, scheduled meetings are one of the tools the system uses to help run things in an orderly way. When board members make decisions affecting townspeople, the meetings should be open. And since those appearing at scheduled meetings have taken the trouble to attend, it's patronizing and unfair when they are denied the right to listen. Public officials should bend over backward to keep scheduled meetings open.

has not yet voted this year's budget. Why? Because it is illegal to vote the budget until a public hearing (scheduled for March 19) is held. Does Mr. McElroy not know this? Or is he using this as a smoke screen to obfuscate the real reasons for his rambling, inaccurate and ultimately harmful public diatribe?

I stand by my prior remarks — Mr. McElroy in his current iteration is a detriment to the Cohasset Public Schools. Perhaps he will grow into the job. But parents and other taxpayers ought to remain vigilant to be sure that he does.

Truly a community effort

To the Editor:

The Red Cross wishes to thank all those involved in the Cohasset community blood drive held Jan. 14 for making it a success. Congratulations and thanks to the 95 individuals who arrived that day to "give the gift of life:" Bill Adams, Connie Afshar, Karen Aherne, Dick Avery, Sandra Bailey of Hingham, Clyde Baker, Gloria Bamford of Scituate, Janice Batts, George Baumgarten, Robert Beggan, Victoria Berger, Ann Berman of Hull, Evelyn Beveridge, Michael Bleakie, Dorian Brady, David Brown of North Weymouth, Beverley Burgess, Fraser Cameron, Jack Cibelli, Shirley Cibelli, Joseph Coggins, Joseph Curley, Joshua Cutler of Hull, Retta Dwyer, Gerry Earle, Pam Earle, Louis Eaton Jr., Lily Emanuello, Grace Evans, Elaine Fahey, John Flanagan, Verdella Fletcher, Crispian G. The Red Cross and the Cohasset community would especially like to recognize the following active donors who have donated blood more than 80 times through the Cohasset community blood drive: Louis F. Eaton (121) the most prolific supporter in Cohasset, Bob Beggan (89), Wayne Robbins (83) and John Glutting (82). Just as impressive was the appearance of Caroline Cameron, a sophomore at Cohasset High School, to donate her first time. She brought along her dad, Fraser, who donated, but was herself just under the minimum age of 16 required by the Red Cross. She wasn't able to give blood this time but promised to be back again after her next birthday.

In addition to all those heroes listed above, there were many others generous with their time who organized the event, called or organized prospective donors to schedule appointments and many people who worked the day of the Blood Drive to help with registration, the canteen and as donor escorts. These included: Bill Adams, Bob Barrows, Mary Brennock, Vernita Bryant, Marcia Coe, Corinne Cahill, Ruth Delay, Retta Dwyer, Tony Finnegan, Loise Flint, Karen and Steve Gammon, Jean Higgins, Ozzie Ingraham, Patsy Leggat, Harold Litchfield, Jane Marsh, Mary McElroy, Janet MacLure, Ann O'Connor, Kevin O'Connor, Maggie O'Connor, Al Odermatt, Carol Riley, Virginia Riley, Wayne Robbins, Joan Trask and Jen Vacca. Our youngest group of volunteers from the Girl Scouts helped out at nearly every blood drive providing baby sitting for parents with young children. Girl Scouts this time included: Caitlin Condon, Kristen James, Kerry Long and Rachel McElroy.

The Red Cross welcomes any new individuals who are able to donate blood, any organizations which would like to work with the Cohasset community blood drive to organize their own donors for each blood drive and, of course, volunteers to help on or before the day of each blood drive. Please call Kevin or Ann O'Connor at 383-1290. The next blood drive will take place in June. As you can see, it is truly a Cohasset community effort, so please offer whatever help you can for this life-giving activity.

Disappointed at shrillness of letters

To the Editor:

As a graduate, parent of graduates, long-ago member of management and long-time observer of the Cohasset school system, I offer a few observations on the current exchange of rather disagreeable letters to the editor:

* On the basis of performance of its products over the years, the schools seem to have done a pretty good job in a period of changing times~ interests and requirements. I haven't noted any consistent, persistent, documented complaint on this score, which would seem to be the ultimate objective.

* In the matter of costs, relative to the expectations of a concerned constituency, the system doesn't seem wildly out of line...usually quite in keeping with comparable communities. This is not to say that some economies, especially those not affecting the objective of education, may always be possible.

* As to teachers' salaries, these, like those of employees everywhere, are subject to the marketplace, like it or not. This applies whether or not a union is involved, although that conditions the salary-setting process and its implementation. Again Cohasset seems in line. There is often some eye-opening and conditioning apparent in new committee members.

* Further to teachers' compensation, "merit salary" has long been a rallying cry of neophytes. Several facts obtain: given different teaching styles and great variety among their clients, teacher evaluation is a subjective, imprecise process; moreover there is always quiet, subtle teacher evaluation going on within the bounds of staff harmony, which itself is an important management concerni and one or two less than spectacular teachers in a child's lifetime can do little harm...may even do some good.

All of this to express disappointment at the shrillness of the current letter writing.

DEP is investigating Cohasset Heights violations

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) is investigating two separate cases in which the Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill either allegedly overfilled the facility or placed refuse in an unpermitted area.

The zoning board of appeals is considering whether to take action against CHL for dumping a 7,800 square-foot pile of refuse in an area of the landfill not permitted for dumping. And the health board has taken under advisement revelations that CHL may have overfilled the legally permitted portion of the landfill with as much as 280 million pounds of excess material. DEP is also investigating both matters.

"We are investigating, and have been doing so for several months," said Edward MacDonald, DEP's regional engineer for waste prevention in the northeast region. "I am not at liberty to discuss these matters since they involve potential enforcement action."

Currently, CHL is embroiled in several matters that could ultimately lead to enforcement by local or state officials. All of the violations were discovered by John K. McNabb Jr., vice president of the anti-landfill group SAFE (Stop Any Further Expansion). McNabb said it's not too hard to find a CHL violation.

"If you can't find a violation by CHL, then you're not really looking," McNabb said.

The zoning board is considering two appeals by CHL of cease and desist orders issued by Building Inspector Robert Egan.

Egan issued a cease and desist order On Jan. 12 ordering CHL to shut down because former landfill owner James Tyeryar did not file a special permit issued by the zoning board with the Norfolk County Registry of Deeds. CHL owner Paul Barry also did not file the permit after he purchased the landfill.

The special permit to operate a landfill was issued by the zoning board in 1976, but Tyeryar never filed it with the county. Under state law, special permits take effect only after being filed with the county clerk.

Egan ruled that CHL is in violation of the town's 1986 Water Resource District Bylaw, which prohibits any landfill from operating in the district unless it was in lawful operation before enactment of the law. A large portion of the landfill sits in the district.

The second violation came last November when McNabb discovered that CHL had placed refuse in an area of the facility not approved for landfilling.

On Jan. 29, Egan issued a second cease and desist order against CHL for placing refuse in the unapproved section, Area IV-B, and ordered the removal of all refuse.

One of CHL's owners, Paul Barry, admitted placing the refuse in Area IV-B, but said it was placed there accidentally, and that the material had been capped in 1989 when landfilling ceased in that part of the facility.

CHL appealed Egan's decision, saying it could not remove the refuse without approval from DEP and the health board because of possible environmental damage. CHL officials claim they are awaiting instructions from DEP and the health board.

Zoning board Chairman Mark DeGiacomo said McNabb recently appealed the building inspector's decision not to fine CHL for failing to remove the refuse in Area IV-B.

CHL attorney Anton Moehrke said all the violations have been brought about by a group that exists solely to shut down the CHL landfill.

"CHL has been called to task for a number of things that we're not really happy about," Moehrke said. "We've admitted to mistakes when we were wrong."

Moerhke said SAFE is using public resources to accomplish its private goal to shut down CHL.

Moehrke added that in some instances, like the material placed in Area IV-B, all environmental procedures were followed and the material was placed on a proper liner.

Cohasset Heights goes after town landfill

Officials from the Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill will meet with the conservation commission tonight to discuss alleged environmental abuses at the town's landfill.

CHL attorney Anton Moehrke said the town has initiated numerous actions against CHL while ignoring wetlands violations and scattered garbage at the town's facility. CHL has appeared before the conservation commission on past occasions complaining about the town's alleged lack of action against its own landfill. Moehrke said the town has a double-standard in which it goes after CHL for every violation while ignoring violations at the town's facility.

"There is garbage strewn all across the area, and two-to-three feet of silt in the wetlands," Moehrke said. "And we can't seem to get local environmental agencies, like the conservation commission and the health board, interested in these violations."

Moehrke added that there is an issue of equity at stake. The town should not have two separate but unequal standards for landfills. He also took the anti-landfill group SAFE (Stop Any Further Expansion) to task for constant attacks on CHL but no demonstrated interest in violations at the town landfill.

"This group turns its back on an outrageous set of violations at the town landfill and disavows the environmental consequences," Moehrke said.

But John K. McNabb Jr., vice president of SAFE, countered that the town landfill is closed and operating only as a transfer facility. McNabb said CHL is open and still accepting refuse and still committing violations. He also pointed out that CHL is in the Water Resource District and poses a threat to the town's water drinking supply, while the town landfill is not in the district.

Red Lion Inn hires new construction team

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

The owner of the Red Lion Inn, Gerd Ordelheide, has hired a new architect. He made the move after the planning board March 11 once again found fault with the plans. According to general manager Joseph Dooley, Ordelheide has signed up a whole new team to help restore and expand the historic building in the village. He said Wednesday architect Peter Niemintz of Boston has taken over the plans and will guide the project through the design phase. Tish Gardner of Shawmut Construction, also of Boston, has become the construction manager. Dooley also said the project is definitely going forward. The owner is "very excited" about the new team and determined "more than ever" to get the project off the ground.

The Red Lion has been an inn since the 1700's, according to David Wadsworth of the Cohasset Historical Society. He deemed the building, which dates from 1704, one of the most significant historic places in the town. Though once considered the jewel of the village, the inn at 71 South Main St. has lost much of its luster to neglect. Ordelheide's hopes to restore it are viewed as potential inspiration for the rest of the downtown, according to planning board members Robert Sturdy and Chairman Al Moore.

Yet Moore and Sturdy were at odds for much of the public hearing, as they differed on the importance of the gap between their expectations and the drawings supplied by the architect. Sturdy, who admitted he was hungry and wanted to go home at the start of the meeting, eventually dug into the plans, pointing out the flaws with gusto.

"You can't come in here with unfinished plans," he said. "You have given us shreds of information that are incomplete. Don't waste our time. That is not a proper drawing. That is a working sketch."

But Moore reminded his colleague the main problems were due to formal details, such as printing the name, date, and revision numbers on the drawings. He also said he saw "no insurmountable problems" with the plan as drawn but agreed a parking plan with lighting would have to be provided. Using an analogy about a sack of potatoes, Moore tried to explain the dilemma for the board.

"We seem to be a way apart, but we are not far apart. There are times when people try to fit 20 pounds of potatoes in a 15 pound sack. That is not the case here. None of the issues has to do with the feasibility or practicality of the plan." He said he would be concerned if neighbors were against the project. But those who came to the public hearing supported Ordelheide. For instance, Marie Price of 85 South Main St. said she liked the drawings and was happy about the restoration. Finally, Moore said the only problem for the board was being prudent. If they approved the plan based on a verbal understanding with Ordelheide, they would have a problem if the property changed hands.

Ultimately, the planning board held out for a complete set of drawings. They continued the public hearing on the renovation until March 25. Their move disappointed Ordelheide who hoped he would be through with the town bureaucracy last week. He was plainly upset over questions raised by Sturdy who repeatedly complained "not enough effort" had gone into the drawings.

At one point, after a testy scolding from Sturdy, he seemed to be fed up.

"I'm getting it up to here," he said, touching his brow. "I want to get going."

Dooley said later Ordelheide was "totally embarrassed" by the architect's failure to complete the checklist supplied by the town's civil engineer.

"We were expecting to pull permits after the meeting March 11," Dooley said. "The architect was supposed to have the plans complete. But nothing was done."

Seventh Annual Appalachia Yard Sale—April 4

As the Cohasset Appalachia Service Project gears up for its eleventh trip to help upgrade the homes of poor families in Appalachia, they eagerly approach their next fund-raiser: the Seventh Annual ASP Yard Sale. With 84 teenagers, 30 adult and 12 potential college students, the group has reached an all-time high of 126 volunteers who will be traveling to West Virginia from June 27 through July 5.

The yard sale will take place on Voting Day from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m., Saturday, April 4 at the Second Congregational Church, right next door to the polling location (Town Hall). Items—no clothing, please—may be donated by bringing them to the church from Monday, March 30 through Friday, April 3, just prior to the sale. Pick up of heavier items can be arranged by calling us at 383-0345, faxing 383-7005 or E-mailing scc@dreamcom.net. And don't forget to come by and purchase those special treasures you simply must have—and at such a good price!

ASP volunteers are also around to take stock of your orders. Buying a share of stock in Cohasset ASP, at the cost of $20, is a special way to support a specific volunteer as well as the project itself. For each share purchased, further benefits also come your way. Contact the church to buy a share or request a list of the 126 volunteers. Also, watch for us behind the scenes at Cohasset Rotary Club's annual Road Race by the Sea.

Flanagan excels as CHS' easy rider

CHS varsity soccer player Josh Flanagan is also a veteran of another sport. He's currently ranked as the #2 mountain biker in New England in the under-18 division.

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

With about 47 teams competing at Cohasset Middle/High School, it's easy to overlook individual sports which may not be considered mainstream.

However, especially, in a year in which only one Cohasset team (field hockey) has managed a tournament appearance, it is sometimes the athletes who don't compete in the popular team sports that offer the most interesting stories.

It was with this in mind that swimmer Greg Bilton was profiled in this space two weeks ago and that we take a look at mountain biker Josh Flanagan this week.

Flanagan, a senior at CHS, is a competitive mountain biker who races throughout New England. Unfamiliar with the sport, I asked about the format of the races and learned that they range from 18 to 26 miles in length. I was then astounded when Josh told me that these races can be finished in as little as an hour and a half.

After an intense hour of arithmetic and finally yielding to a graphing calculator, I figured that riding at that rate means speeds hovering around 15 miles per hour, or one mile every four minutes. Impressive if one were to be pedaling downhill on an asphalt road, but frightening, considering these races occur on rocky terrain, often teeming with very hard trees.

Josh has been riding competitively for four years. Having trained in Wompatuck State Park for a few years, he has now taken to training on paved roads in the South Shore area, citing increased power as a benefit of this type of training. And it's paid off, as Josh is now ranked second out of 350 riders in New England's 18-and-under age group.

Racing in the expert class in this age bracket for Somerville's Independent Fabrication Team, he will move up to the 19 to 34 bracket next year, a promotion which he's not anticipating with relish.

Questioned about the sport's popularity, he noted that it appeals to a wide range of people and was just added to the summer Olympics last year. Riders race in competitions all over the country. In Connecticut and Massachusetts, Josh said, the competitions tend to take place in state parks, but contests in Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont are often held at ski resorts like Sunday River and Killington.

Asked about his favorite thing about the sport, Josh replied, "It's not the training that's fun. I like the racing atmosphere, the racing itself. I started out just for fun, but getting to compete is a real rush."

In August, Josh plans to bike in the National Off-Road Bicycle Association National Championships

Lest you think Flanagan has tunneled all his talents into careening down a mountain on metal and rubber, scraping bark off trees, it is important to note his other accomplishments. While ranking in the top three in his class and serving as vice-president of the National Honor Society, he also patrolled midfield for the varsity soccer team and is a senior class representative.

With such a busy life, it's surprising that Josh would have any time left to train but he pointed out that, since mountain biking taxes the body both aerobically and anaerobically, taking a mere two weeks off from training can damage a whole year's worth of training.

"If you want to ride just for fun, that's great. A lot of people do it for recreation and exercise. But, if you want to get serious about it, it takes commitment, it takes year-round training."

A sport that most people wouldn't dare to try has attracted one of Cohasset's best and brightest athletes and has allowed him to excel. Josh Flanagan has approached mountain biking with the same thoroughness and commitment with which he seems to approach anything else. Only difference is, he wears a helmet.

Star gymnast has a long career ahead of her

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

She has never measured her success by the number of trophies and medals awarded her. For Kristin Sheerin, personal best performances and steady improvement are reward enough.

The pint-sized gymnast may only be 4-foot-7 and tip the scale at 73 pounds, but she was the Paul Bunyan of the Cohasset High gymnastics team. Sheerin came up with huge performances when they were needed the most.

Only an eighth-grader, Sheerin marveled the judges with her tumbling passes and poise on the floor exercise during the Pilgrim Conference's individual championships, finishing with a score of 8.55. Add that to her 7.35 on the bars, 8.0 on beam and 8.05 vault and Sheerin came away with an all-around mark of 31.95. That was good enough to finish in a surprising first-place tie with defending champion, senior Kim Richardson of Hanover.

Heading into the meet, Sheerin figured, if all went well, she had a good shot at third place. But when Duxbury's fine gymnast Kate Collins was forced out because of a broken arm, Sheerin's stock rose even higher. First place, however, never entered her mind.

"I was really surprised," she said. "The Duxbury girl (Collins) broke her arm a couple of nights before. I figured she'd be first, Kim Richardson would be second and I could get third."

Head coach Ruthann Ardizzoni said she was as surprised as anyone at Sheerin's first-place showing, but believes she has only scratched the surface of her full potential.

"It was a total shock to everyone," Ardizzoni said. "Kristin did a beautiful floor routine and that's what made the difference. Give her another couple of years and she's going to be outstanding.

"When Kristin gets a little older she'll get that gracefulness that comes with maturity and age."

Even though Sheerin is just 13, her toughness as a competitor has never been questioned. While many gymnasts fall apart with a poor outing on a certain event, Sheerin feeds off it. She allows herself to steam over mistakes between events, but puts it out of her mind once she is back on the mats or on the beam.

"I may not be happy about it (bad performance)," Sheerin explained, "but I don't let it affect my performance in the next event. It can actually make me do better because I don't want to have a bad meet because of a mistake in one event.

"I love the competition. I like to get in there and see how I do against the others. I'm very competitive and more aggressive during meets."

Sheerin's best regular-season showing came in a tri meet against Scituate and Carver. She was solid on all her routines, but it was her best event, the floor exercise, where she was unmatched.

With the music of Yanni playing in the background, Sheerin incorporated a straddle jump and several tumbling passes into her routine to finish with an eye-popping score of 8.8.

Sheerin is also a member of the Ellis School of Gymnastics in Braintree, where she competes from November thru May. If her first-place finish in the Pilgrim Conference championships was the highlight of her high school season, Sheerin's March 14 state qualifier meet in Woburn was, so far, her finest hour on the club squad.

Sheerin took first on the floor, and thirds on the bars, beam and vault. More importantly, however, was her final score. She needed an all-around mark of 32.0 to qualify for the state finals. Sheerin came through with a 32.35 and third place, earning her a visit to the finals on April 4-5 at Northboro's Algonquin Regional High School.

Eighth grader, Kristin Sheerin, on the far right, tied for first place at the Pilgrim Conference championship with Hanover's Kim Richardson.

Star gymnast has a long career ahead of her

"At the beginning of the season I didn't think I'd make it to the sectionals or states," Sheerin admitted. "I accomplished my goal to qualify for the states. I was really happy with my score. Placing was an added bonus."

Ardizzoni, though, said Sheerin only got stronger as the season continued as her scores began to rise.

"Kristin set goals for herself at the beginning of the season," Ardizzoni said. "She has a lot of drive and determination to reach them. She was scoring 7.8 and 7.9 on floor and ended up with an 8.8."

Sheerin got her start in gymnastics as a 7 year old. She became a member of Scituate's Seaside Gymnastics, where her mother, Patricia, coached. A former assistant coach at both Rockland and Scituate High School, Patricia has seen Kristin develop in all her events.

"She's made huge strides every year," Patricia said. "This gym (Ellis) doesn't demand you're in there 18 hours a week."

Sheerin moved to Cohasset from Scituate three years ago. She said she enjoys competing for the high school and club, but there is a big difference in the two.

"It's (high school) a lot of fun," Sheerin said. "It's a change from the club because you're with all your friends and compete as a team. At the club, we're all friends, but at the meets we don't compete for a team score."

Patricia believes Kristin's participation on the Lady Skippers' squad has provided added benefits beyond gymnastics. "The high school end of it gives her a little more of an identity in the community she otherwise wouldn't have gotten," Patricia said. "It has been a great experience."

As serious and determined Sheerin is about her training and competition, gymnastics are only part of her life. She continues to work hard at the sport because she likes it. To do otherwise would be foolish.

"You just have to try your hardest and have fun with it," Sheerin said. "Realize there are other things to do. Sports aren't the only thing.

"It's not healthy to be that much into it, emotionally or physically."

As for defending her all-around title next winter, Sheerin hasn't given it all that much thought. She does want to perform routines which have a greater degree of difficulty and will be concentrating on that this summer and fall.

Sheerin does know she won't let her performance in the conference meet determine how successful a season she has.

"I really want to improve and do more difficult skills," Sheerin said. "I'll go into next season like any other season. Having won the all-around title won't be an added pressure, not at all."

The real pressure will be on the gymnasts trying to defeat Sheerin. With those competitive juices going, it will be a tough task for any Pilgrim Conference opponent.

Kristin Sheerin and Kate Grimm were bestowed with the title of "Beam Queens" at the recent break-up dinner for the CHS gymnastics team.

Spring ham shoot is April 5

The Scituate Rod and Gun Club announces its annual Spring Ham Shoot, to be held from noon to 4:30 p.m., Sunday, April 5. In the event of inclement weather, the shoot will be held Sunday, April 19.

The ham shoot features games of skill and chance focusing on shooting sports. Canned hams are awarded as prizes.

Featured games include:

- skeet — where the object is to hit a fast-moving clay target.
- swinging target — where the most number of shotgun pellets inside a swinging circle wins.
- hanging targets — where the pellet closest to the center wins.
- traditional, muzzleloading rifles — hit an exploding bullseye to win.
- Lucky 22s — highest score with five shots wins (this game is a favorite with young children).
- archery for the children — everyone wins at least a candy bar.

This is an opportunity for area residents to enjoy a day of clean, family fun at the gun club and, maybe, take home the Easter ham.

The Scituate Rod and Gun Club is located on the West side of Route 3A in North Scituate between Henry Turner Bailey Road and Booth Hill Road, opposite mile marker 38. Call (781) 545-1510.

The following programs will be offered:

Monday: Arts & Crafts Girls, ages four and five; Sports and Games, grades K through first.

Tuesday: Arts & Crafts Boys, ages four and five; Sports and Games, ages seven through 10.

Children at Osgood and Deer Hill will be advised and sent home should the program not meet. We will make every reasonable effort to make up days lost to poor weather.

Children may bring snacks/drinks to programs and all children smut be picked up either prior to or promptly at the concluding program time of 5 p.m. Late pick-up is subject to additional fee charges, based upon time tardy.

The Joseph Osgood children may stay after school to participate once parental permission is given on the registration form.

The 10K Cohasset walk for MS

Residents of Cohasset and surrounding towns are invited to join The Cohasset MS Walk on Saturday, April 18. The event, which will start and end at the Cohasset Town Hall, has a scenic 10K route through Cohasset.

Check-in will begin at 8:30 a.m., the walk will start at 10 a.m. and by 1 p.m. the majority of the walkers will have returned to the Town Hall for a Welcome Back Lunch.

The MS Society is extending an invitation to people from across the area to join with family members, friends, civic and fraternal clubs, church groups and corporate employee organizations to form their own TeamMS and make a mile of difference by participating in the MS Walk.

During the weekends of March 29, April 18 and 19, the Massachusetts Chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society will hold 17 walks across Massachusetts to support cutting-edge new research and to fund vital support services for thousands of local families living with this difficult, unpredictable disease.

Multiple sclerosis is a chronic, often disabling disease of the central nervous system that wears away the control you have over your own body. MS is often diagnosed in young adults, ages 20-40, and affects a third of a million Americans. The symptoms range from numbness to paralysis, blindness and speech disorders.

No one can predict the course it will take in any individual.

Local sponsors include: WJDA, Kimball's By The Sea, Stop & Shop, Dunkin Donuts, General Suburban Aid/REACT. To find out how you can participate in the MS Walk as either an individual walker, on a team or by serving as a volunteer, call 1 (508) 291-2169.

Coast Guard offers boating course

The United States Coast Guard Auxiliary, Flotilla 1208, and the Cohassset Recreation Department will sponsor a spring, six-session Safe Boating Course, offering certification by both the Coast Guard and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

The new course, "Boating Safely," will be offered to both youth and adults. However, certification in this course is mandatory for 16 year olds and under who wish to operate a craft powered by 25 horsepower or more. The course will cover safety equipment, aids of navigation and rules of the road, boat handling and person watercraft.

USCGA, Flotilla 1208 instructors will teach the six-session course, scheduled from 7:30-9:30 p.m., May 5 through Mary 21 at the Cohasset High School.

A rookie joins the Cohasset Dramatic Club

By Melissa Boynton
CORRESPONDENT

It was a another drizzling gray Saturday in January. I go out to get the mail and find, at the bottom of the pile, a flyer advertising for auditions to an upcoming production of Cohasset Dramatic Club. Last year I had bought a family membership just because I liked the people I met when reviewing their 1997 "Wizard of Oz" production. My husband and I considered it a donation to a worthy cause and didn't give participation much thought outside of maybe helping with set construction or assisting with publicity.

I never had enough time or confidence in high school or college to perform in any plays, but always thought the "drama" people were the most interesting. In fact, at Catholic University in Washington, D.C. one of the few people I made an effort to know was a theater major, Jessica McDonald. She was this quirky, flamboyant redhead from Connecticut. I often wondered what happened to her. The "Wizard of Oz" production last year gave me the answer. Up on stage was Jessica stealing the show as the cowardly lion. We chatted afterwards and she encouraged us to join. When I saw her name as director on the audition notice, I felt a sense of safety since I at least knew someone.

The play's title was also compelling; "You Can't Take it With You." I had been feeling rushed and hectic at work and home. It occurred to me that I needed some sort of extra-curricular outside of earning the almighty dollar. This seemed like a new and different way to spend winter evenings and weekends.

The auditions were not quite as scary as you see in the movies. No one was dismissed with an annoyed gesture or carted off with a hook. We were told to go up on stage with a few other people and read parts of the script. There were a couple of roles that sounded entry-level, so I went for those, still assuming I would end up as the prop gal! If by some fluke I did get cast, I didn't want something too meaty!

After a few readings a theme started to unfold – Melissa can you read Alice with Tony, then Penny, and then Grandpa? Having not read the play beforehand, I had no idea how big a part Alice was. I was so thrilled to be "picked" I didn't even consider what I was picked for. It brought me back to high school when the coach put me in the game. It didn't matter that the win was a foregone conclusion – I was dribbling! Yahoo! That sense of playfulness and belonging was back. I was part of a team!

The first rehearsal brought the first scary piece of news. I was supposed to kiss somebody. Somebody I had never met. Somebody other than my husband. Sleep came slowly that night and I had dreams about going to school without my uniform on.

Every Tuesday and Thursday I left work right at quitting time mumbling some excuse – it's a rare thing for me to be the first to leave. After work I stopped at Dagwood's or the Silver Spoon Café and grabbed a quick supper before rehearsals. It was never tiring. Though it IS work it is a different, more creative sort of work than my day job of computer training. We played, lobbed out bloopers, gave gentle suggestions, and poked fun at each other when we started taking the whole thing too seriously.

The second week of rehearsals came and I received scary news number two. It occurs to me that not only do I have to know the lines I have to act like somebody else entirely. I have to BE Alice, a 21year old girl in love for the first time in 1937. The concept of acting suddenly seemed a lot harder than dribbling a basketball!

When the shortage of male actors started to panic the director, I drafted my husband to play a small, walk-on part. He reluctantly agreed and began to come to rehearsals with me.

Cohasset 'Celebrates Diversity' in special program

Channel 4's news co-anchor Liz Walker was the guest speaker at a special event "Celebrate Diversity" sponsored by the Diversity Committee March 8 at Town Hall.

Walker spoke about the media's responsibility to report positive things that are being done in many communities to help understand the appreciate differences among people. She said how much she valued the opportunity to be a part of this type of forum and in turn invited everyone present to visit her church in Jamaica Plain and the inner city community in general.

"It's not so scary," she said.

Cohasset METCO parent Caroline Remy co-chaired the event with Diversity Committee chairwomen Susan Etkind and Nancy Froio.

The Diversity Committee was formed in 1994 to educated the community by acknowledging and respecting diversity in Cohasset and the world and to become aware that instances of racism, anti-Semitism, classism and disrespect have occurred and the town needs to be a place where all feel comfortable to live or visit.

Etkind said there are positive and negatives to the story.

"I am going to share a few vignettes of disrespect so that you can bear witness that we have work to do," she said.

"A young girl came out of a gymnastic meet several years ago to find a swastika drawn in snow on her car; a six-year-old was told his black friend was retarded; and a kindergarten child was told she couldn't play with a group of girls because her face was too dark," she said.

"Good things are happening...the six-year-old when told that his friend was retarded responded as only a six-year-old can. 'He can't be retarded, he taught me all these tricks on the jungle gym and showed me how to get to the very top.'

"When some older high school students hung out a window of a house and said 'Hey Jew, there's the Jew.' The Jewish boy's friend said 'Wait here.' He went into his house to confront the taunters and even extracted an apology."

Besides the decorations lining the walls of Town Hall depicting many countries and traditions made by Deer Hill and Osgood pupils, many students personally contributed to the program through songs, essays and skits. Thanks go to David Ingber, Marissa Mella, Katie Roche, Ti-Shonte Walton, Caroline Carr, Yvonne Ortiz, Bryan Bilton, Meredith Bates, Krista Nicynski, Mareth Collins-Wooly, Marcina Boone, Khalil Madayun, Manasseh Remy, Raheem Shepard, Rosa Hareiter, Elizabeth Ingber, Chris Carr and Kevin Chang.

Margo Cheel explained the importance of participating in cultural exchange programs and Rosa Hareiter, an exchange student from Austria, recounted her first impressions and her observations about America.

Connie Afshar spoke about the role METCO plays in Cohasset.

"The METCO program is invaluable to our community, for it alone ensures that our children will have daily inter-personal contact with students of diverse racial backgrounds. It is from this daily interaction that understanding, mutual respect and friendships are build. This forging of ties between the races is what will keep our country internally healthy and strong," Afshar said.

The evening was a hopeful and positive process as clergy and citizens from Boston and Coahsset came together to celebrate diversity.

Liz Walker spoke about fostering greater cultural understanding at 'Celebrating Diversity' at town hall. The event, sponsored by the Diversity Committee, was a resounding success and packed the town hall auditorium to capacity.

Catch the spirit at St. Anthony's

The parish family of St. Anthony Church welcomes all to participate in an upcoming Lenten Mission over four nights from Monday, March 23, to Thursday, March 26, at 7:30 p.m. each evening. Give yourself this time to renew your faith in preparation for the celebration of Holy Week and Easter. Each person's involvement in this Mission can make a difference to them personally and it may make a difference to others as well. Inviting a relative, friend or neighbor to make the Mission with you could be all that's needed to get them involved.

The Holy Father has dedicated 1998 to be a time for reflection on the Holy Spirit. As a way of renewing our Christian faith, each evening will focus on the Holy Spirit and will include common prayer, preaching, quiet reflection and time for fellowship. The first evening will look at Holy Spirit: Soul of the Church. For the second evening, the reflection will be on the Presence of Grace. The third evening addresses the Holy Spirit as Giver of Goodness and Peace and the sacrament of Penance will be available. The theme for the last night will focus on the Holy Spirit as the Source of the Church's Mission and will conclude with the celebration of Mass. The service each evening will last about an hour.

We hope you can be there but even if you cannot attend, we ask that you participate in some way by saying a prayer for the Mission's success and all those participating.

A rookie joins the Cohasset Dramatic Club

As the weeks flew by and we entered the end of February we began to feel like part of a real family. The play's action revolves around the Sycamore family. A loving, bohemian and expressive family, they begin to question their lifestyles when faced with their daughter/sister's potential in-laws, the Kirbys. On the surface the Kirbys are to be envied – rich, powerful and socially well connected. Then you begin to see just how unhappy, inhibited and boxed-in they are. The Sycamores emerge as the true heroes.

The people we've met through this membership are everyday heroes. They live their lives with gusto. They are creative souls, great parents, and terrific friends. They have opinions and feelings that they happily share. One cast member, Jean DiGiacomandrea of Scituate, organized a benefit performance for the children of a dear friend who died recently of cancer, Amy Dimitri. Her commitment and compassion was inspiring.

Along with my husband and I there were other new actors in the play, Bob Brando and Dave Gordon. Though we were all new to the club the veterans let us into their circle. This is another membership that has its privileges – you learn what goes on behind the stage and you get to have a lot of fun!

"You Can't Take It With You" opens at Cohasset Town Hall this Friday March 20th at 8 p.m. There will be Friday and Saturday performances at 8 p.m., and Sunday matinees at 2 p.m. through the 29th. Tickets can be purchased at the box office before the show.

The cast gathers around for a picture on the set before Sunday's benefit performance. The CDC show continues this weekend at Cohasset Town Hall.

Little Harbor study must include shellfish analysis

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Town officials have received permission from the state to change some aspects of the septic priority district compromise reached with the Attorney General's office last month. The agreement struck a balance between the town's need to fulfill the conditions of the Second Final Agreement for Judgment and demands of fair treatment from residents in septic priority districts. Town officials must approve the agreement to finalize its implementation.

But the town did not receive all the changes it requested. The state rejected the town's request to exclude shellfish beds from water quality testing of Little Harbor.

Health board member Kevin Ulmer said the shellfish beds have been un-usable for as long as the past 50 years. Ulmer said the water standards for shell fish beds are much stricter than the standards for swimming, boating and recreation.

"The Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) wants clam beds to be part of the Little Harbor study," Ulmer said. "But that is a higher standard than other comparable areas and we should not be held to that standard."

Sewer Commissioner Ted Guild said the clam beds have been closed for as long as he can remember. He said whatever is affecting the clam beds probably pre-dates any alleged problems caused by septic systems.

But state officials disagreed.

"The Commonwealth is committed to the notion that if we are going to spend time on a water quality study of Little Harbor, it should be a study that makes sense," said Mary B. Griffin, an assistant attorney general in the Environmental Protection Division. "In our view, omitting the shell fish criteria of the water quality standards makes no sense from a scientific perspective."

> 'In our view, omitting the shell fish criteria of the water quality standards makes no sense from a scientific perspective.'
> – MARY B. GRIFFIN, AN ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL IN THE ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION DIVISION.

Ulmer also pointed out that shell fish beds were not part of the Agreement for Judgment, and should not be tacked on after the fact. Griffin said the town would have to accept the higher standards because of stricter environmental regulations.

"The consent judgment did not address shell fishing because this type of water quality study was not contemplated at the time the town committed to sewer connections or a mandatory Title V inspection program in priority areas," Griffin said.

Griffin cautioned the town to approve the agreement with the Attorney General without making too many additional demands.

"This proposal was not meant to encourage a 'horse-trading' process," Griffin said. "Instead, we tried to take the views of town officials into account at the onset, and would much appreciate a response in kind."

The town has one year to perform a water quality study of Little Harbor, and six months from the completion of the study to develop a plan to deal with water pollution problems. Selectmen have submitted an article in the town meeting warrant asking for $50,000 to perform the study. As part of the study, the town must also inspect septic systems in the Little Harbor Watershed and determine what effects those on-site systems are having on water quality.

Ulmer said town officials were confused about the septic inspection requirement. It sounded like the state was forcing homeowners in the Little Harbor Watershed to submit to Title V inspections.

But that will not be the case, Griffin said. She said homeowners forced to submit to mandatory inspections for the Little Harbor study would not be bound by Title V laws. She said that included an exemption in this case from Title V's two-year repa' replacement requiremer f.. failed systems.

"We believe that if inspections of subsurface sewage disposal systems are set up as voluntary assessments, then the deadlines for mandatory upgrades would not be applicable for failed systems identified solely through this process," Griffin said.

Ulmer said he believes the study is not the ultimate answer to water quality problems in Little Harbor.

"What's really needed is to look in the watershed and see which areas can support septic and which cannot," Ulmer said. "My sense is we may find it easier to sewer Little Harbor than study all these solutions."

The agreement also calls for the town to connect 23 homes abutting Lily Pond, the town's water supply, to the sewer system once the Central Cohasset Treatment Plant expansion is completed. The plant's capacity will increase from 80,000 gallons per day to 400,000 gallons per day after the expansion is finished.

State officials had originally directed the town to sewer 36 homes, but no one in town knows where that figure came from. Guild said it was probably a mistake by the state.

Scituate antique dealers band together to promote town

By Helen Graves
STAFF WRITER

Business was booming for Scituate shops during the late '80s filming of "The Witches of Eastwick," when the quaint Quarterdeck shop was renamed The Yapping Fox to feature Cher's chubby buddhas on its shelves.

"The filming was a real surge," says the Quarterdeck's Joan Noble, who rented her shop-on-stilts to Warner Brothers for a day and a half. "Men with manila envelopes would take out $100 bills and say, 'I'll take that and that and that.' We could use another movie. It was great for the whole South Shore."

But rather than depend on outsider-induced uplift, eight Scituate antique dealers including the Quarterdeck are taking matters into their own hands by banding together to promote the town as a great place to spend the day.

"We have a lot to offer. There's the harbor, great restaurants for lunch and antiquing," says chief organizer Diane McLaughlin of Echo Lake Antiques, 165 Front St. "It's key to let others know we're here, a little off the beaten path, not right on 3A but not difficult to reach. People just have to know we're here."

> "A group can do more than just a few."
> -Diane McLaughlin

Part of the mission of the Antique Dealers of Scituate is to pool funds for joint advertising. "A group can do more than just a few," McLaughlin says. And there are plans for other things, such as participating in the American Cancer Society's Daffodil Days. The fledgling group has met a few times and expects to meet once a month to go over opportunities.

Rather than see one another as competition, the eight believe they complement one another's stores. They already refer customers to each other.

"A lot of people coming into my shop are from out of the area and they'll ask, is there anything else like this?" says Diane Ferwarda, who runs Calico Attic, 24 Country Way, Greenbush, with her husband Mark. "There are beautiful shops here. There's a good feel to working together. If I don't have something someone is looking for and someone else does, I don't have a problem sending them to someone else, and vice versa. It's not as though we're competing in one item."

Collaboration among the antiquers can be more elaborate. "I might have a table. Someone else might have chairs," says Barbara Landry of Needful Things, 161 Front St. "If one of us fails, all of us fail. More people will come to this area for eight shops than for one."

"I want people to think of Scituate as a place where they can go and their time is well-spent," says Kathy Fortuna, who co-owns Bird-in-Hand Antiques, 157 Front St. with Shirley Parkhurst.

COMMERCIAL GALLERIES PROVIDE VERY 'FINE' ARTS VENUE

By Marilyn Jackson
CORRESPONDENT

Art and artists abound on the South Shore, but unless you work with an interior decorator who has a long-established relationship with a private art gallery or you are an art aficionado who visits the local festivals throughout the year, original art for sale is difficult to find.

There are, however, local, commercial fine arts galleries which are trying to change that, introducing artists and their work at special events.

THE SILVER RIBBON

At The Silver Ribbon in Pembroke, owner Donna Avila of Scituate is mounting a new show by E. Mandeville Avery of Pembroke who, for the past five years, has been working with gourds as well as creating abstract monoprints in blues, pinks and greens.

Her show, called "Owl Woman, Telling Her Story," will run from March 20 to April 25. An opening reception will be held from noon to 4 p.m. on Saturday, March 21, at Pembroke Crossing on Route 53.

Each pear-shaped bottle gourd is different, subtly painted to represent one of the 19 species of owls indigenous to North America, such as the snowy owl or barn owl or short-eared owl. On another level of meaning, Avery depicts each gourd as a vessel of life in celebration of womanhood, with only a half face revealed, keeping secret the other half. Avery weaves a dreamlike tale to accompany each owl woman which may be wearing a feather fetish.

Avila opened The Silver Ribbon nearly 10 years ago, first at Brigantine Village on Route 139 in Pembroke. She has been at her present location about seven years. "I was a weaver in a co-op in Cohasset and realized there was a demand for handmade things. And there were not many sources," she says. "I decided to focus on high quality crafts and art work." Avila acquires most of the art work through jurying of slides and pictures, and she decides what will fit in her displays. Most of the art work is local, although she draws artists from New Hampshire and Maine as well. In addition to art, The Silver Ribbon carries pottery, glass, wood, basketry, weaving and jewelry.

E. Mandeville Avery of Pembroke is showing her "Owl Woman, Telling Her Story" at The Silver Ribbon March 20 to April 25 with an opening reception Saturday, March 21. Pictured are Snowy Owl Woman, Barn Owl Woman, Northern Pygmy Owl Woman, Shorteared Owl Woman and Northern Hawk Woman.

AISLING GALLERY

At the Aisling Gallery on Lincoln Street, Route 3A, Hingham, John and Maureen Connolly combine art, pottery, Kerry glass and jewelry with their framing business. "The Irish translation of aisling is vision or dream," says Maureen Connolly in her lilting accent. "We present a piece of Ireland and remind people of their ancestral home."

"Rainy Day, Dingle" is piece of Ireland Maureen and John Connolly offer at their Aisling Gallery, Hingham.

Connolly says the gallery carries four percent Irish art, but the other artwork is of Irish themes, including beautiful scenes of Ireland by noted artist Eugene Conlon, who hails from Braintree. Also in stock are handmade Irish linen christening gowns, some embroidered with the Celtic cross. The coat of arms with the family name can be added, Connolly says. The costs range from $150 to $295, including a bonnet. The shop has colorful hand-knit woolen sweaters.

The Hingham couple opened their gallery in December, 1989, when John retired from the MBTA as a project director, where he had introduced the idea of a plastic pass, and when Maureen, an administrative assistant at Cabot, Cabot and Forbes, lost her job when the real estate and development firm went out of business.

Aisling Gallery offers classes, such as the ongoing bodhran or drum class, taught by Bob Condon of Rockland, and Celtic calligraphy, taught by Norma McKenzie of Weymouth. Other classes in Irish literature, poetry and Gaelic will be offered in the fall. Last week the gallery hosted a poetry reading by three young Irish poets, including Aidan Rooney-Céspedes of Hingham, who was chosen the Hennessy Cognac new Irish poet last year. And next month, the gallery will take part in the fourth annual anamchairde, or Celtic spirituality conference, sponsored by the Benedictine Monks of Glastonbury Abbey and to be held at Notre Dame Academy on Route 228 in Hingham.

CHRISTOPHER GALLERY

"It's a difficult market for artists in New England," says Adele Kilroy of Hull, who manages Christopher Gallery in Cohasset, owned by Dominic Micarelli of Hingham.

Micarelli opened his gallery and framing business as the Artist's Son 12 years ago after working "temporarily" for a decade as the drummer in Fat City Blues. But in the past year or so, the gallery's reputation has expanded and now draws artists from around the country. Last fall the gallery hosted the regional show of the Oil Painters of America and plans to repeat the event in October.

Among the artists the gallery represents are noted marine artist Charles Vickery of Chicago, Robert Douglas Hunter and Timothy Thies of Connecticut, Kevin Macpherson of Taos, William F. Reese of Washington state and Lois Griffel, director of the Cape Cod School of Art in Provincetown.

Local artists include Clement Micarelli of Marshfield, Margaret McWethy and Laurie Borden of Hingham, Sergio Roffo of Scituate and John Kilroy of Hull. Although the gallery offers no classes, many of the artists do teach privately or through local arts associations.

Adele Kilroy says the next major event the gallery will sponsor will be a plein air ·cise in July, when the artists will scatter throughout Cohasset and capture outdoor scenes of the Gulph River or Cohasset Harbor in brilliant sunshine.

In August, there will be a show of nightlife.

LAMBERT GALLERY

Maggie Lambert of Hanover, an interior designer for the past 15 years, decided to open Lambert Gallery at 237 Broadway about a year-and-a-half ago, in an old Victorian house off Route 53.

Stephanie Roberts of Pembroke displays her work, including "Shifting Space," this month at Lambert Gallery.

"It has mushroomed since then," Lambert says. Most of the artists are from New England, but they worked in all media. "Mostly it is contemporary art, but there are a few traditional artists," she says.

Lambert holds gallery openings, featuring a solo artist or a group of artists every six weeks. At the last show opening March 8, the band INS (Improvisational Noise Sculpture), which includes three artists from the gallery, played during the reception for artists Stephanie Roberts of Pembroke and Ky Ober of Boston, who work in mixed media.

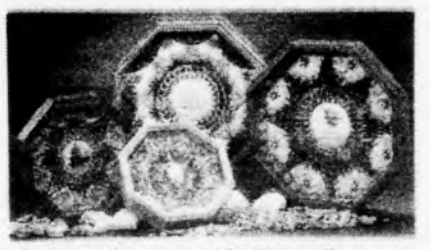
In May, Peggy Fox of Cambridge will be the featured artist. Her oil and acrylic landscapes are modeled in the rich tradition of Paul Gauguin and the show appropriately is titled "After Gauguin." In June, Lambert is presenting a group show of eight working with found objects, assemblages and sculptures. This show will extend outdoors, she says, and will include metalwork and woodwork.

C & C GALLERIES AND ARTICA

When a general manager for Kennedy Studios in Boston, David Connor decided to go on his own in 1986, starting C & C Galleries, Inc., on Route 53, Norwell. Rather than specialize in original art, Connor found his niche in framed and unframed prints, some local limited-edition prints and custom framing. The gallery, he says, is now the largest print gallery on the South Shore. It is also a family affair, both in management and in service.

The first C in the store's name, Connor explains, represents his surname; the second stands for Cushing, his wife's family with longtime ties to Duxbury. So it was only natural that, when the art gallery Artica in Duxbury came on the market in November, he bought it. "When we purchased Artica it was a family decision that daughter Marcie (Clough) would run it and Dad would oversee C & C," Connor says. Artica is an originals gallery of various media featuring local artists that also provides custom framing and offers some limited edition prints. Divided into a showroom and a gallery, the store holds a show with opening reception every two months and regularly displays art by locals such as Katherine Smit and Deborah Henning of Duxbury and limited edition prints by Pembroke's Michael Keane, notes manager Jane Sorensen. The current show is by Deborah Howard, of Somerville, which opened Friday night.

Marcie Clough of Artica Gallery stands with artist Deborah Howard, whose exhibit runs through April 11.



Not only run by family, the business is also committed to treating customers like family, providing consultation either in store or at home to help the homeowner find the right piece of art for their decor. Free delivery, too, is offered on a regular basis, Connor says.

GALLERY BY-THE-SEA

The newest South Shore fine arts gallery will open next month. Eileen and Richard Agostini of Marshfield have leased space in the old bank at 44 Main St. in downtown Plymouth, opposite the former firehouse, for their Gallery By-The-Sea.
